In an address to a packed house in the Central Baptist Church of Brooklyn, the Countess told of a meeting she held in Hamburg, in a theatre, when nearly all present were anarchists. When she mentioned the name of God at that meeting there were hisses and howls of disapproval. Several men rushed toward the platform, and one of them struck at her with a cane. Laying her hand gently on his shoulder she said, "You are my guest, and it is not seemly for you to behave thus in the house of a lady." He seemed ashamed of himself and withdrew with his followers, though in a few moments they returned and took seats in the audience. When she mentioned the name of Jesus they laughed, but, while she repeated earnestly and prayerfully the words, "The blood of Jesus Christ his son cleanseth us from all sin," there fell upon that wild audience the hush of a Sunday morning service.

She now spoke of that meeting as an illustration of the power of God through the Blood of Christ to win and subdue the worst of men. At the close of the service in the Central Baptist Church a man dressed in sailor's garb came from the audience, and taking her by the hand, said with deep emotion: "Countess, I was converted in that theatre in Hamburg where you spoke, and have been serving Christ over six years. I came across the river to-night that I might see you and tell you about it."

In Cooper Union, one Monday afternoon, the Countess spoke ten minutes in Danish, German and English. The Danes listened in quiet pleasure; the Germans laughed, wept and applauded; the English were inspired to greater faith and consecration. At the close of her last address, speaking German, she requested all who would accept her Saviour to raise their hands. A tall, intelligent German near the front seat was among the first to lift up his hand. He came forward to tell the Countess that, though he owned six saloons and was furnishing a seventh, he had now accepted the Saviour and would at once come out of the business. In this same meeting, a gentleman of wealth and culture came forward to tell her that he had for the first time realized a distinction between knowledge and possession. Hereafter he would not simply know about Christ; he would possess him in all his fullness. The testimony of this remarkable woman has been used of God in winning many souls to Christ and in leading half-hearted Christians to fully consecrate themselves to his service. Her work of eight days in Atlanta, Ga., was a continuation of the gracious blessing in New York. She went to Atlanta to attend a Bible Conference in Dr. Broughton's Tabernacle. She spoke twice a day to immense audiences, and the hotel where she stopped became a centre of soul-winning work. The proprietor made a public confession of Christ and took pleasure in introducing his neighbors to the Countess. Several society ladies of Atlanta confessed Christ.

In the great audiences almost every day was a woman who had been born in poverty near the Schimmelman estates in Germany, and had known of the Countess in her early life. After she had heard the Countess speak of her happiness in Christ, this humble woman said, "Tell the Countess that while she was born in a castle, I was born in a cow-shed; but that Jesus who brought her from the castle lifted me from the cow-shed, so that now castle and cow-shed meet on a common level in Christ." When these words were told to the Countess she was delighted.

Many who have witnessed the blessings that have followed the Countess's Gospel work are anxious that she should remain in America, at least during the present year. In order to have her remain here, they will endeavor to raise by contribution at least five thousand dollars for her mission work in the Baltic Sea and elsewhere during her absence in this country.

Our Red Letter Testament

A Septuagenarian Reader's Delight

VALLEY, WIS.

Dear Sir:—I received through your kindness the unique Red Letter New Testament. To say that I am delighted with it would but feebly express my appreciation of its many excellencies. The type is so clear that though I am nearly 77 years old, I can read it quite well in a clear light without the aid of glasses. But what delights me most is I can see at a glance, at any page, where our Lord speaks, by his blessed words being printed in red. I will say to you as I said to a friend the other day, I would not take $5.00 for the copy you kindly sent me if I couldn't get another. Sincerely yours,

E. R. HARRIS.

YOUNG HEARTS FOR CHRIST

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S VOLUNTEER MISSIONARY BAND AND PRAYER UNION—FRUITS OF FAITH

Mr. A. P. QUIRMBACH, ORGANIZER — Mr. A. B. STRICKLAND, FIRST LEADER — Miss MARY A. HETT, SECRETARY — Mr. A. J. VALE, THE PRESENT LEADER

OFFICERS OF THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S BAND AND PRAYER UNION

IT is a beautiful thing to see young men and maidens banding themselves together for the service of Christ. Particularly appropriate it seems for youth to love the yoke of the Master, whose own service, humanly speaking, to the Father and humanity was the service of youth. We note with pleasure the growing disposition of our young people to form themselves into organizations for Christian work. As an illustration of this tendency, and by way of inspiration to others seeking a way to labor for God and man, we give an account of the Young People's Volunteer Band and Prayer Union of Ontario, Canada. Modest as was its beginning, it may grow, according to its faith, like the mustard seed of Scriptural parable, into large and goodly proportions.

Some years ago several young people of the "Twin City"—Belin and Waterloo—Ontario, Canada, whose hearts were grieved because of "them that sit in darkness" in heathen lands, and who felt that God had called them to engage in missionary work, gathered together to study God's Word and the mission fields of the world, and to pray for missions and for one another. Their way into active service seemed hopelessly blocked; they had not even the means to enter a training school for missionary work.

At first there were only eight members, now there are twenty-five, residing in eight different places and belonging to six different denominations. The organizer of the band, Mr. A. P. Quirmbach, has received the reward of his faith and is laboring under the China Inland Mission in China. Miss Scheuerman, one of the eight, is associated with Miss Wilder in India. Mr. Westgate, another member, is a Church Missionary Society worker in South America. In addition to these three in the foreign field, ten of the band are in schools of training for similar labors. God has thus answered the prayers of the little circle in a marvelous way. The band has likewise been active in stirring up an interest among the churches at home, and in leading many souls to Christ. Several missionary conferences, of a week's duration each, have been held, besides a large number of missionary meetings in the different young people's societies. Systematic Christian work has been done by the band members in the hospital, house of refuge, orphanage, jail, and the mission Sunday School.

The object of the "Volunteer Band" is to reach those young people who are not already in missionary training schools, and to induce them to form missionary bands and prayer unions. It also seeks to stimulate and direct efforts in the evangelization of the world, by study of the Scriptures and of missions. Systematic Christian work is urged upon its members, who each month receive a circulating letter from some missionary in the field. Anyone wishing to unite with the band, and feeling that they can sign the declaration required, "I purpose, if God permit, to become a foreign missionary," can receive further information by application to the secretary, Miss M. A. Hett, Berlin, Ontario, Can. All Christians will bid these young workers Godspeed.

Quickening Entreated

OPEN mine eyes that I may see
Thy wondrous gifts to all.
Thy Holy Spirit give it me,
And save me from the fall.

Unlock my long deaf ear to hear
The call from God above;
The call from God above;
And God—a God of love.

Fountain for guilt, display thy power,
And save my soul from sin;
Send from above a heavenly shower
And flood my soul within.

Enter my heart, set up thy throne,
Reveal the things I need;
Thy love implant, break what is stone,
Plant there thy righteous seed.

Letart Falls, O. J. S. GRIFFITH.

Northfield Students as Workers

At the closing exercises of the Moody Training Schools at East Northfield lately, some interesting facts concerning student experience were brought to light. During the Christmas holidays, at the invitation of the pastors and under the direction of the Vermont Domestic Missionary Society, several of the Training School students went into Vermont to do parish visiting and hold evangelistic services. One of them reported: "We had twelve meetings with a constantly increasing interest and attendance. In the afternoons, we had a Bible class, and ten or eleven came out for the Lord." Another wrote, "Forty-one calls were made, including nearly every family of the scattered portion of the village. Eleven public services were held and six souls came into the light." Such experiences are not only an education for the students, but an encouragement to look for yet greater things in the future.

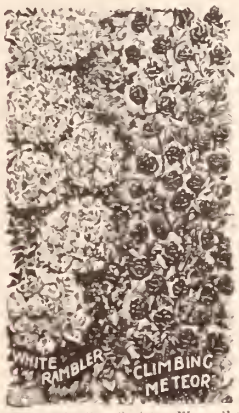
Six Lovely Everblooming Roses Free!



To introduce our popular illustrated literary and family paper, Good Literature, into thousands of homes where it is not already taken, we make the following extraordinary offer: Upon receipt of only Thirty Cents we will send Good Literature for the remaining Nine Months of this year (April to December inclusive), and to each subscriber we will also send, Free and post-paid, Six Lovely Everblooming Roses, as follows:

Climbing Meteor.—The most magnificent dark crimson climbing rose in cultivation. Grows ten to fifteen feet in a season, producing in constant succession a great profusion of magnificently-formed buds and flowers. Charming for pillars and porches.

White Rambler.—The finest white climbing rose yet introduced. The flowers are pure white, sweetly scented, and produced in splendid, large clusters, remaining on the bush from three to five weeks. Perfectly hardy and attains a growth of eight to ten feet in a season.

Enchantress.—A charming tea rose. Blooms with great freedom, bearing large globular, double flowers in clusters. Color, creamy white, with buff center.

Burbank.—A beautiful, deep rich pink hardy ever-blooming rose. Blooms profusely from spring until frost. Flowers are double, and three inches across.

Roger Lambelin.—A lovely variegated rose. Flowers deep crimson edged with white, and fringed like a double petunia. A striking novelty.

Mlle. Helena Cambier.—A new and beautiful hybrid tea rose. Color, a rich salmon, varying to apricot yellow. A prolific bloomer; flowers large and double.

Bear in mind that we offer, not one, but the entire list of six lovely ever-blooming tea and hardy roses described above absolutely free, by mail post-paid, if you will send us thirty cents for GOOD LITERATURE for the remaining nine months of this year (April to December inclusive). You will get the full worth of your money in your subscription to the paper; the roses are an absolute gift. Remember that these are not cheap, common roses, such as you see advertised at low prices. They are the choicest and most famous varieties, and such as are sold at high prices by all the leading florists. We shall send you strong, healthy, well-rooted plants, well packed, by mail, guaranteed to reach you in perfect condition, and to give absolute satisfaction. GOOD LITERATURE is a large and handsome illustrated literary and family paper, each issue comprising from 20 to 24 large 4-column pages, including a beautiful cover. You will be delighted with it, and the six lovely roses are worth many times the price of subscription. Perfect satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. This is a special offer by a well-known and reliable publishing house, established nearly twenty-five years; we refer to the Mercantile Agencies and to all leading newspapers as to our responsibility. GAVE UP THE WORLD'S FAME FOR CHRIST

Miss Ruth Cordis Long casts aside the Attractions of an Operatic Career and Consecrates her Voice to the Master

Build me a bridge of Song, so that souls may enter in:
Let my voice to Thee belong, if perchance I souls may win.

A VOICE for God! What the Nilssons, the Pattis, the Nordicas, the Parepa-Rosas and the Albanis have been to the operatic stage, many gifted women are to-day, to the stage of Christian work. They are the Queens of Sacred Song. There are, in our own land, thousands of pure and beautiful voices, that are never raised in the songs that celebrate the follies and vanities of the world, and whose sweetest strains are heard in the songs of the soul. These are the gifted singers of a great choir, whose humbler members are scattered throughout the Christian world. What Phillips, Bliss, Sankey, Jacobs, and a host of other consecrated vocalists have accomplished in popularizing Christian song, these glorious-voiced women are also doing, inasmuch as the voluntary dedication of their precious talent to the Master's service is proving of inestimable value in the winning over of multitudes from sin to righteousness. Never has the power of Christian song received more striking demonstration than in the services where these pure voices have interpreted the story of redeeming love in a way that has moved the souls of vast audiences.

There came lately to the knowledge of the writer the story of a noble woman — young, beautiful and gifted with a voice of magnificent quality—who has consecrated that gift to God. She had definitely chosen to sing for souls rather than for the world's plaudits and its rewards: to lift her voice in the church, the mission and the revival tent, rather than to sing in the glare of the footlights, amid the pleasure-seeking multitude. This may seem a strange choice to many, but surely it may be said of her who makes it, as Christ said of Mary: "She hath chosen the better part." Ruth Cordis Long, niece of Secretary of the Navy Hon. John D. Long, has made such a choice, and will use the beautiful voice God has given her in evangelical work and not in the opera, to which Anna Louise Cary believed the young girl destined when she first brought her before the public. Miss Long was only seventeen then; she has been singing since she was fourteen, and Miss Cary was not alone in believing that a brilliant future on the operatic stage awaited her. But Miss Long shrank from the thought of making such use of her gifts. She has been singing in Boston churches for several years. Recently, Rev. Dr. James Boyd Brady began a series of revival meetings at the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, Worcester, Mass., and asked Miss Long to assist in the musical part of the services. She consented, and the songs of Zion rendered by her fresh, rich, contralto voice have had a marked effect upon the congregations. Miss Long was born in Boston, but has spent most of her life with her widowed mother at Portland, Me. Her father, Zado Long, brother of the Secretary of the Navy, died when she was a mere child.

MISS RUTH CORDIS LONG, SECRETARY LONG'S NIECE, WHO HAS BECOME A GOSPEL SINGER

It would be well if others, endowed with musical gifts, should make such a choice as Miss Long's. Music is a power for good or ill; many a soul has been saved by the singing of a Gospel song; and, alas, many a soul has been betrayed by listening to a song that was not holy. The gift of song, like the carol of the lark, should always lift our thoughts heavenward.

Writing of Miss Long's singing, which has afforded delight to audiences wherever she takes part in the service, Rev. James Boyd Brady says: "Her soul shines in her song and her song shines in her face. . . . The secret of her success is the singing of ordinary hymns in such intelligent, interpretative way as brings out the author's fervid meaning and conveys his ardor to the throng. . . . The advent of Miss Long," he adds, "may be looked upon as a musical renaissance in woman's religious world."

Mr. Brady tells of an incident which may have been a turning-point in Miss Long's career: At Santiago, on board one of our battleships, after she had sung, a sailor came up and with repentant tears said her singing had inspired him to a new life. This event revealed to her possibilities in the use of her wonderful talent for the good of others. Nothing delights her more than feeling that she is doing good to those in need. At a recent revival meeting she sang "Where is my Wandering Boy?" and, as if in response, one of the young auditors left his comrades in the audience and came forward for prayer. The singer's face was radiant with a strange rapture of tearful triumph. At other gatherings, where she has sung the "Songs of Salvation," her voice has been made instrumental in moving many hearts. She feels that she has been truly called to the work of a Gospel messenger, and that her wonderful gift of song has been bestowed for the noblest of purposes—the winning of precious souls.

These Questions Will be Answered May 23

1. What is the peace and what the war footing of Germany, Russia, France, Austria, Great Britain and Italy, and what the respective number of big guns which each country owns?
2. What are the essentials to success in business life?
3. What is the most valuable diamond in the world?
4. What actual loss did Esau sustain by the trick which his brother Jacob played on him in securing the birthright blessing from Isaac?
5. Given an income of fifteen hundred dollars a year, what disposition should be made of the same by a family of four persons, father, mother, son and daughter, the children being under ten years of age?
6. What is the largest temple in the world used for the worship of the Christian's God?
7. What in brief may be said to be the history of writing?
8. What is known of the book of Iddo, the seer, mentioned in II. Chronicles 9:29; 12:15; 13:22?
9. In THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of March 28, a list of eleven metals was published, each of which is more valuable than gold. What, in the briefest terms possible, is the principal use of each of these metals?
10. When was printing for the blind first introduced?

Questions of the Week

1. What is probably the greatest distance at which lightning may be seen from a cloud just above the horizon?

There is no rule. The height of the cloud is a factor in the case, and always indeterminate. The convexity of the earth varies with the latitude, growing sharper from the equator toward the poles, except for meridian lines. The answer lies in verified observations. The writer has seen sparks of lightning fall from a cloud just above the horizon, which were proved to be not less than eighty, and probably not more than a hundred miles distant. From a high elevation longer instances might be noted. J. M. DEFREIS.

2. Of how many stars is the Southern Cross composed? What is its form and how far north is it visible?

The Southern Cross is composed of five principal stars, one of the first, two of about the second, one of the third, and one of the fourth magnitude. It has the form of a Roman cross, with the shorter arm running across the longer at a slightly oblique angle. It is situated about sixty degrees south declination and is therefore visible at about thirty degrees north latitude. Todd says, "Good views of it may be expected at the Tropic of Cancer, and they improve with the journey farther south." JOHN D. MEESE.

3. How far may law properly interfere with a man's injury to himself?

Criminal law can properly regulate a man's actions only so far as they injure the person, property or reputation of another. A man cannot steal from himself, forge his own name or libel himself. Nor can human law punish a man for taking his own life whether by refusing food, medical attendance, or by violence, for, if he dies, he is beyond its reach. He may be punished for attempting suicide, because of the bad effect on others of his action. If a man's injury to himself also directly injures another, e.g., where he burns his own house in the night and another sleeping therein is killed, he may be punished. Though law may not properly punish for self-injury, it may restrain if the act of self-injury is reasonably likely to render the man or his family a burden to society and cast their support upon the State. H. C. UNDERHILL.

4. What is supposed to be the origin of the bridal veil?

The earliest reference to this custom is found in Gen. 24:65. Tertullian, commenting on this passage, notes that in his time (200 A. D.) heathen brides were conducted to their husbands, covered with a veil. The veil was regarded as a symbol of submission to the husband (I. Cor. 11:4-15).

G. E. KRAUTH.

5. What is the meaning and origin of the proverb, "A miss is as good as a mile"?

It is hinted that the adage probably once read, "An inch of a miss is as good as a mile." In this shape it would more nearly correspond to old English, Danish and German proverbs. The adage is traced to two legendary soldiers of Charlemagne, who were as like as two peas and who after being adopted into the traditions of the church as martyrs, might be invoked indifferently. Thus it would be said Amis is as good as Amile. R. E. SPEER.

6. What is the difference between liberty and license, and can there be personal liberty where there is law?

License is liberty perverted. You have liberty to do things expedient for you which do not interfere with the welfare or happiness or liberty of another individual. If you encroach on another's liberty—which all lawbreakers do, for just law seeks the greatest good of the greatest number—you have been guilty of license. Liberty or freedom is perfect obedience to perfect law. If there were no just law you would have no liberty, for others would always be encroaching on it and you would be fettered at every turn. Only by universal obedience to just law can any one attain to liberty.

CARRIE W. DARLING.

7. What is the meaning of the word "wisdom" as used in the Old Testament?

It is used in Exodus as a natural endowment of mechanical skill (Ex. 31:3-6). Solomon asked wisdom of God in the sense of ability to govern (I. Kings 3:9-13). Daniel was endowed with wisdom or knowledge to interpret visions. In Job and Proverbs it means the knowledge and fear of God and is generally considered to be used in Proverbs 8 as a representation of Christ.

GEORGE STUART.

8. Since we are divinely taught to pray day by day for the forgiveness of our sins, of what avail is the exhortation "Be ye perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect"?

In our treatment of others, more especially of those who have done us evil, we are to follow the perfect example of God, who makes his sun and rain ministers of kindness to just and unjust alike. Christ seeks to do away with the law of retaliation and to establish the law of love. As children of their heavenly Father, Christians should be guided by the spirit of love, rather than the mere letter of the law. He who most earnestly strives to manifest the spirit of the Father will be the most conscious of weakness, imperfection and sin, and will be the most ready to offer the daily prayer for forgiveness. The example of perfection and the prayer for forgiveness are not out of harmony as parts of the Christian's equipment. S. FORD.

9. What is the origin of the term Yankee?

There are three suggestions: 1. The Indians of Massachusetts are said to have called the English first "Yenghies," then "Yanghies," then "Yankees," all corruptions of the word "English," or possibly of the French "Anglais." 2. The Dutch settlers of New York are said to have called the English colonists of Connecticut, Yankees, from the term Jankin, a diminutive of John. 3. As early as 1713 Yankee was used as a by-word among the students at Cambridge, Mass., meaning superior or excellent—thus, a yankee good knife. The word thus used may have sprung from the Scotch yanker, a clever, pushing woman; or it may have been first used in the sense of superior, by the Indians, in reference to the mechanical tools which the colonists could turn out so much better than the natives could do. Thus they might have applied the term "Yankee" both to the colonists and their goods. E. COMAN.

10. Is the teaching of Scripture about the final judgment intended to convey the idea that there will be one set time of judgment for all mankind, or is it warrantable to believe that each man is judged separately? Can one hold the latter theory consistently with Bible teaching?

Paul says God "hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by the man whom he hath ordained." That statement and the description given of the final judgment in Revelation 20:11-15, would indicate a grand assize. The purpose of all reference in the Bible to the subject appears, however, to be to impress mankind with the fact of a solemn and searching judgment, rather than either its collective or individual character. M. RANDLE.

Miscellaneous Questions

A Reader, Spartanburg, S. C., writes:

In THE MAIL-BAG of March 21, Ouie, of Cohasset, Mass., writes about the formation of a woman's temperance organization without the suffrage feature. I wish to say that there is such an organization in South Carolina, "The Christian Temperance Workers of South Carolina," which is steadily growing in favor and numerical and moral strength. We find that the absence of suffrage gives us a position that the W. C. T. U. cannot hold, at least in our state, and enables us to exert more influence and do better work than we could otherwise do.

S. S., Washington. 1. When were mirrors first used? 2. What is the history and method of the "silvering" process?

Previous to the sixteenth century, mirrors were not articles of household furnishing. The hand or pocket mirrors carried by ladies consisted of polished metal plaques enclosed in boxes, which were often of ivory or ebony, gold or silver and handsomely jeweled. Bronze mirrors were evidently in use in very ancient times. The word "looking-glass," in the Revised Version, rendered "mirror," occurs in Ex. 38:8. The first glass mirrors were backed with sheets of metal. By degrees the present process of "silvering" was evolved, Baron Liebig, 1835, being the first to give a definite formula for it. Any encyclopedia will give you further details; the process is too elaborate for full description here.

J. H. L., Poughkeepsie, N. Y. 1. I noticed in your journal that you told an inquirer that you believed we should recognize one another in heaven; yet Christ said that in heaven people were not married. How, if a husband and wife are not married there, can they recognize one another? 2. If a Sunday School pupil is converted and intends to be baptized and join the church, but is taken ill and dies without being baptized, will she be saved without being baptized?

1. Recognition does not imply a resumption of the old relations. Christ's words were a reply to a question which assumed that there might be a dispute between husbands of the same woman as to the right of one of them to treat her as his wife. He reminded them that in heaven people would not have their fleshly bodies. Even after the resurrection they will have spiritual bodies (see I. Cor. 15:44). The husband may and doubtless will recognize his wife and the wife the husband, and it will be a loving recognition; but they will be so absorbed in the spiritual delights of the new condition that the old relations will be gross and coarse in their eyes. 2. There is not the slightest doubt of such a child being saved. The change of heart is the essential thing, and that having taken place the child would not suffer on account of having been prevented making public profession of Christ.

Mrs. N. B. E., Loudenville, W. Va. Montgomery's History says Congress voted Lafayette $200,000, and made him a grant of 24,000 acres of land in 1824, when he visited the United States. Would you please tell me where the land was located?

Hon. E. A. Hitchcock, Secretary of Department of the Interior, at Washington, kindly answers: By the Act of December 28, 1824 (6 Stats. at Large, 320), Congress granted to Gen. Lafayette, in consideration of his service in the War of the Revolution, the sum of $200,000 and one township of land, to be located under the authority of the President, on any of the unappropriated lands of the United States. The land granted by the said Act was located in what is now known as the County of Leon, near the city of Tallahassee, in Florida, being Township 1, North, Range 1 East, containing 23,028.50 acres. The land was patented on July 4, 1825, and the patent was delivered in person to Gen. Lafayette by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Reader. For Christian Endeavor topics for 1900, printed in French, apply to Mr. J. W. Baer, secretary C. E. Society, 646 Washington street, Boston, Mass. In regard to children's books in French, write us again, giving full name and address.

A. H. P., Suchien, China. Is it possible for one really a Christian to love an unbelieving husband? I think not. When a Christian girl marries an infidel man, I always feel her spiritual life is not what it should be, or her love is not what it ought to be.

Human love is sometimes beyond understanding in its choice of an object, selecting the most unworthy. It is quite possible for a believing wife to love an unbelieving husband. Such love may lead to his reformation; but it is a perilous experiment and one which is very likely to result in the wrecking of two lives. There can be no spiritual union or true happiness in such a case, and the advice given in II. Cor. 6:14, still stands good as the best and safest rule to follow.

J. H. P., Minaville, N. Y. In the case of a man who has pledged himself to give a tenth to the Lord, ought he to give a tenth of all his income, or a tenth on the balance, after rent, taxes, clothing, education, etc., have been paid?

That depends on the pledge he made. There is no law in the case, as there was in the case of the Jew. The Christian's pledge is voluntary and his conscience must tell him what he ought to tithe. Of course, in the case of a merchant, he would not be expected to tithe his gross receipts, nor even his gross profits, over and above the cost price of his goods. He is clearly entitled to deduct business expenses, such as the rent of his store, the salaries of his help, the cost of advertising, etc. Not until those items are deducted does he reach the income available for the support of himself and his family. The conscientious question we have referred to, is whether necessary domestic expenses should also be deducted before the tenth is reckoned. Your own observation will tell you that in many households, if those deductions were made first, there would be little or nothing left to tithe. The expenses that the man and his wife consider necessary often absorb the whole income.

Mrs. W. V. P., Waldo, Fla., writes:

I would be glad if you would appeal to your readers to help put down so much desecration of the Sabbath. There are thousands of Christian people who patronize the open markets for meats and vegetables and buy bread on Sunday. Now I know that this could be dispensed with. I have been keeping house nearly a score of years and I don't buy things on Sunday, only in case of sickness. I don't kill fowls on Sunday for dinner. Any experienced housekeeper could arrange for her Sunday meals without so much Sunday buying or cooking. Then there are lots of Christians who write, mail and receive letters on Sunday. Also read all kinds of secular papers on the Sabbath. I ask the question: If we do these things can we expect our children to remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy?

A. L., C., Chesterville, O. 1. In what period did St. Patrick live and when did he die? 2. What was the origin of "Peter's Pence"?

1. He is believed (according to tradition) to have been born in Armoric, Gaul, about A.D. 387, and to have died near Armagh, Ireland, A.D. 455. 2. The first idea of an annual tribute to Rome is ascribed to Ina, a king of the West Saxons, in England, about A.D. 721, who having made a pilgrimage to Rome, founded a hospice for other Anglo-Saxon pilgrims. Other writers ascribe the custom to Ethelwulf. In the days of King Alfred, the tribute consisted of one silver penny from every family possessing property of a certain value. It was established in other countries, but ultimately abandoned in nearly all. In recent years the Peter's pence tribute has been revived to some extent in certain lands.

Mrs. M. C. S., Clearfield, Pa. Do you think there is any less liquor drinking because of the many different temperance organizations? I have been a member of the W. C. T. U. for years, but have many doubts, and sometimes think the church certainly ought to cover the whole ground, and will, if ever this monster evil is to be overcome.

There is no doubt much less drinking than there would be had we no strong temperance organizations to keep it in check. The church needs all the aid and co-operation it can secure in dealing with special evils and it should be the aim of every Christian to afford that aid.

O. B., Lisbon Falls, Me. Is it known how many hours Jesus was on the cross?

It is uncertain how long Jesus lived after he was nailed to the cross. At the longest it could not have been more than six hours. Mark says (15:25), "It was the third hour [or nine o'clock], and they crucified him;" and again (15:34), "And at the ninth hour [3 P.M.], Jesus cried," etc. John, on the other hand, describing the proceedings before Pilate (19:14), says: "It was about the sixth hour." But John was probably reckoning the hours by the Roman method from midnight, which, allowing for the subsequent judicial farce and the journey to Golgotha, would bring him into accord with Mark. Matthew also (27:46), represents Jesus as being alive at the ninth hour [three o'clock]. Matthew, Mark and Luke, referring to the darkness, say that it lasted from the sixth hour [noon], till the ninth hour [3 P.M.], but it does not appear to have begun until Jesus had been some time on the cross. The ancients had not the means that we have of accurately reckoning time; so that we cannot be certain of the hour, and it may have been later than nine when Jesus was nailed to the cross. He evidently did not live long after three, probably not many minutes.

"Troubled One," ——, Mich. About two years ago I sought Christ in a revival meeting and believed myself truly converted. Some months afterward I did something that I knew was not right in God's sight. All the happiness I had after my conversion left me and I am still very miserable. It seems to me that I have not been forgiven, though I have sincerely repented and have lived a right life ever since. Is it possible that God has taken his Holy Spirit from me?

We do not believe that he has done so. If he had, you would not be troubled, but would be indifferent. Your condition is due to a lack of faith in his promises. He assures you that forgiveness is given to his children when they are sincerely penitent and you should take his promise and rest upon it. He keeps his word. There may be another reason for your condition. Perhaps he wishes to teach you what a very serious thing it is for one of his children to commit sin. So he may be hiding his face from you. Sometimes a father who is quite willing to forgive an erring child, will keep that child at a distance from his heart, because the child shows that he does not realize how very naughty he has been. The child is really forgiven, but the father does not give him the assurance of forgiveness at first, lest he get the idea that he may commit any sin and be sure of being forgiven.

Reader, N. Y. The "Easter tribute" of Christian American women, which is so highly appreciated, was largely due to the efforts of Mrs. Abby G. Baker, of Washington, D. C., who personally communicated with a majority of the contributors. It was indeed a precious and appropriate offering for the Easter season.

INDIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL AT DARLINGTON

FALL BEAR AND SQUAW

A GROUP OF CHEYENNE CHIEFS

FOUR years ago Rev. Dr. Wheeler M. Wellman, pastor of what is said to be the largest evangelical Indian church in America, gave up a prosperous city charge and went as a missionary to the Cheyennes and Arapahoes of Oklahoma. At Darlington he found a small church with three Indian and eight white members, and to these he began preaching. In a short while there was a wonderful revival in which, as the first fruit of his labors, he received twenty-nine converts. Since then he has had in one day as many as sixty-seven applications for church membership, and his church, during the present year, has been enlarged by seventy accessions. In addition to his regular pastoral work, he conducts a dispensary, through which hundreds of Indians have been relieved and many lives saved. He has also organized a Y. P. C. E. Society with a membership of fifty Indians, who are faithful attendants at the weekly meetings. It will thus be seen that Dr. Wellman has had exceptional opportunities for studying the red man, his ways and customs, and the following article, written by him for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, will be welcomed by our readers:

It is sometimes said that the 260,000 Indians, comprising only about one three-hundredth of our population, command an interest out of proportion to their numbers. This interest is too often of a by no means helpful character, for to many the fast-disappearing Indian has become little more than a curiosity, an animal in blankets, beads, paint and feathers; and wherever he goes he attracts attention much in the same way as would a dancing bear. When we reflect that only 300 years ago this great North American domain was his, by every right, which is to-day dear to the white man, it is borne upon all Christian hearts that we owe the Indian a larger consideration than has ever been given him. The Cheyennes and Arapahoes, among whom my lot has been cast, are among the latest to have lands alloted. The last census, taken a few months ago, places the number of the former at 2,056, and the latter, 1,000. The semi-annual interest payment on their one million dollar fund at Washington, arising from the purchase of their lands by the government, has just been completed. It always moves one's sympathy to see them receiving their money, because, in nine cases out of ten, the full amount has been spent for something to eat or wear weeks and months before they get it. So every dollar goes for back bills; not one is left. They are remarkably honest. One trader, who had trusted them for six months to the amount of seven or eight thousand dollars, told me that he had collected all but about two per cent. and that he considered one-half of that good.

INDIAN SCHOOLGIRLS AT PLAY, MAKING DOLL TEPEES

Most of them are as obedient as children to one whom they regard as a true friend. But no one is received by them as such without first having been thoroughly tested. Their greatest enemies are whiskey and mescal, both of which are sold to them by white men. Since the grandson of Sitting Bull, who lives here, introduced the ghost dance years ago, numbers believe the mescal bean to be a specific for various diseases. This bean is the seed bulb of a Mexican cactus. In appearance, size and shape it resembles the button of the hollyhock, after the flower falls. It is said to produce ecstatic dreams, in the same way as Indian hemp (cannabis indica), etc. Before the advent of Sitting Bull and his ghost dance, many Indians had small herds of cattle. Now, Sitting Bull has their property, and they have the dreadful mescal habit.

They are great imitators. Some time since, a missionary who preaches in a surplice received from a good woman a box of clothing. Among other things sent, were twenty-four nicely ruffled white night dresses, which were given out. The Indians reasoned that because the minister wore a similar garment they should. So, next Sunday morning, there single filed into meeting, twenty-four men each clad in a handsomely ruffled and laced night dress, some too long and some too short. They are quick to see inconsistencies. It was the day of a big dance, when Big Hawk came to my fire to warm. I said: "Big Hawk, no dance."

"Yes, sir!" he replied with great emphasis. "White man say wrong to dance, but white man dance; you say bad to paint faces, but heap white squaw paint face; long, long time ago Jesus came to help; Jesus, good Friend, and white man kill Jesus; Indian no kill him, Indian no kill anybody, when come to help and be good friend. It may be bad for Indians to dance, but Indian no kill Jesus." Almost without exception they have great reverence for God and his Son.

In the last two years I have received by baptism and confession of faith, 181 Indians from ten to twenty-six years of age, most of whom are consistent and intelligent Christians. In our service last Sunday, for Indians only, thirteen adults came forward and gave me the hand, saying: "I love Jesus, and I want my name put down in his big book as one of his true friends." The men are progressive, wanting civilization. Not so the women. Yet, the woman is the burden-bearer. Sick or well, old or young, she must provide the water, often going a mile, carrying it on her back in ten gallon kegs, frequently without a rest. She must carry the wood, load and unload the wagon when traveling, put up and take down the tepees, care for the children, cook, grease the wagon, harness the horses, picket them out, take them to water, etc. If there are twenty bundles she must carry them all, and the baby on top, even though she make two or more trips. The pictures sent present some views of Indian life not often seen by whites—particularly that of the dead body of Yellow Shirt, one of my brothers in red. Fall Bear and squaw are typical Indians.

This work is supported by voluntary contributions. The Indians do what they can, but they are too poor to give much.

Creeds Good and Bad

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, John 11: 44: . . . . . } . . . Loose him and let him go. . . .

MY Bible is, at the place of this text, written all over with lead-pencil marks made at Bethany on the ruins of the house of Mary and Martha and Lazarus. We dismounted from our horses on the way up from Jordan to the Dead Sea. Bethany was the summer evening retreat of Jesus. After spending the day in the hot city of Jerusalem, he would come out there almost every evening to the house of his three friends. I think the occupants of that house were orphans, for the father and mother are not mentioned. But the son and two daughters must have inherited property, for it must have been, judging from what I saw of the foundations and the size of the rooms, an opulent home. Martha, a first-rate housekeeper, and Mary, a spirituelle, somewhat dreamy, but affectionate, and as good a girl as could be found in all Palestine. But one day Lazarus got sick. The sisters were in consternation. Father gone and mother gone, they feel very nervous lest they lose their brother also. Disease did its quick work. Worse and worse gets Lazarus, until the doctor announces that he can do no more. The shriek that went up from that household when the last breath had been drawn, and the two sisters were being led by sympathizers into the adjoining room, all those of us can imagine who have had our own hearts broken. But why was not Jesus there as he so often had been? Far away in the country districts, preaching, healing other sick, how unfortunate that this omnipotent Doctor had not been at that domestic crisis in Bethany. When at last Jesus arrived in Bethany, Lazarus had been buried four days, and dissolution had taken place.

At the door of the sepulchre is a crowd of people, but the three most memorable are Jesus, who was the family friend, and the two bereft sisters. We went into the traditional tomb one December day, and it is deep down and dark, and with torches we explored it. We found it all quiet that afternoon of our visit, but the day spoken of in the Bible there was present an excited multitude. I wonder what Jesus will do? He orders the door of the grave removed, and then he begins to descend the steps, Mary and Martha close after him, and the crowd after them.

Now all the whispering and all the crying and all the sounds of shuffling feet are stopped. It is the silence of expectancy. Death had conquered, but now the vanquisher of death confronted the scene. Amid the awful hush of the tomb, the familiar name which Christ had often had upon his lips in the hospitalities of the village home came back to his tongue, and with a pathos and an almightiness of which the resurrection of the last day shall only be an echo, he cries, "Lazarus, come forth!" The eyes of the slumberer open, and he rises and comes to the foot of the steps, and with great difficulty begins to ascend, for the cerements of the tomb are yet on him, and his feet are fast, and his hands are fast, and the impediments to all his movements are so great that Jesus commands: "Take off these cerements; remove these hindrances; unfasten these grave clothes; loose him, and let him go!"

Oh, I am so glad that after the Lord raised Lazarus he went on, and commanded the loosening of the cords that bound his feet, so that he could walk, and the breaking off of the cerement that bound his hands so that he could stretch out his arms in salutation, and the tearing off of the bandage from around his jaws so that he could speak. What would resurrected life have been to Lazarus if he had not been freed from all those cripplements of his body? I am glad that Christ commanded his complete emancipation, saying, "Loose him, and let him go."

The unfortunate thing now is that so many Christians are only half liberated. They have been raised from the death and burial of sin into spiritual life, but they yet have the grave clothes on them. They are, like Lazarus, hobbling up the stairs of the tomb bound hand and foot, and the object of this sermon is to help free their body and free their soul, and I shall try to obey the Master's command that comes to me, and comes to every minister of religion: "Loose him, and let him go."

Many are bound hand and foot by religious creeds. Let no man misinterpret me as antagonizing creeds. I have eight or ten of them: a creed about religion, a creed about art, a creed about social life, a creed about government, and so on. A creed is something that a man believes, whether it be written or unwritten. The Presbyterian Church is now agitated about its creed. Some good men in it are for keeping it because it was framed from the belief of John Calvin. Other good men in it want revision. I am with neither party. Instead of revision I want substitution. I was sorry to have the question disturbed at all. The creed did not hinder us from offering the pardon and the comfort of the Gospel to all men, and the Westminster Confession has not interfered with me one minute. But now that the electric lights have been turned on the imperfections of that creed—and everything that man fashions is imperfect—let us put the old creed respectfully aside and get a brand-new one.

It is impossible that people who lived hundreds of years ago should fashion an appropriate creed for our times. John Calvin was a great and good man, but he died three hundred and thirty-six years ago. The best centuries of Bible study have come since then, and explorers have done their work, and you might as well have the world go back and stick to what Robert Fulton knew about steamboats, and reject the subsequent improvements in navigation; and go back to John Gutenberg, the inventor of the art of printing, and reject all modern newspaper presses; and go back to the time when telegraphy was the elevating of signals, or the burning of bonfires on the hill-tops, and reject the magnetic wire which is the tongue of nations, as to ignore all the exegetes and the philologists, and the theologians of the last three hundred and thirty-six years, and put your head under the sleeve of the gown of a sixteenth-century doctor. I could call the names of twenty living Presbyterian ministers of religion who could make a better creed than John Calvin. The nineteenth century ought not to be called to sit at the feet of the sixteenth.

"But," you say, "it is the same old Bible, and John Calvin had that as well as the present student of the Scriptures." Yes: so it is the same old sun in the heavens, but in our time it has gone to making daguerreotypes and photographs. It is the same old water, but in our century it has gone to running steam-engines. It is the same old electricity, but in our time it has become a lightning-footed errand boy. So it is the old Bible, but new applications, new uses, new interpretations. You must remember that during the last three hundred years words have changed their meaning, and some of them now mean more, and some less. I do not think that John Calvin believed, as some say he did, in the damnation of infants, although some of the recent hot disputes would seem to imply that there is such a thing as the damnation of infants. A man who believes in the damnation of infants himself deserves to lose heaven. I do not think any good man could admit such a possibility. What Christ will do with all the babies in the next world I conclude from what he did with the babies in Palestine when he hugged them and kissed them. When some of you grown people go out of this world your doubtful destiny will be an embarrassment to ministers officiating at your obsequies, who will have to be cautious so as not to hurt surviving friends. But when the darling children go there are no "ifs" or "buts" or guesses.

We must remember that good John Calvin was a logician and a metaphysician, and by the proclivities of his nature put some things in an unfortunate way. Logic has its use, and metaphysics has its use, but they are not good at making creeds. A gardener hands you a blooming rose, dewy, fresh, but a severe botanist comes to you with a rose and says, "I will show you the structure of this rose," and he proceeds to take it apart, and pulls off the leaves and he says, "There are the petals," and he takes out the anthers, and he says, "Just look at the wonderful structure of these floral pillars!" and then he cuts the stem to show you the juices of the plant. So logic or metaphysics takes the aromatic rose of the Christian religion and says: "I will just show you how this rose of religion was fashioned;" and it pulls off of it a piece, and says: "That is the human will," and another piece, and says: "This is God's will," and another piece, and says: "This is sovereignty," and another piece, and says: "This is free agency," this is this, and that is that. And while I stand looking at the fragments of the rose pulled apart, one whom the Marys took for a gardener comes in, and presents me with a crimson rose, red as blood, and says, "Inhale the sweetness of this; wear it on your heart, and wear it forever." I must confess that I prefer the rose in full bloom to the rose pulled apart.

What a time we have had with the dogmatics, the apologetics and the hermeneutics. The defect in some of the creeds is that they try to tell us all about the decrees of God. Now the only human being that was ever competent to handle that subject was Paul, and he would not have been competent had he not been inspired. Do not try to measure either the throne of God or the thunderbolts of God with your little steel pen. What do you know about the decrees? You cannot pry open the door of God's eternal counsels. You cannot explain the mysteries of God's government now; much less the mysteries of his government five hundred quintillion years ago.

I move for a creed for all our denominations made out of Scripture quotations pure and simple. Let us make it simpler and plainer for people to get into the kingdom of God. Do not hinder people by the idea that they may not have been elected. Do not tag on to the one essential of faith in Christ any of the innumerable non-essentials. A man who heartily accepts Christ is a Christian, and the man who does not accept him is not a Christian, and that is all there is of it. Faith in Christ is the criterion, is the test, is the pivot, is the indispensable.

But there are those who would add unto the present tests rather than subtract from them. Do not substitute tests which the Bible does not establish. There is one passage of Scripture wide enough to let all in who ought to enter, and to keep out all who ought to be kept out: "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Get a man's heart right, and his life will be right. But now that the old creeds have been put under public scrutiny, something radical must be done. Some would split them, some would carve them, some would elongate them, some would abbreviate them. At the present moment and in the present shape they are a hindrance. Lazarus is alive, but hampered with the old grave-clothes. If you want one glorious Church, free and unencumbered, take off the cerements of old ecclesiastical vocabulary. Loose her, and let her go!

Again, there are Christians who are under sepulchral shadows, and hindered and hoppled by doubts and fears and sins long ago repented of. What they need is to understand the liberty of the sons of God. They spend more time under the shadow of Sinai than at the base of Calvary. They have been singing the only poor hymn that Newton ever wrote:

'Tis a point I long to know;
Oft it causes anxious thought:
Do I love the Lord or no?
Am I his or am I not?

Long to know, do you? Why do you not find out? Go to work for God, and you will very soon find out. The man who is all the time feeling his pulse and looking at his tongue to see whether it is coated, is morbid, and cannot be physically well. The doctor will say: "Go out into the fresh air and into active life, and stop thinking of yourself, and you will get well and strong." So there are people who are watching their spiritual symptoms, and they call it self-examination, and they get weaker and sicklier in their faith all the time. Go out and do something nobly Christian. Take holy exercise and then examine yourself, and instead of Newton's saturnine and bilious hymn that I first quoted, you will sing Newton's other hymn:

Amazing grace, how sweet the sound
That saved a wretch like me!
I once was lost, but now am found;
Was blind, but now I see.

What many of you Christians most need is to get your grave-clothes off. I rejoice that you have been brought from the death of sin to the life of the Gospel; but you need to get your hand loose and your feet loose and your tongue loose and your soul loose. There is no sin that the Bible so arraigns and punctures and flagellates as the sin of unbelief, and that is what is the matter with you. "Oh," you say, "if you knew what I once was, and how many times I have grievously strayed, you would understand why I do not come out brighter." Then I think you would call yourself the chief of sinners. I am glad you hit upon that term, for I have a promise that fits into your case as the cogs of one wheel between the cogs of another wheel, or as the key fits into the labyrinths of a lock. A man who was once called Saul, but afterwards Paul, declared: "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief." Mark that—"of whom I am chief."

Do you think it pleases the Lord for you to be carrying around with you the debris and carcasses of old transgressions? You make me think of some ship that has had a tempestuous time at sea, and, now that it proposes another voyage, keeps on its davits the damaged lifeboats and the splinters of a shivered mast and the broken glass of a smashed skylight. My advice is: Clear the decks, overboard with all the damaged rigging, brighten up the salted smoke-stacks, open a new log-book, haul in the planks, lay out a new course and set sail for heaven. You have had the spiritual dumps long enough. You will please the Lord more by being happy than by being miserable.

Have you not sometimes started out in the rain with your umbrella, and you were busy thinking, and you did not notice that the rain had stopped, and though it had cleared off you still had your umbrella up, and when you discovered what you were doing you felt silly enough? That is what some of you are doing in religious things. You have got so used to sadness that though the rain has stopped you still have your umbrella up. Come out of the shadow. Ascend the stairs of your sepulchre. Step out into the broad light of noonday. We come around you to help remove your grave-clothes, and a voice from the heavens, tremulous but omnipotent, commands, "Loose him, and let him go."

Again, my text has good advice concerning any Christian hampered and bothered and bound by fear of his own dissolution. To such, the Book refers when it speaks of those who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. The most of us, even if we have the Christian hope, are cowards about death. My brothers and sisters, if we made full use of our religion we would soon get over this.

Backed up by the teachings of your Bible, just look through the telescope some bright night and see how many worlds there are, and reflect that all you have seen, compared with the number of worlds in existence, are less than the fingers of your right hand as compared with all the fingers of the human race. How foolish, then, for us to think that ours is the only world fit for us to stay in. I think that all the stars are inhabited, and by beings like the human race in feelings and sentiments, and the difference is in lung respiration, and heart beat, and physical conformation, their physical conformation fit for the climate of their world, and our physical conformation fit for the climate of our world. So we shall feel at home in any of the stellar neighborhoods, our physical limitations having ceased.

One of our first realizations in getting out of this world, I think, will be that in this world we were very much pent up, and had cramped apartments, and were kept on the limits. The most, even of our small world, is water, and the water says to the human race, "Don't come here or you will drown." A few thousand feet up the atmosphere is uninhabitable, and the atmosphere says to the human race, "Don't come up here or you cannot breathe." A few miles down the earth is a furnace of fire, and the fire says, "Don't come here or you will burn." And, crossing a rail track, you must look out or you will be crushed. And, standing by a steam boiler, you must look out or you will be blown up. And pneumonias and pleurisies and consumptions and apoplexies go across this earth in flocks, in droves, in herds, and it is a world of equinoxes and cyclones and graves. Yet we are under the delusion that it is the only place fit to stay in. We want to stick to the wet plank midocean while the great ship, The City of God, of the Celestial line, goes sailing past, and would gladly take us up in a lifeboat. My Christian friends, let me tear off your despondencies and frights about dissolution. My Lord commands me regarding you, saying, "Loose him, and let him go."

Heaven is ninety-five per cent. better than this world, a thousand per cent. better, a million per cent. better. Take the gladdest, brightest, most jubilant days you ever had on earth, and compress them all into one hour, and that hour would be a requiem, a fast-day, a gloom, a horror, as compared with the poorest hour they have had in heaven since its first tower was built or its first gates swung or its first song carolled. "Oh," you say, "that may be true, but I am so afraid of crossing over from this world to the next, and I fear the snapping of the cord between soul and body." Well, all the surgeons and physicians and scientists declare that there is no pang at the parting of the body and soul, and all the restlessness at the closing hour of life is involuntary, and no distress at all. And I agree with the doctors, for what they say is confirmed by the fact that persons who were drowned, or were submerged until all consciousness departed, and were afterward resuscitated, declare that the sensation of passing into unconsciousness was pleasurable rather than distressful. The cage of the body has a door on easy hinges, and when that door of the physical cage opens, the soul simply puts out its wings and soars.

The only part of the journey I made years ago to Palestine that I really dreaded was the landing at Joppa. That is the port of entrance for the Holy Land, and there are many rocks, and in rough weather people cannot land at all. The boats taking the people from the steamer to the docks must run between reefs that looked to me to be about fifty feet apart, and one misstroke of an oarsman, or an unexpected wave has sometimes been fatal, and hundreds have perished along those reefs. Besides that, as we left Port Said the evening before, an old traveler said: "The wind is just right to give you a rough landing at Joppa; indeed, I think you will not be able to land at all." The fact was, that when our Mediterranean steamer dropped anchor near Joppa and we put out for shore in the small boat, the water was as still as though it had been sound asleep a hundred years, and we landed as easily as I entered this pulpit. Well, your fears have pictured for you an appalling arrival at the end of your voyage of life, and they say that the seas will run high and that the breakers will swallow you up; or that if you reach Canaan at all, it will be a very rough landing. The very opposite will be true if you have the eternal God for your portion. Your disembarkation for the promised land will be as smooth as was ours at Palestine. Christ will meet you far out at sea and pilot you into complete safety, and you will land with a hosanna on one side of you and a hallelujah on the other.

"Land ahead!" its fruits are waving
O'er the hill of fadeless green,
And the living waters laving
Shores where heavenly forms are seen.

Rocks and storms I'll fear no more,
When on that eternal shore;
Drop the anchor! furl the sail!
I am safe within the veil!

Helping our Boys in Manila

...SOCIAL AND EVANGELICAL WORK NEEDED

...PLANS FOR A SOLDIERS' CLUB HOUSE

CHAPLAIN PIERCE—PROPOSED SOLDIERS' CLUBHOUSE, MANILA

REV. Dr. Charles C. Pierce, Chaplain U.S.A., who recently gave our readers an interesting account of religious work in the Philippines, is about to return to Manila, where he hopes, in consequence of interest awakened in this country, to be able to accomplish larger things for our "Boys in Blue."

Few men are better fitted to plead the cause of the soldier in the Philippines and to influence him than Chaplain Pierce, both because of his thirteen years of experience as a spiritual leader in the army, and of his protracted sojourn in Luzon whither he went with the Otis expedition. Perhaps, too, few names are spoken with more gratitude and tenderness than his in many American homes, whence loved ones went never to return, since but for his indefatigable labors in supervising the Office of Identification of the Dead, many had been unable to find the remains of those they held dear. Since his appointment to that office, March 29, 1899, more than six hundred bodies of our poor fellows have been given into his hands that he might learn their names, wash their faces for the last time, and shroud them for the sepulchre in a soldier's uniform, draping their caskets with the folds of the flag under which they fell, and seeing to it that whatever else of honor or respect were omitted because of the cruel exigencies of war not a single man, be he fever-stricken, a small-pox victim, or slain in battle, should be buried without the services of a chaplain. This work has sometimes required the presence of the chaplain in his crowded morgue throughout the night, as well as the day, and everywhere in Luzon, he is know as "the man who will not suffer the dead to be lost." The weeks of rest granted him in this country since his return with the remains of Gen. Lawton have been spent in efforts to raise funds to establish upon a solid financial basis many of the religious and moral enterprises in Manila in which he has an interest.

GATEWAY TO WALLED CITY

Among these enterprises is a Soldiers' Club House, to be built in Malate (the famous Southern section of Manila), where the Brotherhood of St. Andrew have for the past year rented and maintained a Brotherhood House for soldiers. The work in this rented building has been of large proportion, notwithstanding the fact that the house is small and unsuited to the requirements, affording no room for a gymnasium, or various other devices for interesting and holding the men, as well as being entirely inadequate to demands made upon it for religious exercises. "It is pathetic," says the chaplain, "to see the many men who want to come in and for whom there is no room." The proposed building (of which we present the architect's drawing), will stand between two regimental barracks, and will draw a considerable congregation from these alone. The plan of the interior includes a gymnasium, restaurant, library, reading and correspondence room, assembly room for religious services, lectures and debates; and rooms in which men who are away from their regiments over night may find pleasant shelter, without the necessity of sleeping in localities less comfortable and safe. The second story will contain class-rooms for the study of such subjects as may be desired.

The work, already in existence, and that to be instituted, is along the lines of that which the Y. M. C. A. is conducting in another part of the city some three miles distant, in which the chaplain expresses a deep interest, characterizing it as "a valuable, desirable and blessed one." "Manila," he adds, "is a city of about 350,000 souls, and to meet the needs of the great American army in and near the city, all the agencies established there up to this date have been entirely inadequate. Up to the time I left, the Y. M. C. A. had its headquarters in a big tent. I am glad to hear that they now have a building; it was supplied by our Government." The clubhouse, which the chaplain seeks means to build, will cost $15,000, and it is to be earnestly hoped that he will be able to carry out this worthy enterprise. He believes the only way to save soldiers from the saloon is to provide something better for them. He says:

"There is nothing in the color of the coat. A soldier is a civilian in uniform and under orders. Some of our soldiers are bad, but some were bad before they came to us. And in the ranks will be found men of noblest impulses and as noble lives, whom it is an honor to know. The one point to be borne in mind is, that these men are in our army, and that they are removed from the refining influences of home. It is incumbent upon us to see that homelike places are provided, to which they may go when discouraged and cast down and possessed with pathetic longing for the homes and dear ones left so many thousand miles behind.

"In the pocket or folded to the heart of many a dead soldier I have found a mother's letter or some dear girl's face, baptized with blood; and by these mute agencies I have been able to learn whose was the restraining influence and whence came the motive that had controlled the dead. And all these things have made me feel that there are thousands here at home who, regardless of the other worthy objects of their benevolence, would gladly help me to build this clubhouse, wherein men may gather when they please, without regard to creed or aught else, and may get some touch of home and some impulse toward a better life or some strengthening in a good life long since begun. Other agencies are always found, wherever there is an army, which tend toward debasement, and Manila is no exception. Our men, yours and mine, are worthy of something better. If we call men to wear our uniform and carry our flag, we have a moral obligation to buttress their characters with every good influence which the mind of man can devise and the money of man can provide. I prize the confidence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and shall bless its readers if, by their aid, our hopes are realized."

Contributions and communications respecting this work will be forwarded to Chaplain Pierce, if addressed to him at 7 West Tenth street, New York.

A TYPICAL STREET SCENE, MANILA

Seven Years' Work for Chinatown

The seventh anniversary of the New York Rescue Band, celebrated April 7, at its Mission Hall, 17 Doyers street, Hon. Wm. H. Rowe presiding, was a most interesting occasion. Reports made by those in charge of the various departments of the work, consisting of the Midnight Mission, Hope Mission School for Children, Star of Hope Club for Working Girls, Boys' Military Club, Prison and Hospital Work, General Rescue Work, the Fifty-third Street Home for Erring Women, Thecla Orphanage, etc., show gratifying progress. For instance, during the year attendance at the Midnight Mission has been 100,000; 200 wayward girls have visited the reading-room in Fifty-third street; thirty-three girls have been received into the Home, thirty of whom are now leading honest lives; some thirty children are cared for at the Orphanage, and many open-air services have been held.

The opening prayer was by Rev. Wm. James; addresses were delivered by Rev. Dr. Hall, President Union Theological Seminary, Rev. Dr. Laidlaw, Secretary Federation of Churches, and others. The Rescue Band numbers one hundred working members, representing twenty-one different churches of Greater New York. When the formal anniversary programme, beginning at nine o'clock, was concluded, the large gathering, consisting principally of people from uptown churches, filed out, and the usual congregation, consisting of the homeless, hungry and ragged, thronged in and filled the benches, and a leader from the Florence Crittenton Mission opened the midnight service. The Doyers Street Mission has had a wonderful influence for good in Chinatown.

A Terrible Thing Happens

A BLOW has fell onto me I wuzn't prepared for. We found a number of letters waitin' us here at the tarven that Robert Strong had ordered to be forwarded there. It seemed so good whilst settin' under a palm tree, seein' jinrikishas go by, and Chinas and Japans, to set and read about the dear ones in Jonesville, and the old mair and Snip.

The letters wuz full of affection and cheer, and after readin' 'em I gathered 'em up and sought my pardner to exchange letters with him as I wuz wont to do, and I see he had quite a few, but what was my surprise to see that man sarahuptishushly and with a guilty look try to conceal one on 'em under his bandanna. And any woman will know that all his other letters wuz as dross to me compared to the one he was hidin'. I will pass over my arguments—and—and words, before that letter lay in my hand. But suffice it to say, that when at last I read it and all wuz explained to me, groans and sithes riz from my burdened heart deeper and despairener than any I had gin vent to in years and years.

And I may as well tell the hull story now, as I spoze my readers are most as anxious about it as I wuz. Oh, Josiah! How could you done it? How I do hate to tell it! Must I tell the shameful facts? Oh, Duty! lower thy strongest apron strings and let me cling and teil and weep. And there it had been goin' on for months and I not mistrustin' it. But Duty, I will hold hard onto thy strings and tell the shameful tale.

Captain Bardeen's Cupboard

Josiah owned a old dwellin' house in the environs of Jonesville, right acrost from Cap'n Bardeen's, who rented it of him to store things in. The town line runs right under the house, so the sink is in Zoar, and the cupboard always had stood in Jonesville. But owin' to Ernest White's labors and prayers and votes, his and all the other good ministers and earnest helpers, Jonesville went no-license now jest as Loontown did last year.

And jest as Satan always duz if he gits holt of souls that he can't buy or skair, he will try to cheat 'em, he is so suttle. It seems that after we got away that Cap'n Bardeen moved that cupboard over to the other side of the room into Zoar and went to sellin' whiskey out on't. Awful doin's! The minute I read the letter I sez:

"Josiah Allen, do you write this very minute and stop this wicked, wicked works!" Sez I: "No knowin' how many Jonesvillians will feel their religion a-wobblin' and tottlin' just by your example; naterally they would look up to a deacon and emulate his example—do you stop it to once!"

"No, Samantha," sez he, "Cap'n Bardeen and his father owns more cows than any other Jonesvillians. If I want to be salesman agin in the Jonesville factory I mustn't make 'em mad, and they pay a dretful high rent."

"I wouldn't call it rent," sez I, "I'd call it blood-money. I'd run a pirate flag up on the ruff with these words on it, 'Josiah Allen, Deacon.'"

He wuz agitated and sez, "Oh, no, Samantha; I wouldn't do that for the world, I am so well thought on in the M. E. meetin' house."

"Well, you won't be well thought on if you do such a thing as this!" sez I. "Jest think how Ernest White, that good devoted minister, has labored and prayed for the good of souls and bodies, and you tryin' your best to overthrow it all. How could you do it, Josiah?"

"Well, I may as well tell you, Samantha, I writ to Ury and kinder left it to him. He knows my ambitions and my biziness. He knows how handy money is and he fixed it all straight and right."

"Ury!" sez I, "why should you leave it to Ury? Does he keep your conscience and clean it off when it gits black and nasty by such doin's as this?"

"No, Samantha, I've got my conscience all right. I brought it with me on my tower."

"Why should you leave it to Ury? He's your hired man, he would do as you told him to," sez I. "For a Methodist deacon such acts are demeanin' and disgustin' for a pardner and Jonesville to witness, let alone the country." And agin I sez, "You can stop it in a minute if you want to, and you know right from wrong, you know enough to say yes or no without bringin' Ury into the scrape; Ury! spozein' you git him into it, I can tell you he won't bear the brunt of it before the bar of this country or that bar up above. You'll have to carry the responsibility of all the evil it duz, and it will be a lastin' disgrace to you and the huli Methodist meetin'-house if you let it go on."

Samantha is Indignant

Agin he sez, "Ury fixed it all right."

"How did Ury fix it?" sez I, in the cold axents of woman's skorn and curosity.

"Well, Ury said, make Bardeen stop sellin' whiskey out of the cupboard, make him sell it out of the chist. There is a big chist there that Bardeen bought to keep grain in, sez Ury, let Bardeen move that cupboard acrost the room back into Jonesville, set the chist up on the sink in Zoar and sell it out of that. Ury said that in his opinion that would make it all right, so that a perfessor and a Methodist deacon could do it with a clear conscience."

Sez I, "Do you write to once, Josiah Allen, and tell Bardeen to either stop such works, or move right out."

"Well," sez he blandly, real bland and polite. "I will consider it, Samantha, I will give it my consideration."

"No, no, Josiah Allen, you know right from wrong, truth from falsehood, honesty from dishonesty, you don't want to consider."

"Yes I do, Samantha; it is so genteel when a moral question comes up to wait and consider; it is very fashionable."

"How long do you lay out to wait, Josiah Allen?" sez I, coldly.

"Oh, it is fashionable to not give a answer till you're obleeged to, but I will consult agin with Ury and probable along by Fall I can give you my ultimatum."

"And whilst you are a considerin' Bardeen will go on a sellin' pizen to destroy all the good that Ernest White, that devoted minister of Christ, and all the good men and wimmen helpers have done and are a doin'."

"Well," sez Josiah, "I may as well tell you, you would probably hear on't, Ernest White writ me some time ago, and sent me a long petition signed by most all the ministers and leadin' men and wimmen, beggin' me to stop Bardeen."

"Well, what did you tell him, Josiah Allen?"

"I told him, Samantha, I would consider it."

"And," sez I, "have you been all this time, months and months, a considerin'?"

"Yes, mom," sez he, in a polite, genteel tone, "I have."

"Well, do you stop considerin' to once! Josiah Allen."

"No, Samantha, a pardner can do a good deal, but she can't break up a man's considerin'. It is very genteel and fashionable, and I shall keep it up."

I groaned aloud; the more I thought on't, the worse I felt. Sez I, "To think of all the evils that are a flowin' out of that place, Josiah, and you could stop it to once if you wuz a minter."

"But," sez Josiah, "Ury sez that if it wuzn't sold there by Cap'n Bardeen the factory folks would go over into Zoar and git worse likker sold by low down critters."

Sez I, "You might as well say if Christians don't steal and murder, it will be done by them of poor moral character. That is one strong weepon to kill the evil—confine the bizness to the low and vile and show to the world that you, a Methodist and a deacon, put the bizness right where it belongs, with murder and all wickedness, not as you are sayin' now by your example, it is right and I will protect it."

Josiah is Obstinate

"Well," sez Josiah, as sot as a old hen settin' on a brick bat, "it is law; Ury has settled it."

My heart ached so that it seemed to clear my head. "We'll see," sez I, "if it can't be changed. I'll know before a week has gone over my head." And I got up and dragged out the hair trunk, sithin' so deep that it wuz dretful to hear, some like the melancholy winter winds howlin' round a Jonesville chimbly.

HE CONCEALED IT UNDER HIS BANDANNA "JOSIAH ALLEN, STOP THIS WICKED, WICKED WORKS" "NEVER WILL I LET MY IDOL GO BACK ALONE," SEZ HE

"What are you a goin' to do, Samantha?" sez Josiah anxiously.

"I am goin' back home," sez I, "tomorrer to see about that law."

"Alone?" sez he.

"Yes, alone," sez I, "alone."

"Never!" sez Josiah. "Never will I let my idol go from Japan to Jonesville unprotected. If you must go and make a town's talk from China to Jonesville I'll stand by you." And he took down his hat and ombrell.

"What would you do if you went back?" sez I. "I should think you had done enough as it is; I shall go alone."

"What! you go and leave all the pleasures of this trip and the Paris Show and go alone? Part from your pardner for months and months?"

A Sudden Resolve

"Yes," sez I wildly, "and mebby forever. It don't seem to me that I can ever live with a man that is doin' what you are." And hot tears dribbled down onto my sheep's head night-caps.

"Oh, Samantha!" sez he, takin' out his bandanna and weepin' in consort, "What is money or ambition compared to the idol of my heart? I'll write to Ury to change the law agin."

"Dear Josiah!" sez I, "I knew, I knew you couldn't be so wicked as to continue what you had begun. But can you do it?" sez I.

Sez he cheerfully, as he see me take out a sheep's head night-cap and shet down the trunk lid, "What man has done, man can do. If Ury can fix a law once, he can fix it twice. And he done it for me." Sez he, "I can repeal it if I am a minter, and when I am a minter." And he got up and took a sheet of paper and begun to write to repeal that law. I gently leggo the apron-string dear Duty had lowered to me: it had held; pure Principle had conquered agin. Oh, the relief and sweetness of that hour! Sweet is the pink blush of roses after the cold snows of winter; sweet is rest after a weary pilgrimage.

The Victory Won

Calm and beautiful is the warm ambient air of repose and affection after a matrimonial blizzard. Josiah wuz better to me than he had been for over seven weeks, and his lovin' demeanor didn't change for the worse for as much as five days. But the wicked wrong wuz done away with.

I writ a letter to Ernest White tellin' him I never knowed a word about it till that very day, and my companion had repealed the law, and Cap'n Bardeen had got to move out or stop sellin' whiskey. He knows how I worship Josiah; he didn't expect that I would come out openly and blame him; no, the bare facts wuz enough.

I ended up the letter with a post scriptum remark. Sez I: "Waitstill Webb is sweeter lookin' than ever and as good as pure gold, jest as she always wuz, but the climate is wearin' on her, and I believe she will be back in Jonesville as soon as we are, if not before. She is a lovely girl and would make a Christian minister's home in Loontown or any other town, a blessed and happy place."

I thought I wouldn't dast to do anything more than to give such a little blind hint. But to resoom. Folks seem to have a wrong idee about the education of the Japanese. There are twenty-eight thousand schools in Japan, besides the private and public kindergartens. There are over three million native students out of a school population of seven million. There are sixty-nine thousand teachers, all Japanese, excepting about two hundred and fifty American, German and English. Nearly ten million dollars (Japanese), is raised annually for educational purposes from school fees, taxes, interest on funds, etc. They have compulsory school laws just like ours. So why should Japan be called benighted in regard to education. And not a drunken native did we see whilst in Japan, and I wish that I could say the same of New York for the same length of time or Chicago or Jonesville.

And for gentle, polite, amiable manners they go as fur ahead of Americans as the leaves of their trees duz, and I've seen leaves there more'n ten feet long. The empire of Japan consists of three thousand eight hundred islands, from one eight hundred milds long to them no bigger than a tin pan, and the population is about forty-three million. I don't spoze any nation on earth ever made faster progress than Japan has in the last thirty years: railways, telegraph postal system. It seems as if all Japan wanted wuz to find out the best way of doin' things, and then she would go right ahead and do 'em.

Robert Strong wuz talking about what the word Japan meant, the Sunrise Land. And he said some real pretty things about it and so did Dorothy. They wuz dretful took with the country. Robert Strong has traveled everywhere and he told me that some portions of Japan wuz more beautiful than any country he had ever seen. We took several short journeys into the interior to see the home life of the people, but Robert Strong, who seemed to be by the consent of all of us the head of our expedition, thought that we had better not linger very long there as there wuz so many other countries that we wanted to visit before we got back to Paris, and we felt that we must git back there by the Fourth of July, United States Day, and of course the Exposition wuz the gole we wuz a lookin' ahead to, or one of the goles. Jonesville and our own doorstep wuz the gole Josiah and I held up in our minds as the dearest ones on earth, but 'tennyrate we decided to start for Calcutta from Hongkong, stopping on the way at Shanghai.

Samantha Goes to See Si Ann

We wuz a goin' to stop for a day or two at Shanghai and I wuz real glad on't, for I felt that I must see the Empress, Si Ann, without any more delay, and I hearn she wuz there visitin' some of her folks.

Yes, I felt that the widder Hien Fong ort to hear what I had to say to her with no further delay, and I felt too that it wuz a duty that I owed toward the nation and Josiah.

The voyage from Yokohama to Shanghai is very interesting, a part of it is through the inland sea, mountains and valleys on both sides, many islands and large and small towns all along the shores. Our hull party kep' well and all enjoyed the strange picturesque scenery, most as new to us as if we wuz on another planet. Yes, I d'no as Jupiter would look any stranger to us than the country did, or Mars or Saturn.

We wuz over a day crossin' the Yeller Sea, well named, for its water is as yeller as the sands on its shores. I'd hate to wash white clothes in it. And as we drew near Shanghai it wuz all alive with Chinese junks full of men, women and children. The children here on these boats seem to be tied up with ropes, givin' 'em room to crawl round, some as I have tied up Jonesville hens that wanted to set.

Shanghai means, "approaching the sea," and I spoze it might just as well mean approaching from the sea, as we did. Old Shanghai is surrounded by a wall and moat and is entered by six gates, the roads are only ten feet wide and dirty and bad smellin', and most of its houses are small, though there are a few very fine buildings, according to their style, lots of little piazzas jutting out everywhere with the ends turned up, that seems to be their taste; why a ruff or a piazza straight acrost would have been a boon to my Jonesville trained eyes. The houses on the principal streets are used for shops; no winders on the first floor; they are all open in front during the day and closed by heavy lattice-work at night.

Undignified Locomotion

The favorite carriage here is a wheelbarrow, the wheel in the center and a seat on each side. Josiah and I got into one, he carrying Tommy in his lap, but he sez with a groan:

"I never spozed that I should git down to this, Samantha, to ride in a wheelbarrow. What would Ury say! I am glad he can't see it, or Deacon Henzy nor any of the other Jonesville brothers and sistern."

The foreign suburbs are laid out like a European city with broad streets well lighted and clean. We went on the Bubbling Well Road, named from a boiling spring a few miles out. The road is broad and smooth as glass with beautiful villas along the way; we also passed a great number of small burying places. They have to bury folks according to the rules of Feng Shui. If Feng Shui should order a burial place in a dooryard it would have to be there. It rules buildings, customs, laws, everything. I asked a Chinaman who could talk English, what this Feng Shui wuz that they had to obey it so strictly, and he described it as being like the wind and water; like wind because you don't know where it come from nor when it would go or where; and like water because you could never know how to grasp it, it would elude you and slip away and you would have nothing in your hand to show. Miss Meechim cried out about the enormity of such a law and laid it to the evil doin's of foreigners, but Arvilly said that it wuz some like the laws we had in America, for we found out on inquiry that money would most always appease this great Feng Shui and git it to consent to most anything if it wuz paid enough, just as it did in America.

Josiah said that he had a good mind to set up some such thing in Jonesville when he got back, sez he, "I wouldn't name it Feng Shui just like this, I might call it Fine Shue or sunthin' like that. And jest see, Samantha, how handy it would be if the meetin' house went aginst me I would jest git up and lift up my hand and say, 'Fine Shue has decided. It will be as I say.' Or on lection day, if I wuzn't put up for office, or when they elect somebody besides me, or at the cheese factory if they put up another salesman, or on the beat, if they wanted another pathmaster, I'd jest call on the Fine Shue and there I'd be. Why, Samantha," sez he, gittin' carried away in his excitement, "I could git to be President jest as easy as fallin' off a log if I could make the Fine Shue work."

"Yes," sez I, "but that is a big if; but do you want to, Josiah, turn back the wheels of our civilization that are creaky and jolty enough, heaven knows, back into worse and more swampy paths than they are runnin' in now?"

"I d'no," sez Josiah, "but it would be all right if it wuz run by a man like me; a Methodist in full standin', and one of the most enlightened and Christian men of the times."

But I lifted my hand in a warnin' way and sez, "Stop, Josiah Allen, to once! such talk is imperialism, and you know I am sot like a rock aginst that. Imperialism is as much out of place in a republic as a angel in a glue factory."

Well, I am in hopes that ten thousand milds of travel will jolt some idees out of his mind.

Friends of India

WE cannot pass without special acknowledgment the valuable service that has been rendered to the India relief movement by the Hon. John Hay, Secretary of State, and Hon. John D. Long, Secretary of the Navy. When the urgent advisability of our government supplying a vessel to convey Christian America's gift of corn to starving India was laid before Secretary Hay and Secretary Long by Dr. Talmage, these official chiefs received the communication in the most sympathetic spirit, and at once set the machinery of their departments in motion to accomplish what was desired.

All honor to Secretaries Hay and Long, to Assistant Secretary Adee, to Mr. Charles M. Pepper and to all others who have contributed in any degree to this result. Their action and the sympathetic co-operation of all with whom they are officially associated, in thus carrying out the wish of the nation, will be the means of saving thousands of lives and adding new lustre to the fame of our Republic for international benevolence.

Fresh Illustrations

RELIGIOUS humdrum is the worst of all humdrum. You say over and over again, "Come to Jesus," until the phrase means absolutely nothing. Why do you not tell them a story which will make them come to Jesus in five minutes? You say that all Sunday School teachers and all evangelists and all ministers must bring their illustrations from the Bible. Christ did not when he preached. The most of the Bible was written before Christ's time, but where did he get his illustrations? He drew them from the lilies, from the ravens, from salt, from a candle, from a bushel, from long-faced hypocrites, from gnats, from moths, from large gates and small gates, from a camel, from the needle's eye, from yeast in the dough of bread, from a mustard seed, from a fishing-net, from debtors and creditors. That is the reason multitudes followed Christ. His illustrations were so easy and so understandable. Therefore, my brother Christian worker, if you and I find two illustrations from a religious subject, and the one is a Bible illustration and the other is outside the Bible, I will take the latter because I want to be like my Master.

Looking across to a hill, Christ saw the city of Jerusalem. Talking to the people about the conspicuity of Christian example, he said: "The world is looking at you; be careful. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid." While he was speaking of the divine care of God's children a bird flew past. He said: "Behold the ravens." Then looking down into the valley, all covered at that season with flowers, he said: "Consider the lilies." O, my brothers, what is the use of our going away off in some obscure part of history, or on the other side the earth to get an illustration, when the earth and the heavens are full of illustrations.

Famine Relief Work

IF evidence were needed to show that the spirit of Christ is present and active in the hearts of his followers to-day, it is found in the great work of rescue undertaken by the thousands who constitute the Relief Army that is now engaged in succoring the starving population of India. Obedient to the call of duty, these consecrated bands are sending forth their gifts, with earnest prayers that the aid may not reach too late. In almost every city, town and village, congregations, Sunday Schools, and religious societies of every denomination, are striving to be foremost in the grand, life-saving work. It is a labor which they esteem not only as a duty but a high privilege, since it is performed for the sake of Him whose whole earthly career was a ministry of sympathy for the sick, of food for the hungry, and cheer for the disconsolate.

India's cry for help has sunk deep into the heart of Christian America, and the response has been at once spontaneous and generous. But the real work of relief has only begun. $50,000 have already been cabled from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Fund to our missionaries in the famine districts and a very large number of lives have been saved and much suffering alleviated. But with all the resources at the disposal of the officials and the missionaries, the grand total of the unrelieved is almost an appalling one. It is reckoned far up in the millions. As Christian men and women, our duty is clear. It lies along the path of sacrifice and self-denial. Let every reader take the question personally to his heart: "How many lives can I save? How many of those poor emaciated brothers and sisters in that far-off stricken land can I be the means of rescuing from death, and of calling back to strength and vigor, to hope and gratitude?" Then let those who ask the question remember this:

TWO CENTS a day will support one life.
ONE DOLLAR will save a life for two months.
TWO DOLLARS will save a life until the harvest.
FIVE DOLLARS will save a man, wife and child until the next crop is gathered.
TEN DOLLARS will save a whole family from death.
TWENTY DOLLARS will save ten lives for four months.
FIFTY DOLLARS would save five families.
ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS would save a small community.

We believe there is not one among all the thousands who read this journal from week to week who cannot Save One Life at least. Some may save two, some ten, some twenty; but even the humblest may share in the work so far as to say with reverent thankfulness: "Under God, I was privileged to save one life in India." It is a precious opportunity, not to be deferred. Have you saved a life yet? If not, make haste to do it now!

All contributions for the India Famine Relief work should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, N. Y. Every gift, however small, will be acknowledged in these columns.

Education for Parenthood

CHILDREN are the hope of the world. They come bearing gifts for posterity; and we can hardly overestimate the importance of this stewardship of the future. For on the early training of children depends not only their physical life or death, but also their moral and intellectual welfare. Let us consider what a mystery children are. The speechlessness of a new-born babe, how baffling it is to us! If it could tell us what Wordsworth tells for it! If it could only say softly in our ear:

> My birth is but a sleep and a forgetting:
> The soul that rises with me, my life's star,
> Hath had elsewhere its setting,
> And cometh from afar:
> Not in entire forgetfulness,
> And not in utter darkness,
> But trailing clouds of glory, do I come
> From God, who is my home.

Whoever saw two children alike mentally? Fresh from the hands of the divinity, they still retain the infinite variety which is one of the marks of the boundless wealth of his creative power. In a few years—alas, how few!—they will take on the stereotyped forms of the class to which they belong; but for a little while heaven lies about them, and they dwell among us, so much of this world, and so much of that; without any sense of ills to come, or care beyond the day. At this time, any one who can come close to a child's inner life comes very close to the kingdom of heaven. Such an experience is better for us than the lives of the saints or the writings of the schoolmen; it is an epistle, a living epistle, written by the finger of God on an innocent and guileless heart.

What sublimity of faith these little ones possess. The angels believe, for they know and see. Men believe, on good and indisputable "evidences." A little child believes in God and loves its Saviour, simply on our representation. We ask science and philosophy to explain to us; we are terrified, but not instructed, by the eternal silence of the infinite spaces above and around us. But if in spiritual things we abandon intellect as a blind guide and seek God through the heart, then a little child can best of all lead us.

Not only have they a natural faith, they have also the most pure and delicate fancy. Children are the rarest poets, and it was of them God thought when he made the flowers and the birds and the butterflies. Their voices are the natural key of music; their graceful carriage and sprightly abandon, the very poetry of motion. As Michael Angelo's imprisoned angel pleaded out of the dumb marble, so the divinity within them pleads in the beauty of their forms, the clear heaven of their eyes, and the white purity of their souls for knowledge and enlargement.

Is it not amazing then that not one word of instruction is officially and regularly given in our schools, to the youths and maidens who are to become the future fathers and mothers of the republic, as to their duties in that condition? This neglect is so universal and so nearly absolute, that if in some future millennium, our descendants should stumble upon the curriculum of any of our colleges or public schools they would be puzzled and confounded at the omission; or else they will gravely and learnedly argue that "these programmes of study must have referred to those monastic institutions of the age, and have been intended for celibates." It is time, it is full time, that we recognized the great fact that an education for parenthood is necessary if the race is to grow with the ages in moral and physical beauty. For if it does not, our inheritance will be taken from us and we shall pass away into the list of effete, worn-out nationalities.

This education should lead possible parents to consider the past, as well as the future. Who shall deliver a man from his ancestors? The most distant of them still live in some extent in each individual man and woman. And if the fathers have eaten sour grapes who, or what, shall prevent the children's teeth from being set on edge? Not nature. She is inexorable. An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth, is her law. But between the broken law and its entailed consequences stands the mother, invested with a power which makes her a Nemesis or a Redeemer.

This is the unwritten scripture in every mother's heart; and in all ages there have been noble women who have hearkened to its teachings. The son which Hannah prayed so earnestly for, and gave unto the Lord before his birth, inherited a soul which had been to school before it drew its first breath. Slaves suckle slaves; pure and enthusiastic women bring forth saints and heroes. All history attests the fact that as a rule great men have had great mothers. But if the grace and dignity of motherhood is lightly esteemed, or if it is felt to be an unwelcome burden, then there is the gravest danger of the babe growing to pre-natal maturity in unloving and unsympathetic solitude. The conscious want will make itself felt, either in mental or in physical weakness; or in a deficiency of those affections, which in their plenitude make humanity but a little lower than the angels. Parents often complain of unloving and ungrateful children; perhaps if personal inquisition was made, they might be forced to acknowledge the unhappy case the inevitable reflex consequence of children nourished on bitter or repining thoughts, and brought into the world in a spirit of regret and grudging.

Those who look thoughtfully forward to the future tremble when they reflect on what slight holds hang even the physical welfare of new generations; and yet the world cannot afford now to have its children left to chance, to ignorant nurses, careless mothers, and all the cruelties born of want of thought, and want of knowledge. There is something pitiful in seeing a thoughtless mother with an unfolding soul and body to deal with. What no knowledge is sufficient for her ignorance accepts with a confident presumption, and her want of thought often produces as great evil as if it was intentional wrong. Without consideration the child's most natural emotions are checked and its sense of right wounded. How often children are forbidden to play, though play is the first poetry of life. How often they are told "not to play with other children," though only children are fit to play with children. How often children are made to do things, not because they ought to do them, but by threats and bribes. How often they are told that a thing is not bitter when it is bitter; that it won't hurt when it will hurt. How often do parents insist on truthfulness from children and yet set them a constant example of lying by making promises—whether of punishments or pleasures—they never perform. How often children are taunted for crying under pain, and for being angry under a sense of injustice, when every day they see their parents giving place to unreasonable wrath and venting upon their innocent heads scoldings which they do not deserve! Yet in the nursery, as well as in the world, only that discipline is just and salutary which "visits on all conduct, good or bad, the natural consequences, pleasant or painful, which in the nature of things such conduct tends to bring."

Intellectually, the ignorance of parents as parents is just as fatal. Primers are in little hands which ought to know only the skipping-rope or the hoop, for no child wants books till it has exhausted the objects and processes of the house, the streets and the fields. What can a primer teach a little child in comparison with a loving mother who answers patiently, as she goes about her household duties, the never-ending questions of a curious child? Is she making bread? What a story she has to tell of the growing fields of wheat—the reaping and the grinding. The pinch of salt will furnish material for a tale of mines and miners more wonderful than many a fairy tale. The log of wood, the piece of coal, the lump of sugar, the tea, the coffee, the bunch of raisins! What does a child want with a primer till these things have been explained to him? And then there are the store windows, and the men building houses! Oh, there are living primers on every side, if parents will only take the trouble to explain them.

Now, original sin is bad enough; let us not as parents add to it evil examples and neglect. We that teach, "thou shalt not lie"—do we lie?" We that teach, "be just and patient and kind"—are we just and patient and kind? We that teach our children "to love"—do we love? For if we teach them by our example to love God and all that God has made, we teach them more than the whole Ten Commandments.

These duties and many others are included in the necessary education for parenthood. The subject is wide and high and deep, and time is continually adding to its gravity. But it is also reciprocal. Very soon parents—if they have eyes to see and ears to hear—begin to learn from their children rare knowledge; mysteries that are revealed unto babes and hid from the men full of years and high on the staff of worldly wisdom. We must remember that in old Jerusalem, he that spake as never man spake "took a little child and set him in the midst" for an example. So then children, while they are given to our charge, are also set for our instruction. Like them, we are to receive the kingdom of God, believing without a cavil or a doubt in our Father's declarations. Like them, we are to depend on our Father in heaven for our daily bread, being careful for nothing. Like them, we are to retain no resentments, and, if angry, to be easily pacified. Like them, we are to be free from ambition and avarice and disdain. These things are not natural to us; if they had been, Christ would not have said: "Ye must become as little children."

The Exposition Opened

GREAT crowds of persons famous in French society gathered on April 14 in the Exposition buildings, in Paris, to witness the inaugural ceremonies. M. Loubet, President of the French Republic, officiated and declared the Exposition open. The declaration, however, applied to the external construction only. The interior of the beautiful buildings was in an unfinished condition, and nearly all of the exhibits are still enclosed in packing cases. During the past few weeks extraordinary efforts have been put forth to get the Exposition ready for the opening day; but it was impossible to do more than have the shell completed. A few weeks will be needed to spread before visitors the wonders that have been pouring into France in bewildering abundance from every country. No country except France will have so many exhibits as the United States. There are 6,564 American exhibitors, while Belgium, which comes next in order of number, has 2,500. Russia has 1,500 and Great Britain only 600. The wings of the huge edifice in which the American exhibits will be placed, are not yet built. Commissioner Peck, who has charge of the American department, has worked with characteristic energy and hopes to distance all rivals in having the exhibits in place. There was a universal expression of admiration of the beautiful buildings. Artists who have seen the World's Fairs of many countries declare that the French Exposition surpasses all of them in the beauty and variety of the architecture. Delicate pinks and whites, subdued greens and pale blues and purples shine forth on a misty background of gray. The scene, viewed from an elevation, is like a vision of fairyland. Towers, minarets, gorgeous domes rich in gilding, flashing finials and graceful columns are on all sides, and picturesque palaces surrounded by gardens glitter in the sunlight. The prevailing tone of the speeches at the inauguration was one of peace and amity and good-will to all. For the time, the people whom Browning describes as "the rip-and-rending nation," seem to be anxious to conciliate all nations and to be hospitable to all, regardless of nationality, who will come to Paris and spend their money. It would be a happy result of the Exposition if it should lead both hosts and guests to turn their thoughts away from war and greed of territory to the peaceful channels of trade and industry and to ask of themselves the question of the prophet:

Wherefore do ye spend your money for that which is not bread and your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me and eat ye that which is good and let your soul delight itself in fatness (Isa. 55: 2).

An Immigrant's Mistake

One of the officers of the Jefferson Market Police Court in New York arrested a man for a mistake a few days ago. The officer went into the private room connected with the court to use the telephone that was there. He was astonished at seeing a stranger in the room. The stranger was similarly disconcerted by the officer's entrance. On being questioned his answers were so apologetic and confused that the officer was convinced that he was a burglar on the outlook for plunder, and he forthwith took him before the magistrate. Here he was further questioned and apparently thought he had better tell the whole truth. He said he had only recently come to this country. Remembering that it was Lent, he thought he would go to confession, so he started out to find a church. When he saw the police court, which has a somewhat ecclesiastical appearance, he entered, concluding that it was a church. He was trying to find a priest when the officer entered and arrested him. The janitor of the building came to his aid by telling the magistrate that the mistake was a common one among immigrants. The magistrate accepted the explanation and telling the man that his sins were forgiven, allowed him to depart. It may be hoped that the immigrant would understand that the magistrate was only joking. He should still seek the forgiveness of his sins, and this he may obtain when he quits seeking it from man and applies to Christ.

Him hath God exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour for to give repentance to Israel and forgiveness of sins (Acts 5: 31).

Wedded by Wire

A strange marriage ceremony is reported from Kansas City, Mo. A gentleman who is in the government service at Washington, D. C., went to Kansas City a few days ago, to make arrangements for his marriage. The bride was the daughter of a farmer in Oklahoma Territory, and she and her father and other members of her family were to journey to Kansas City to meet the bridegroom. At the last moment, however, it was found that the bride's relatives were unable to go to Kansas City on the day fixed. As the bridegroom had to return to Washington the next day to attend to his duties, it appeared that the wedding must be indefinitely postponed. Both parties were reluctant to do this, and finally, after consulting a lawyer, it was decided to have the wedding ceremony performed by telegraph. The telegraph company placed a direct wire at the service of the parties. The bridegroom went with a clergyman to the telegraph office in Kansas City and the bride and her friends went to the telegraph office at Mulhall, O. T. The clergyman asked the necessary questions which were wired to Mulhall and read off by the telegraph agent there to the assembled party. The bride's answers were wired to Kansas City and read by the telegraph agent there to the bridegroom's party. In this way the ceremony was completed and the clergyman pronounced the two man and wife. The bride was to start on the next day for Washington to meet her husband, to whom in this unusual manner she had plighted her troth. There would be no need for any repetition of the marriage ceremony, but there will doubtless be a very hearty welcome awaiting her and cordial congratulations from her husband's friends at the Capital. How many there are who will enter the capital of the universe in that way when they have crossed the dark river of death. They will be received as a bride, having pledged themselves to Christ on earth and been united to him by a living faith!

Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory which thou hast given me (John 17: 24).

THE AMERICAN PAVILION AT THE PARIS EXPOSITION

The Cost of an Epidemic

One of the towns within easy reach of New York is realizing how much may be lost by the occurrence of a few cases of a contagious disease. The first case was reported early in March, and the last case has already been cured. But the news that the disease had existed in any degree was enough to do serious injury to the industries of the town dependent on the visits of strangers. By this time the real estate agents have usually rented all their desirable houses, while the hotels and boarding houses have all the applications for rooms that they can meet. But this Spring there has been so far absolutely no evidence of a desire on the part of New Yorkers to come to the village, either to its hotels or its cottages, and owners and managers are wondering if this indifference is to be permanent in view of the fact that all trace of the disease which caused the alarm has disappeared. There is doubtless no need now to fear contagion, but the visitors will not go yet. They dread the possibility of it and will avoid the slightest risk. It is much to be wished that the same care was used to avoid moral contagion, which is much more disastrous.

Ponder the path of thy feet; turn not to the right nor to the left; remove thy foot from evil (Prov. 4: 26, 27).

Locating a Magnetic Pole

A brief cable dispatch from New Zealand announces the arrival at Wellington of the Borchgrevink expedition, which has been exploring in the Antarctic regions. It was apparently unable to reach the South Pole, which was the highest object of Mr. Borchgrevink's hope, but it has located the southern magnetic pole. This news is deemed very important by scientists and will afford valuable aid in the solution of many difficult problems. About sixty years ago Captain James Ross made an effort to reach this spot, but was unable to do so, though he believed it was not more than three hundred miles from the region he penetrated. The northern magnetic pole was discovered in 1833, but since that time there has been reason to suspect that it was not stationary, but traveled over a circle of unknown diameter. If Mr. Borchgrevink has really discovered the south magnetic pole, this doubtful question may have been settled and with it the law of the mysterious variations of the mariner's compass, which have puzzled scientists for many generations. The whole problem of terrestrial magnetism may thus be brought nearer solution. Scientists will be the chief gainers by the discovery. The ordinary mariner finds that, for all practical purposes, it is sufficient for him to know that the needle of his compass points to the north, wherever he may be sailing. It is so with theological problems; theologians are very earnest in discussing them, but the humble Christian does not have to wait for their solution in order to find his way to heaven.

The wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein (Isa. 35: 8).

A Will in a Letter

A remarkable story of an unexpected inheritance is published by a journal of Philadelphia, Penn. It appears that some six months ago, a blacksmith living at Lawrenceville, died. It was generally supposed that he was comparatively poor, but after his death his bank books and securities showed that he had accumulated about fifty thousand dollars. No will could be found and several distant relatives put in claims for a division of the estate. There was none of them who had seen much of him during his life and the only friend he had who was very intimate with him was a man living at Pittsburg. He had written to this friend shortly before his death, saying that he did not think that he should live long, and if he died soon, he wished the man who worked for him to have his shop and his servant to have his furniture and the friend to whom he was writing to have all the remainder of his property. His friend did not think that the remainder would be of much value, and so little importance did he attach to the letter that he used the blank page at the back of it to make some memoranda on, relating to his own business. When, however, he heard that there was no will and that the property was so valuable, he showed the letter to his lawyer, who told him that it constituted a valid will and advised him to make his claim at once, which he has now done. A similar surprise awaits many who now hold God's Word in light esteem. They have no idea what a glorious inheritance they might obtain by heeding its teachings and claiming the promises made therein to all who fulfil the conditions.

Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him (I. Cor. 2: 9).

BRIEF NOTES

The Hospitality Committee of the Ecumenical Conference of Foreign Missionaries needs funds to provide for the entertainment of its consecrated guests. The receipts at present fall short of the estimated expenses by fifteen thousand dollars. All contributions to the fund sent to this journal will be acknowledged in its columns.

Rev. Joseph Norwood, the agent for the American Bible Society in Colombia, has set at rest the anxiety that has been felt for some weeks as to his safety. It was feared that his silence was due to some disaster connected with the hostilities in his field. He briefly reports that he made his escape from Bucaramanga and has reached Baranguilla safely, which appears to imply that he has been in some kind of peril.

The Northfield Students' Conference will be held as usual next July. It was feared that owing to Mr. Moody's death this conference to which students all over this country and in foreign lands have been so much indebted would not be held. There is no doubt, however, that Mr. Moody would have deplored any cessation in this matter occurring through his death. Mr. John R. Mott, one of the most prominent leaders of the movement, will preside.

The new Metropolitan Tabernacle in London to replace the old one, so long the scene of the labors of Pastor C. H. Spurgeon, is approaching completion. The fire which destroyed the famous edifice occurred April 20, 1898. The congregation has been worshiping in the basement of the new building since Jan. 1, 1899. The cost of the new tabernacle will be $220,000, one half of which was obtained from the insurance company with which the old tabernacle was insured.

All Help to Fill the Famine Ship

CONTRIBUTIONS FOR THE CARGO POURING IN—DR. KLOPSCH SAILS FOR INDIA TO SUPERVISE THE DISTRIBUTION

WHEN this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches the hands of its readers, the proprietor of this journal will already be far on the way to India. Dr. Klopsch sailed from New York on April 14th. It was his purpose, on reaching London, to consult with the Secretary of State for India, as to the best methods of doing effective relief work. On arriving in Bombay, he will meet the members of the Inter-denominational Committee, through whom the relief work is conducted, and will arrange with them plans for the distribution of the cargo of American corn to arrive soon thereafter on the steamer supplied by the generosity of our own government to convey the offering of American benevolence. It is expected that the corn-ship will reach Bombay within a week or ten days after his arrival, thus allowing ample time for all preparations, including transportation of the life-saving food to the famine-stricken provinces of the interior.

Dr. Klopsch's visit to India, like his experiences in Russia and Cuba during the time when plague and famine were devastating those countries, is undertaken with a due sense of the dangers and inconveniences attending such a journey, and especially in the season of the greatest tropical heat in India, when sickness is most prevalent. But he has always felt that he owes it to the great army of self-sacrificing contributors to the Famine Fund that he, as their representative, should stand ready to respond to the call of duty, wherever it might lead, in the interest of the work they have entrusted to his care. Even his own household, though at first reluctant, soon realized the advisability of the step, and he goes with the warmest wishes and the prayers of his wife, friends and associates that he may be made serviceable in the saving of life and the alleviation of suffering in that stricken land. He will exercise general supervision of the distribution of the food cargo, and will remain until all the allotments are made and the last bushel of corn has safely reached its destination. He will personally visit some of the interior districts, where the distress is most acute, and will thus be in a position to note the effect of the relief afforded through the benevolence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers and their friends. It should be added that his going to India is undertaken without expense to the Famine Fund.

There is, unhappily, no improvement in the condition of the afflicted country. The latest information we have is in a cable message published by the New York Herald which states that the number now actually starving has risen to ten millions. This, of course, does not include the vast number, estimated at more than twenty millions, of whom no official count can be made. They are starving in their villages remote from the government relief camps and are dependent only on the missionaries who having established preaching stations in those villages in former years, going there now witness the suffering of the people. Happily they do not go empty-handed. Through the generous help of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD they are enabled to give relief to large numbers of starving native Christians, and have saved a multitude of lives. The recent remittance of twenty-five thousand dollars has been apportioned by our Inter-denominational Committee in such a way as to give immediate relief to the most urgent cases, especially to the women and children. But even that magnificent gift is small compared with the need. We do not realize the number represented by the word "million," until we find that to keep a million persons alive for only one day at the cost of only two cents a head, would require an expenditure of twenty thousand dollars.

The central provinces appear to be suffering now as acutely as Western India. Mr. Donald Sweaton, a member of the Viceroy's Council, who has just returned from a tour through those provinces, thus describes their condition: "For hundreds of miles on end not a single stalk of corn or even dry stubble was seen, nor yet a blade of green pasture. There was no water, except in the larger rivers and streams. The deepest tanks and reservoirs, which never had been known to run dry, are now dry as a rock. The whole country is now one vast, bare, brown lonely desert, where in ordinary seasons one may see busy threshing floors studded all over with heaps of grain."

Rev. E. B. Lavalette, superintendent of the Methodist Episcopal Orphanage at Aligarh, says: "The number of people in India who are seriously affected by the famine is equal to the entire population of the United States, and nine-tenths of these would starve if it were not for charity. As it is, the number of deaths attributable to starvation, which two weeks ago were twenty-eight in the thousand, are now forty-five in the thousand. There is no end in these times to opportunities of doing good with money. If the people at home could only see the sights that we see daily, their gifts would be increased tenfold."

Dr. R. A. Hume, of Ahmednagar, writes: "You will like to know what has been done with the thousand dollars you remitted to me from the fund contributed by your generous readers. We were anxious to make the money go as far as possible. We therefore set some starving weavers to work, and I have now over two hundred employed. We pay women to prepare the yarn, by this means supporting them. The yarn is supplied to the weavers, who receive eight annas (sixteen cents) for weaving one garment; then we sell the garments at half price, or in case of necessity give them away. The money realized is added to the fund, so as to make it last as long as possible. In some districts water may be obtained by deepening the wells or digging new ones. Where this is possible, we set the people to work at low wages. They are thus paid for work which will produce results of general utility. Besides this, we supply a quarter of a measure of grain daily to every child whose parents cannot provide for it. In these ways and in direct relief to the aged and the sick, the money has been spent. Every penny of it is now gone and we are anxiously waiting in the hope that more money may come to enable us to continue the work. I enclose the photograph of a girl whom we rescued. The picture was taken on the day that we received her with many others. She is now much improved and we think she will live. In the name of multitudes, and in the spirit of the Master, I thank you all." The photograph Dr. Hume refers to, showed emaciation so terrible that we dare not publish it.

FOUR FAMINE CHILDREN RESCUED AT AHMEDNAGAR

It is a significant fact in view of the criticisms launched at the British Government, that large numbers of people are leaving the native states that are affected by the famine and are going to the relief camps in the provinces under British rule where they are fed and cared for. It is evident that if all India were under native rule, the people would be far worse off than they now are. That they should leave the provinces ruled by native potentates and go to the British provinces, is practical proof that they find there the help that is not given by rulers of their own race.

From nearly every section of the Union comes cheering news of the progress of the relief movement, which promises to eclipse all former benevolences of this character. Every mail brings intelligence of enthusiastic work in churches, Sunday Schools, religious societies and town and village communities, and the prospects are that many thousands of God's people of all denominations will be represented in the life-saving cargo of corn which the first relief ship will shortly convey from New York to India. The Kansas India Famine Relief Committee, through Mr. T. J. Anderson, its Secretary, has expressed a desire to send its gift of corn to India in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S relief ship, in company with the offerings of the other states.

From among the letters containing contributions which have reached this office during the past few days, we make the following extracts which show that the Christian principle Mr. Moody suggested in his appeal published last week, is operating on many hearts and lives:

M. E. E., Iowa. Enclosed find money order for two dollars. This is the widow's two mites, and may God bless and multiply it so that it will keep some mother and child from starving. I think he will, for he knows what sacrifice I am making to send even so small a sum. I have but a short time to work for my Master, so I am anxious to do the most that I can, and I think he will like me to help the poor and the starving.

Cleveland, O. "There is a lad here who hath five barley loaves and two small fishes, but what are they among so many?" Three dollars enclosed.

J. L. S. In the name of Him who gave me the strength to earn this dollar, I send it to feed the hungry in India.

D. B. H., New York. "Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble." I have proved it many times.

O. M. S., Salt Air, O. Enclosed find order for twenty dollars, which was raised by a committee chosen by our Bible class. We live in a country place and hold Sunday School in the schoolhouse. We have one Bible class. At one of our meetings the India famine was talked of and we thought it an opportunity to put our Christianity into practice. The gifts ranged from a nickel to five dollars.

Mrs. Lizzie Stone, DeKalb, Ill. I have been deeply touched by the suffering of the people of India as described by you; but my own mite seemed so small in comparison with the need, that I did not like to send it, so I went among my neighbors and told them about it and they all gave something, so now I send you eleven dollars with the names of the thirty-four contributors.

25,462. I send you a money-order for ten dollars for the starving people of India. Please do not put my name in the paper, as I am very poor and have to work very hard for a living and I am ashamed to have people know that I have given away so large a sum—that is so large a sum for me to give—but it is hard to know that people are starving to death. I cannot bear that that should be going on while I have any money.

Ruth Detwiler, Bessie Fritz and Ruth Henderson, of Kimberton, Pa.: Enclosed you will find $1.25 for the benefit of the starving people of India. We are three little girls, and we earned this money by making taffy and selling it.

Wm. D. Laumaster, Danville, Pa. We have in connection with our Y. M. C. A. a Boys' Bible Class, the members of which vary in age from eight to twelve years. A few weeks ago I told them how the boys and girls of India were suffering, and suggested that the class should help them. Gifts would be welcome, from a penny to a dime. They have brought $6, which I turn over to you, to be appropriated to the famine relief.

WARNINGS AND INVITATIONS

By DR. and MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

International Sunday School Lesson for May 6: Matt. 11: 20-30. | Golden Text, Matt. 11: 28: Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest.

WOE { TO THOSE WHO ARE } CHRIST-REJECTERS. BLIND TO TRUTH. CARELESS.

WELCOME { TO THE } Childlike vs. 25, 26. Sin-weary (v. 27). Workers (vs. 28, 29).

REST From sin (v. 28). In work (v. 29). From worry (Matt. 6: 34). In heaven (Heb. 4: 9).

1. Print on the board "Woe" as above, and ask, "Against what cities did Christ utter a "woe"? Print after the answer, C for Capernaum, B for Bethsaida, and C for Chorazin. Then show, as above, why the people of these cities were on the way to woe, and at the same time what classes of people to-day are in like case. Fewer perish of wilful rejection than of careless indifference. From other woes of the Bible (assignment to be looked up) show other sins that brought ruin and sorrow to cities and individuals. As to Tyre, see Isa. 23. Impurity destroyed Sodom; drunkenness, Samaria; Sabbath breaking, Jerusalem.

2. From the comes of the lesson and the comes of the Bible (assignment), show whom Christ welcomes. As in this lesson, so all through the Bible the severest and tenderest words are found together, a lesson for one-sided preachers and teachers who fail to combine mercy and justice.

3. From Bible promises of "rest," show four kinds of rest, as above, that Christ gives.

Cities to be Saved Then he began to upbraid the cities. The Old Testament prophets spoke mostly to cities and nations, not to separate individuals. Christ spoke oftenest to the individual soul, but sometimes to the city or to the church as a whole. See his tearful appeal to Jerusalem.

Christians talk about the sins of their own city as if they were not their own sins, even when Christian citizenship has influence and votes enough to purge them away. A lady who had moved into a certain town on account of its splendid reputation for morality, got up in a prayer meeting and said that she had lived in the place several months and did not see that it was so much better than other places. A gentleman who was present rose and said, "My good woman, what have you done to make the town better since you came here?"

Christ said less of political duty than the prophets because in the despotism then existing his followers could do nothing political except to pay tribute. We should therefore look to the prophets for civic guidance.

Doomed Cities Woe unto thee, Chorazin . . . Bethsaida . . . Capernaum . . . Tyre and Sidon . . . Sodom. We know that the three cities first named were all on the northern shores of the Lake of Galilee, but the traveler stands by their three nameless graves, not knowing surely which is which. With many other graves of famous cities under our eyes as we travel; with Spain, France and Turkey dying before our eyes, every patriot should take heed to the dangerous symptoms in our own body politic.

It is not a threat, but a warning of the consequences of violating great laws of the universe, when the Bible says that the nation that will not serve God shall perish. The woes which follow sin are not by an arbitrary, personal decree of God, but like those which come by the violation of physical laws that are for the general good. It is best for all that woe should follow pride and envy and anger and unbelief and rejection of Christ, just as it is best that woe should follow intemperance, that men may be kept from it. "Whatsoever a man soweth" in soul or soil "that shall he also reap."

ORIENTAL BURDEN-BEARER

More tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment. The judgment day of nations is in this world, but the final judgment of citizens is in the next world. Our human judgment deals most severely with ignorant offenders, but Christ's rule is, The greater the light, the greater the condemnation for disregarding it. Our light at the end of nineteen Christian centuries is as much greater than Capernaum's, as Capernaum's was greater than Sodom's.

A man was dying in a large city in California, whither he had gone from his family to make his fortune. His Christian wife had urged him by word and letter for many years to become a Christian. He acknowledged that he ought to do so, but said he must make a hundred thousand dollars first. Again and again she pressed the matter, only to receive the same answer. By letter she interested a California pastor in her husband, and he, also, pressed the duty of immediate loyalty to conscience again and again, but was always put off with the same excuse. At length death stood by this man's bed. The preacher tried to lead him to death-bed repentance by the story of the penitent thief whom Christ forgave on the Cross. "There is no encouragement in that," cried the dying man in a tone of fierce despair. "The dying thief did not have a Christian wife and kind pastor urging him for years to do his duty." And so he died.

Thou hast hid these things from the wise . . . and revealed them unto babes. This seems to intimate that those whose doom Christ had pronounced had fallen through the blindness of their own pride. Professing themselves to be wise, they had become fools. They had rejected One whom the world would later count its noblest Leader; while the lowlier, humbler apostles, in child-like trust, had accepted the truth. So in every age the man who thinks he knows it all is soon distanced by the humbler man who is willing to learn. Many of the world's famous men have been unhappy despite worldly success, because they have been too proud to follow Christ.

Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy-laden. Orientals carry loads that would appall even a baggage expressman who shoulders Saratoga trunks. Men in Constantinople wear a saddle by which they carry loads upstairs heavier than we would strap on a horse for a level road. The pictures on old tablets show many as "heavy-laden."

A lady who had sat under Mr. Beecher's preaching for several years, and who had been a member of the church for some time, carried a burden which she felt she could not share with her family. She finally resolved to tell Mr. Beecher the story. One night after prayer-meeting she stopped Mr. Beecher and told him all, closing with the sentence: "I come to you for comfort." Mr. Beecher looked at her sternly, and said: "Come to me for comfort! Have you sat so long under my preaching and not learned where to go for comfort? Have I so utterly failed?" With tears in his eyes he turned and left her. She said, in telling the story, "Oh, how crushed, how humiliated, how hurt I was for five minutes! Then the glorious revelation that came to my soul when I caught his meaning! The Father had given to every one, even to me, his holy Comforter. Not a human, but a divine Guide, Help, Comforter."

How Christ Rests Us Take my yoke upon you and learn of me. Here is the profound truth so few have learned, that the noblest rest is not rest from work, but rest in work. The art of resting Christ teaches us by his own example. The rest which Christ gives us, he gives by inspiring us to take up the burden which before we tried to pass by, and by teaching us to see in him a burden-bearer who shares our burdens.

Rest is not quitting the busy career,
Rest is the fitting of self to one's sphere.

To work without worry, rejoicing to use our strength as the yokefellow of Christ in loving service of man, some of us know this is more restful than "pleasure exertions." Neither prince nor tramp has any right to be idle. Work is not a curse but a part of the blessing of Eden, where God gave man a garden to dress and to keep. Work has become a curse only as it has been mixed with sin which has crowded in too many hours a day, or too many days a week on the one hand, or has made the workman a "clock watcher," with no heart in his work, no appreciation that in every honest work one is a fellow-worker with God, and should count his work a share in the divine gladness. Christ's yoke is easy and his burden is light, as compared with the service of sin and selfishness. Christian duty as a burden. Augustine likened to the bird's wing, which it bears indeed, but is also upborne by it. "We get nearest to Christ when we are suffering with him; next nearest when we are working with him. It is loneliness in work that makes work hard. The solitary worker is a sad worker. He who works with Christ is never solitary and never need be sad. Work then becomes a privilege and a joy." There is one rest Christ gives (v. 28), rest from sin, and another which we are to "find" (v. 28), to acquire, rest in glad service. It is of this Wesley sings, "Let us find that second rest."

I will give you rest. It is said that Americans do not know how to rest. Rest hunting is common enough and leads multitudes on many a fruitless trail. Neither home, nor bed, nor Sabbath, nor vacation can give real rest to one whose soul is undecided, unsettled, untrue.

The faithful Betty the pillow beats
And smooths the blankets and airs the sheets,
And gives the mattress a shaking;
But vainly Betty performs her part
If an aching head and a wounded heart
As well as the couch want making.

In India, where in many parts heavy burdens and packs are carried by men on their backs, stones are set up by the roadside of just a right height for a man to rest his burden on. Against the stone he can lean and rest, the whole weight of the burden being on the stone. In another part of India the burdens are carried on the men's heads, and there they have resting places with a shaded seat, and a high shelf on which the burden can easily be placed. These rests are called sumatangas. "Ah, Sahib, Christ is all my hope. Christ is my Sumatanga!" said a native Christian of Travancore, when trying to express to a missionary how his trust in Christ rested his soul.

THE CITY AND BAY OF SIDON AS THEY APPEAR TO-DAY

RUINS ON THE REPUTED SITE OF CHORAZIN

A Missionary Story Ye shall find rest unto your souls. A distinguished missionary to India, Rev. Dr. Jacob Chamberlain, tells an incident connected with a missionary tour into the interior of that country. Before starting he and his helpers took a vow on their knees that they would pass no town or city on their way, however hostile, without preaching the Gospel. They came to one city where a mob had gathered to withstand them. Dr. Chamberlain leaned against a pillar and in a loud voice said: "I have a secret which I have come to tell you. I see that you want to kill me, and I am willing to die, but first I want to leave that secret behind me. Select five of your number; I will tell it to them, then you may kill me, and you may decide whether or not you will let the five tell it to you." Five were selected, and in a low voice Dr. Chamberlain began the story of his secret. He chanted to them in music they had often heard: "O Vishnu, O Vishnu!" The people hearing the song, drew nearer, and seeing this, Dr. Chamberlain chanted in stronger tones more of the familiar song: "O, Vishnu! all our bathings and all our pilgrimages are powerless to lift off from us the burden of sin! O Vishnu! O Vishnu! How shall we find relief from this burden of sin?" The people almost unconsciously joined in the singing, and kept drawing nearer as they sang. Then Dr. Chamberlain began to talk openly to them of his secret, which was that Christ is the wonderful lifter of the burden of sin. The people listened, and at the close they purchased eighty copies of the Bible and many tracts, that they might learn more about what they had heard of the rest Christ gives to the soul by delivering it from the guilt, the power and the very love of sin. In the words of Augustine: "O God, thou hast made us for thyself, and our souls are restless till they rest in thee." We cannot rest in mere forms, whether heathen or Christian, but only in a real companionship with the living Christ.

For Youngest Classes Point of contact. Get the children to tell about times when they were tired and climbed into mamma's lap for her to rest them. Help them to recall the gentle words, and closely folding arms of mother, and of father, too, sometimes. Tell them that God gives to little children parents who know how to rest them, so that they may learn that their heavenly Father will rest them. And, too, he sent Jesus into this world to rest people who were sick and in sorrow. Recall the familiar story of Jesus taking little children in his arms and blessing them. Tell them how little children can go to Jesus now to be rested and comforted by praying to him, by singing a sweet song about his love. Repeat the Golden Text.

CLOTHED IN SACKCLOTH

... Under the Evening Lamp ...

By Margaret E. Sangster

THE MOTHER'S WAY

I WAS, oh, so busy, one morning,
For of work there was much to be done:
Of sewing and sweeping and baking,
And all ere the set of the sun.

And I fear I was cross to my darling
As he toddled around in my way,
For, with quivering lips and eyes tear-filled,
He turned from my look away.

But soon came the smiles and sunshine—
So brief is the baby's woe—
And he came again to my table,
Some new "pitty fing" to show.

I looked, and behold, 'twas my workbox—
But in what disordered array!
Thread, worsteds and ribbons together,
One mass of hues, dull and gay.

And my baby was looking so happy,
So pleased with his pretty new toy,
His blue eyes sparkling and dancing,
Alight with an innocent joy.

And what did I do—did I scold him?
Ah, mothers! I'm sure that you know;
Why, I took him right up in my arms then
And covered with kisses his brow.

'Tis thus with our Heavenly Father:
How often we err, who can tell?
But he gathers us up in his bosom,
Forgives and forgets—all is well.

Elgin, Ill. AGNES M. LUNDGREN.

RUSSIAN WOMEN AND CHILDREN

IN our own land one often sees the little mothers, girls of ten and twelve years old or even younger, who carry the children in their arms and take care of them from morning until night. A minister in East London saw a little maiden staggering across the street, under the dead weight of a very heavy child. "That is too great a load for you, my dear," he said kindly. She turned upon him a face lit with smiles, and answered cheerily, "Oh, no! indeed, he's my brother." The wide world over the mother instinct is found in the woman child. It crops out in her tender care for her doll and her pride in it, and everywhere, in her loving and devoted helpfulness in looking after smaller brothers and sisters.

These people of Russia belong to the Greek church and are often devout worshipers of God, though as often they are very ignorant. To Father John, a priest of the Greek church, we owe a great deal to-day, for an example of faith in God, and for apostolic living. In all churches God keeps lamps burning brightly for himself.

The tent has been struck and these people are resting midway on a journey. The older lady, seated on the floor, is musing rather pensively on friends whom she has left behind. Her children, too, are seated. The others standing are ready to wait on her whenever their simple meal shall be cooked, and by-and-by sleep will descend upon them all, and quiet rest, preparing them for another day, will be the Heavenly Father's gift. In every land, and under every sky, the essence of home is the same; and home is incomplete without woman's presence and love, and her wise and guiding hand at the helm.

Mont Lawn, the Children's Home

With the advent of the warm weather, we begin to think and plan for the little ones again, and not only for those who dwell in our own households, whom we tuck into bed at night and awaken with kisses in the morning, but also for that large CHRISTIAN HERALD family, who are gathered every summer into the beautiful home at Nyack, New York. Six years have passed since the children of the poorest districts of the great metropolis found out that a good samaritan was ready to give them ten days of heaven every year, ten days of green fields and daisies, of sweet, clean beds, kind care and good food. They are brought to Mont Lawn pallid, stunted, sorrowful; they go thence rosy, well-fed and strong, with a store of happy things to tell mamma about and a generous desire to send their little mates where they have been. The children are taken without reference to nationality or religion; their want is their sufficient plea. Parties are going and coming all summer; a kind matron and a force of loving assistants care for them, and two thousand are thus entertained during June, July and August, at a cost of $3.00 apiece. Our readers who have generously sustained Mont Lawn will not forget its needs this year.

Eight Hour Shifts for Servants

The plan suggested or tried by whomsoever, of setting an eight-hour limit to the work of domestic servants is bound to collapse for two reasons. One is the old and familiar one, that woman's work is never done; the other is, that a girl engaged in the kitchen or elsewhere in the house, does not forge forward steadily for a given set of hours, as a young woman does in folding books, or making paper boxes, or stitching men's neck-ties, or working behind a counter. In housework there are little rests which come between times, when any girl who is a good manager may for a few minutes take her ease in a rocking chair, or read the newspaper, or do her sewing. She is not on continuous duty as in other occupations. One bright little second maid whom I know has read in her odd moments The Manxman and David Harum, and last week asked whether the family had finished To Have and to Hold, as she wished to read it, having heard it discussed as she waited on the table. A girl, thrifty of time, can contrive a good deal of rest for herself in the days' work.

In a New Jersey town where I have friends, many of the servants, who have no people belonging to them, hire a room and pay its monthly rent. There they keep their possessions, there they go when they have a day out, and there they gossip over cups of tea on Sunday afternoons with cronies whom they love. It strikes me as rather a good idea.

RUSSIAN WOMEN AND CHILDREN ENCAMPED

The Queen in Ireland

Victoria, Queen of Great Britain and Empress of Ireland, is not the only sovereign lady in the world to-day, but she is the one whom we Americans unite with the English in calling "The Queen." This wonderful old lady, at eighty years of age, with unabated mental force, and no little bodily vigor, has undertaken a royal progress to Ireland, has been received with a magnificent demonstration in Dublin, and has abated no jot of her dignity, nor forgotten any of her pomp, though aware that not all her Irish subjects are loyally devoted to her throne. Victoria has been gracious and winning to all, and her visit has been hailed with acclaim by her warm-hearted and quick-witted Irish people. Thirty-nine years have passed since her majesty's last visit to Ireland. A souvenir of that event, preserved in reverence by those who were so honored as to obtain it, was a handkerchief of Irish linen, in its centre the English coat of arms and Victorian monogram, on one side a wreath of rose, shamrock, and thistle, the national emblems of England, Ireland and Scotland, and in each corner a harp, all delicately wrought by hand. Mrs. Joseph B. Glenny of New York is the owner of the handkerchief, a photograph of which we show in these columns, and it was given to her in Linden Hall, Belfast, Ireland, by a famous linen manufacturer, who made one hundred such souvenirs of the occasion.

A SOUVENIR OF VICTORIA'S FIRST VISIT TO IRELAND

Family Quarrels

The reason many family quarrels are so very bitter is that they are between people who have once loved each other. We cannot be much hurt by persons to whom we are indifferent. In a case concerning which a lady writes us, it seems to me very unreasonable for the family to cast the girl off because she may have married the brother of her deceased husband.

His people may have some reason to feel aggrieved; but yours, if you pardon me for saying so, are simply behaving in an arbitrary and rather meddlesome manner. Do make overtures to your sister. The day may come when you will very sorrowfully remember all this coldness.

A STEPSON'S TRIBUTE

I THOUGHT that we were ready to drop the stepmother and take up somebody else, but every mail still brings letters from interested readers. Stepchildren and stepmothers are alike asking to be heard, but stepfathers do not trouble their heads in the least. Probably they have so little to do with direct home management that they never have a chance to show anything but their best side. However, a gentleman rises to speak in meeting, who must have the floor, as he is entitled to give the testimony of a stepson. It is a Kansas subscriber who sends this interesting bit of experience.

How She Won Him

I have been reading the articles on stepmothers some time, as discussed by stepmothers, and this week's issue contains an article from a stepdaughter. So I give you, for what it is worth, my experience as a stepson.

My mother died when I was ten years old, leaving five children, I being the oldest, and the youngest an infant which died within a few months. We were truly in need of a mother. My father secured the services of his cousin as housekeeper for some time, who, I believe, did the best she could, but no woman ever lived who can fill the place of mother. Two of us were boys and two girls. After a time my sisters went to live with some of our folks, and my father and we boys began boarding; this lasted only a short time when my father concluded to marry. I was now fifteen years old—the age when most boys think they know most and can get along without aid or advice from anyone—the age when a boy needs a good mother, if ever.

Well, my father broke the news to me. I did not say much, for I knew it was settled, but in my mind I began to resolve: first that we'd have a time; second, that I'd not be ruled by any woman who was not my mother, etc., etc. And there were some things that entered my mind then that I have since been even ashamed to think of. Let me say right here that I was not a bad boy, but on the contrary I was considered one of the best boys in the community, but I had the mistaken prevailing idea that all stepmothers were tyrants, and that now I would have one to deal with personally.

Well, she came. She was not the prettiest woman on earth, and not the ugliest; good sized and altogether a very nice looking person. In fact, in appearance she seemed to be a real human being. She spoke to me and to my surprise very kindly, when she had an opportunity, but I was careful to make the opportunities as scarce as possible.

She had been there two or three days when one day I found myself alone in a room with her. I was seated on a chair reading, she drew a chair to my side, sat down, laid her hand on my shoulder and said, "Walter"—the rest I cannot repeat, but there, for the first time in my life, I had opened to my eyes the blessings of a mother, and instead of my stepmother being a tyrant it seemed to me that she was an angel. She explained to me the great task she had undertaken, and contrary to the practice of some stepmothers she talked to me of my mother, and in such a way that when she had finished her talk, there were two rivulets flowing down my cheeks and my whole soul was overflowing with love for her—my stepmother—and she was never afraid to kiss me even though I was a boy of fifteen. That was the turning-point of my life. I am now twenty-three years old and I cannot to this day think of this without tears.

Boys, if you have a mother be good to her; you will not always have her, and if you have a stepmother, be good to her for she has assumed a great responsibility.

Preaching Christ in the Lumber Camps

Evangelistic Work in Northern Wisconsin, Michigan and Minnesota

A YEAR ago, the writer took a trip through Northern Wisconsin, Michigan and Minnesota. He found the natural scenery unsurpassed in the Northwest; beautiful lakes hidden away in the thick forests, streams winding through the heavy timbered regions, rocky bluffs from one hundred to two hundred and fifty feet high, waterfalls fifty and sixty feet in height, dashing over solid rock, and sunsets not to be surpassed in beauty anywhere.

Scattered here and there in the lumbering towns, lumber camps, mining towns and Indian villages are many who never heard the Gospel of Christ. These towns range in population from half a dozen to one thousand people. In one town, there are five saloons and about six hundred people; but when inquiry was made in regard to the churches, it was found that there was an abandoned Catholic church and that was all. No Gospel service had ever been held in that town and there never had been a Sunday School. Grown men and women, as well as children, were as ignorant of the saving blood of Christ as any heathen to be found in the middle of Africa. Furthermore, it was asserted by those who knew the town, that it was utterly useless for Christian workers to attempt work there, and, if attempted, it would simply mean death to those who dared to hold up the Cross. A consecrated Christian woman entered the field under the auspices of the Superior Christian Association. Her first visit seemed to be fruitless. She was insulted again and again, and left for a few days, without seeing any result of her work. The next time she visited the place she succeeded in gathering around her twenty-five people by actual count. She told them the simple story of Jesus Christ. It was a new thing for them, and their hearts were touched as the message, backed up by the power of the Holy Ghost, sunk deep into their souls. There are now seven homes opened in this place where a Christian worker can stay while visiting the field. This is only one of the many towns in this Northland region.

A SLEEPING SHANTY, MADE OF LOGS

In the lumber camps are over 100,000 men, who spend from four to eight months of the year away from their homes, out in the woods. Very little has been done to take them the Gospel. An occasional missionary has been sent into the region, who would hold one service a year in a few camps, but many many camps have never heard a Gospel service. The men work hard through the whole season, getting good wages and saving their money, until they come out of the camp in the spring. When they enter the towns, thousands spend their hard-earned money in the saloon, the gambling-den or even worse resorts, and twenty-four hours later hundreds of them are penniless, character gone, self-respect gone, soul lost in the deepest darkness!

An effort is being made by the Superior Christian Association (which has for its work the evangelization of the Lake Superior region) to put a mission worker over a given district, which shall not include more than ten of these camps. This mission worker is to visit regularly every camp, become acquainted personally with the men, tell them of the better way of living, lead them to Jesus Christ, stay with them during the winter, and when the camps break in the spring, go with the men down to the towns and help them save their money, their characters and their souls. The association is praying the Lord to send them fifty such workers between now and next October. They are also asking God for the necessary money to support these workers.

Mellen, Ashland county, Wis., is the centre of the work. Here the Association will erect a building which shall be a rest home for its workers, where they may stay long enough to study the field and get experience under a trained missionary. When completed, the building will cost $3,500. Eighty acres of land located at Mellen, have been donated, and these are to be used in the support of the work.

All of the workers going into these fields are obliged to go without salary. Since taking up the work there, a year ago, more than thirty different workers have been brought upon the scene, every one "without money and without price," trusting in the Lord for their entire support. Some surprising results have already been attained. One consecrated young woman who left a good position in Chicago to enter the northern field as a soul-winner, has been made instrumental in bringing scores of souls into the kingdom. Other reports are equally encouraging. As a whole, the work is one that well deserves the confidence and support of Christian people. Mr. J. O. Buswell, Superintendent of the Superior Christian Association, at Mellen, Wis., will answer all inquiries from those who have at heart the progress of God's kingdom in the lumber and mining camps of the Northland.

ROYAL Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

Makes hot breakfast-breads wholesome—no yeast germs, no alum. Makes cake, biscuit and pastry of superior fineness, flavor and delicacy. Makes food that will keep moist and sweet. Is most economical, because it is the purest and greatest in leavening strength. In the easy, expeditious preparation of the finer cakes and pastries, Royal is indispensable.

Care must be taken to avoid baking powders made from alum. Such powders are sold cheap, because they cost but a few cents per pound. Not only will they spoil the cake, but alum is a corrosive acid, which taken in food means injury to health.

Young and Old Helping India

High Officials, Humble Citizens and Even the Tender Children Express Practical Sympathy for the Stricken Land

INDIA'S need is the absorbing thought which is moving the nation, as by a common impulse, to a great work of Christian benevolence. Every mail brings an avalanche of letters from contributors to the Famine Relief Fund, and from others who are in sympathy with the work. Among the young people in Sunday Schools and elsewhere there is a beautiful rivalry in benevolence for India. We can only give a few typical instances from among the many hundreds that are received.

Addie C. Beaver, of the Indian School of Phœnix, Ariz., writes:

I also enclose a picture of my class of little Indians who helped to gather up the pennies to be sent to the sufferers. I take THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and I showed them the pictures of the poor children who had nothing to eat. They were so sorry, and as they had some pennies that some of the older children had given them, they wanted to send them right away.

ARIZONA INDIAN CHILDREN WHO HELPED INDIA

Many beautiful instances of childish generosity and self-denial come to light. One letter from a little friend in Stark, Kan., reads:

Dear "Christian Herald": I am five years old. I will send a dollar of my pennies for the starving people in India. I was going to get something to play with, but will do without it eight months to send a dollar to those poor little children that don't have anything to eat or wear.

Your little Kansas friend, ERIC A. SHUE.

Another dear young friend sends this letter:

ATLANTA, GA.

I am a little girl, eight years old. I enjoy reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD every week. I am so sorry for the starving people of India. I send you $4—all I have. I am sorry it is no more, but it will help a little. I will try to save some more and send.

ELWOOD BARR

JENNIE ANITA MORGAN

JENNIE ANITA MORGAN.

One noble little fellow in Virginia affords a bright example to other young readers:

STEPHEN'S CITY, VA.

Dear Editor: Reading in your paper about the poor starving children in India, our little son, Elwood, who is but eleven years old, became so affected and distressed that he resolved to give his only dollar to them, and also collected the other $13 which we here enclose. We hope and pray that the poor unfortunate starving people may soon be relieved.

MR. AND MRS. WM. L. BARR.

ERIC A. SHUE

Miss Rilla M. Harris writes, sending $55, as the town collection of Troy, N. H., for the sufferers; Mr. Howard A. Lowe sends $70.79 as the gift of the people of Yellow Springs, O.; Mr. F. D. Scott forwards $312.10 as the united contribution of the good people of Rantoul, Ill., and Rev. Harris E. Kirk sends $114.58, the gift of the residents of Florence, Ala. A Union service of Methodist, Baptist, Congregationalist and Friends' churches of Fort Fairfield, Me., resulted in $64.54.

Ernest P., Mt. Lebanon, N. Y., sends $66.56 "the result of a few hours' work among the Shaker people and the Shaker schoolchildren." Mrs. W. H. Klusmann, of Los Angeles, Cal., sends a loving gift from the girls' class of the Pico Heights Sunday School, the givers being Mollie and Lena Blair, Edith Sutherland, Edna Elder, Mattie Yohr, and Leonora Griffen. Other contributors in the same school are Regina, John, and Wesley Klusmann.

In Germantown, Pa., the Bible Union of the Covenant M. E. Church did nobly, contributing the equivalent of five hundred bushels of corn to be added to the famine cargo shortly to sail from New York.

Mr. S. S. Campbell, cashier of the Bank of Carson, Ia., sends a list of sixty-two residents of Carson and Oakland, who have unitedly contributed $51.95 for the famine sufferers.

Marion Alice Jones and her brother Victor together send a dollar to be used for "some poor little boy and girl in India." This little gift may be blessed in saving two lives.

Miss Anne B. Cook, of New Brunswick, N. J., forwards $107, being "a voluntary offering made at a tea given for the famine sufferers." The Y. P. S. C. E. of the First Presbyterian Church of Canonsburg, Pa., sends $57.60, "In His Name," and the First Presbyterian Church and Sunday School of New Castle, Pa., forwards $81.09, contributed largely through the efforts of Rev. Dr. Jordon, the pastor, and Supt. P. J. Watson. By the same mail the Y. P. S. C. E. of the Reformed Church of Schenectady, N. Y., through Miss Ada J. French, sends $66.10; the good people of Farley, Ia., and vicinity, forward through Rev. Lewis McIntyre, of the Presbyterian Church, $95.10, and the Presbyterian Church of Elmira, N. Y., through Mr. Geo. Armstrong, sends $209.32. In Stamford, N. Y., a Ladies Committee, in a house-to-house campaign, collected $75.11, which is forwarded by Mrs. E. W. Gallup.

Mr. Julius Regenstine, of the American Three Color Co., Chicago, has forwarded to the Fund $50, being the contributions of the company's employees for the famine sufferers. S. A. Pollard and G. F. Prosser, a committee of citizens of Aurora and Hampton, Neb., send $50.20, the united gift of sixty-eight citizens. Wm. Small, of Arrowsmith, Ill., forwards a list of thirty-eight residents of Arrowsmith and Colfax, from whom he collected $54.30 for the Fund. The Jackson & Bell Co., publishers of The Messenger, of Wilmington, N. C., send $105.30, the result of an appeal through The Messenger to the good people of Wilmington.

SUPPLANT COFFEE

Belief of a Raymond Lady

Mrs. J. T. Bartlett, Raymond, N. H., says: "I suspected that coffee was the cause of my persistent dyspepsia and terrible feeling of weakness and faintness at the heart. It was hard to give up coffee, but when I got some Postum Food Coffee and learned how to make it properly, I quickly obtained relief from the old troubles. The unpleasant sensation of faintness at the heart has entirely gone.

"When I first tried Postum, I failed to notice the injunction to boil it fifteen minutes, and so let it boil just a few minutes, as I would coffee. I was disappointed in the flavor, and did not try it again until told by a friend that this was one of the absolute essentials. I have since observed the rule and am entirely satisfied with the drink. It is simply perfect. I believe it to be the beverage of the future, and that it is destined to supplant coffee everywhere.

"One of our business men here has been improved in health by the use of it. No one could wish to return to coffee drinking after properly testing your delightful and healthful Postum Food Coffee."

Phœnicia's Royal City

idon as it is To-day—One of the World's Oldest Seaports

SIDON means "fishing-place." The city was named, as Josephus, the Jewish historian relates, after the eldest son of Canaan (Gen. 10: 5). It lies on the coast of the Mediterranean, twenty-five miles south of Beirut. By its exceptional position and the daring and enterprising character of its inabitants, it rose in olden times to the ighest rank among the cities of Phœnicia. Its extensive commerce reached early to the whole known world. Its manufactures of linen, purple dyes and perfumes, were sources of unbounded wealth. Although one of the cities assigned to the Israelites by Joshua, it never in reality belonged to them, but was repeatedly in arms against them.

It reached the height of its greatness under the Persian rule, but afterwards fell into the hands of the Greeks, Syrians, Romans and Crusaders.

The photograph which appears on page 359 was taken recently, and shows the northwestern side of Sidon. It once had a wall around it, which is now almost a ruin. There are two old castles, one on the north and one on the south, the latter connected with the mainland by eight arches. Its streets are long, narrow and crooked and covered by arches. The houses are crowded together in almost one mass, and it is said a person can walk on the roofs from one end to the other. Two-thirds of the inhabitants are Mosems and the remainder are of different sects and nationalities.

American missionaries came to Sidon many years ago. Those now laboring here are Dr. Geo. A. Ford, principal of Sidon Academy and director of the industrial school; Rev. W. K. Eddy, director of the churches and daily schools; Dr. Samuel Jessup, his helper and treasurer and president of the Sunday School. The native people love and trust them. The most prosperous is the American Academy.

The gardens of Sidon produce many kinds of fruit, especially oranges, pomegranates and apricots. The fruit is shipped to Liverpool, Alexandria, Constantinople and other cities, and is a source of wealth to many.

Sidon, Syria SHAKIR DAGHIR.

The Las Palmas Mission

ANOTHER letter has been received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from Rev. T. M. Macknight, Protestant missionary in Tafira, Las Palmas, Canary Islands, whose Rest Home for invalid missionaries was recently described in these columns. This later communication deals with Mr. Macknight's labors among the natives of the island. These people are Spaniards, or of Spanish descent, and their language is Spanish. Mr. Macknight writes:

We are opening here at Las Palmas a "Christian depot," whence we distribute Christian literature in Spanish—Gospels, Testaments, Scripture texts, school books, pretty colored pictures that are instructive, etc. We take particular care to give out leaflets and pictures illustrating the duty of kindness to dumb animals. Through the ignorance of their owners, the poor beasts here suffer terribly. My "Kindness to Animals" leaflets have been well received, the daily paper reprinting them and emphasizing the importance of such teaching. We seek, too, at our "depot" to render industrial help to the people by supplying them with such aids as good seeds for market gardening, string for netting, and wool for knitting.

The islanders are eager for instruction. There is a general demand that we teach reading; there is much illiteracy, for the schools are poor and their facilities utterly inadequate. There was opposition and persecution at first, but now we do not meet with much of this, though the curas (priests) sometimes burn the Bibles we have given out. Last Sunday we had three well-attended services in our mission house, and several Scripture readings in the homes of different families and in caves. Our following is not solely among the poor. The richer and more cultured classes have shown interest in our work. One gentleman, Don Garcia, who had received a copy of Matthew and Mark, sat up all night to read it. He has since been our helpful friend.

We hope to be of great assistance to our missionary brethren in the African field, through the Rest Home. Las Palmas is in comparatively easy reach of Liberia, the Gold Coast, the Congo and Angola, in all of which regions missionaries are continually succumbing to the deadly influences of the climate. A stay in the Rest Home, which is healthfully and beautifully located one thousand feet above sea level, will be the means of saving to further usefulness many a missionary whose term of service would otherwise be cut short by death.

FOR INDIA'S SAKE

"CAST your bread upon the waters,
And to you it shall return."
These are words that through the ages
Never yet have ceased to burn.
And the charity of giving,
To the poor along life's way,
Is by night a fiery pillar,
And a tower of strength by day.

Now, the bread that once you scattered
From your lavish, generous hand,
Has returned again to bless you,
From across our fertile land.
Stricken ones outside our doorways
Who have felt the chastening rod
In these golden globes of sunshine
Find the favoring smile of God.

Let there be no hesitating,
Wondering what you can afford.
He who giveth to the needy,
Is but lending to the Lord.
And as sure as rain and sunshine
Bring the harvest to the plain,
Just so sure the noble giver
Comes unto his own again.

Out on India's plains they perish,
Hark that cry of "Save, Oh! save!"
Mothers pleading for their children,
"Keep my loved ones from the grave."
And from out that land of plenty,
Where the sun shines warm and fair,
Come these heart beats for the children,
Comes the answer to their prayer.

Shall the little ones cry vainly
For the crumbs we throw away?
Can we see them helpless lying,
Growing weaker every day?
Pitying hearts that throb with sorrow,
By your deeds ye shall be known,
Give to-day and ere to-morrow,
'Twill be carved on God's white throne.

An Appreciative Traveler

SOMERFORD, CUSTER CO., NEB.

Dear Editor:—Being too poor and too busy to go in person to different parts of the world as we would like to do, we take great pleasure in visiting such parts of the world as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD sees fit to take us, which is the next thing to going oneself. We seem to feel acquainted with many of your contributors, and think we should recognize some of them were we to meet them. To read THE CHRISTIAN HERALD weekly and to be guided by its advice must make one better.

A BUSY FACTORY

Never Closes its Doors, Day or Night

The famous "white city," as the pure food factories of the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., of Battle Creek, Mich., are called, never shuts down day or night. The great ovens once heated up are kept going, as are the grinding mills, blending machines, mixing machines, and the entire plant, the day laborers, men and women, are replaced at six o'clock in the evening by a night force.

The name "white city" was given by the citizens to the location owing to the color of the numerous factory buildings which are painted pure white with very dark bronze green trimmings.

The utmost cleanliness is observed throughout, and the appetizing odors from the foods in preparation, permeate the air in all directions.

Their products, Grape-Nuts breakfast food and Postum Cereal Food Coffee, go all over the world to the breakfast tables of the well-to-do Japanese and Chinese, and to the high caste Brahims of India, to the Emperor of Germany, to Royalty in Italy, to Great Britain, South America, and they are found in practically all of the best homes of America.

By scientific selection of the certain parts of grains which supply Phosphate of Potash and other important elements for quickly rebuilding the most delicate parts of the human body (brain and nerve centres), and making up therefrom a most delicious food, Grape-Nuts and a breakfast food-drink, Postum Cereal Coffee, this firm has become known as the foremost producers of Health Foods in the world, and their name affixed to a package of food is sufficient evidence of its purity and excellence.

To be relieved of a disease that has for a decade infected the system and to feel relief from agonizing pain that has been almost constant during this long period of time, is an event in a man's life, and it is but natural that he should be enthusiastic in his praise of the remedy that brought about these happy results.

Mr. Jeremiah Sand, Justice of the Peace at Turin, Lewis Co., N. Y., joyously tells of his remarkable release from Rheumatism by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. He says:

"I was afflicted with rheumatism for nearly ten years and had about given up hope of ever being relieved. For four years I was under the care of a physician, and during my entire sickness employed four different doctors. The pains in my arms and shoulders were so severe as to nearly drive me crazy. Beside these there was a sharp, darting pain in the region of the heart which always left me prostrated.

"One day I read an advertisement in a newspaper which stated that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People would relieve rheumatism and I at once began taking the pills. I found relief from my pains before I finished the first box. I continued taking the pills for over a year when I was entirely free from rheumatism, and have been so ever since. I have great faith in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I recommended them to Mrs. Ivan K. Budd, who was suffering from nervous dyspepsia and she was entirely relieved by their use.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggests sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

Brooklyn's Floating Bethel

Helping Seamen by a Mission on the Water—Jack's Clubhouse at Anchor—The Sailor as a Missionary

"SAILORS make the best missionaries in the world," says Captain H. L. Meeker, skipper of the Floating Bethel, Brooklyn, and a man naturally partial to Jack tar. It might be said that Captain Meeker's boat is almost a training ship for such missionaries, for, as the Captain says, "We have sailors—who found God here—all over the world converting others. The converted sailor goes from port to port, telling others of God's power to keep as well as to save.

The history of the Floating Bethel and its captain has been given in a previous issue of this paper. The Bethel is a canal boat, swinging at anchor, at the foot of Joralemon street, and has done gallant service as a mission for seamen since the spring of 1893. The captain is an old sailor, and understands how to handle his men. They come to him freely with all their troubles and temptations. It is an ordinary happening on the Bethel for an unkempt, wretched sailor to come aboard with: "Mr. Captain, I aint had nothin' to eat to-day." "All right, my boy," rings out the hearty response, followed by an order to the steward, "Mr. Shipkeeper, take him in and fill him up." Another sailor comes: "Mr. Captain, I haint got a bunk." "All right, my boy, turn in here; this is your home." Yet strict naval discipline is observed. His 'boys' know they must obey when their kindly, bluff old captain sings out an order. They are almost as proud of the Bethel as is her commander. "We keep her ship-shape," says the captain. "You couldn't get the boys to deface this boat." The work has so recommended itself to some consecrated business men of Brooklyn that it has received generous recognition. The walls are wainscotted, and there is a nice desk and organ in one end of the long saloon which accommodates two hundred and fifty men. At the other end is the reading-room, liberally supplied with books, magazines and illustrated weeklies. Religious mottoes, marine pictures, posters making request as to personal conduct, and others bearing the reminders "Write a letter to your wife," and "Write a letter to your mother," hang upon the wall, and stationery, to be had for the asking, encourages the practice of the last suggestions, which are also enforced by the good captain's counsels. "Men who never knew what it was before to send money to mother or wife are doing it now," says he. "I get bushels of letters from mothers, wives and children, thanking me for kindness to their loved ones, and praying God's blessing on the Floating Bethel. Have just received one from a wife who writes that she never knew what happiness was before. Her husband, a well educated, prosperous man, lost everything through drink; went on a ship as fireman, drifted in here, was converted, and afterward recovered himself in business. His wife says he has established a family altar in his home."

It is pleasant to hear the old captain talk about his boat. "She has morally cleaned up this water front," he says. "Policemen come in constantly and say, 'Cap, she's done more than anybody or anything else for this neighborhood.' We've helped other places, too. Sailors who used to go right to the gin mill as soon as they landed hunt up a mission now in other ports as well as here. This boat is a credit to sailors, as well as to her officers. Admiral Philip came to see us and said she was the best conducted boat he ever saw. I make the boys fill up benches from the front; land churches fill from the back. Men come in and cast anchor near the stove, but I sing out, 'Make your line short there! Heave up, boys!' and they come forward. If the singing isn't hearty enough, I call out, 'Boys, get your pumps and go to work in order!' and you ought to hear 'em! We have singing there, I tell you. Some of the fellows have splendid voices and they let 'em out. We help to fill land churches. Often a company of seventy-five or more, under one of my officers, marches up to a land church. When they get back they find the table set and a supper ready. O, Jack likes this place! it's his club-house as well as his mission. He knows where to find his friends. If he hasn't food, we feed him; if he hasn't clothes, we clothe him; hasn't a boarding-house we help him—for a week, may be; if he is out of work we try to get it for him. God provides us with everything. Friends send us cast-off clothing suitable for men's wear, boots and shoes. Groceries, stationery and good bright literature are always acceptable." Readers wishing fuller information or direction will receive it by dropping a postal to Captain Meeker, Floating Bethel, Brooklyn.

The work is conducted under the auspices of the Brooklyn City Mission. It is organized on regular nautical lines, with Mr. John Englis for commodore, and under Captain Meeker a full staff of officers, beginning with Mr. John N. Sayre, and ending with Ship's Doctor William Steward. During 1899 the attendance was 23,158; conversions, 483; pledges signed, 912; meals provided, 12,171.

What Ten Dollars Did

Many persons, when approached on the subject of foreign missions, and the need of giving to their support, reply that the field is so vast that the very little they could do would amount to nothing. Never was there a greater mistake. The efficacy of a gift, given in Christ's name and for his sake, is not to be measured by its size or the value it has in human eyes. An illustration of this fact is found in the following letter from Rev. Erwin H. Richards, the well-known American missionary, at Inhambane, South Africa. Mr. Richards writes to the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

On June 3, 1899, through the kindness of Mrs. A. J. Bonnell, you sent us ten dollars as part salary for Angilazi and Mabumbi (two native workers), on their station at Pakuleni. The father of Angilazi was one of the very worst for a heathen I have ever met—and I have met many. He was never sober, always cruel and feared nothing. The mother was full of most loathsome superstition. These two have now for several months been living with Angilazi and Mabumbi, and are apparently trying very hard to live a Christian life. Your ten dollars was one-fifth of all the financial support the pastor received. The mission fed—but did not clothe—five girls, and these two workers fed and clad some eight others for the greater part of the year. Every one on the station is a professed believer, and this means that he is at war with all his home folks—for the home folks are well aware that good heathenism can never thrive alongside of active Christianity, and they fight it with all their ability. I have high hopes for the region round about Pakuli.

Perils of Alaskan Travel

In an interesting article in the first number of the new Alaskan Magazine, the present and the former transportation facilities to the gold fields are graphically described. The writer gives this vivid picture of the traveling facilities two years ago:

Dogs used to be cheap in Alaska, but with the sudden influx of prospectors prices rose enormously to $100, and even to $225. In 1897 I saw four dogs at Tanana for which their owner had refused $1,000 in gold. The natives rented dogs for $2 apiece to the prospectors. Prices afterward declined, but have advanced again this winter, as everyone who is foot-loose will leave Dawson for Nome, most of them overland. It is a long, terrible journey through an Arctic night, and its path will be strewn with dead as before the car of Juggernaut. Those who are wise are providing boots for their dogs, so that the sharp ice and crusted snow will not incapacitate them; but to men unused to snow-shoeing, it is very painful to fasten down the toes for long and continued journeys. Snow blindness is nothing, however, compared to that induced by the dazzle of gold. And the strange part of it is, that the further men are from the gold, the brighter does its alluring light shine.

There are few things more pathetic than to see a faithful, willing, long-suffering horse die, yet scattered along those trails into the land of cold and gold lie thousands of them. On the Teslin trail alone 2,000 pack animals and scores of oxen are rotting. "It used to make my heart ache," said one prospector to me, "to see our poor animals die. We would notice one covered with cold perspiration, his patient, long-suffering eyes saying plainly: 'I'm sorry; I've done my best; but don't be angry; I can go no farther.' Then we'd take off the pack and the poor beast would fall over, take the first rest he had in weeks, and just naturally die. Our party lost thirty horses and mules that way. Every time we corralled the poor things, we would find from one to three or four dead."

At Glenora to-day you may see an abandoned warehouse, one hundred feet long, piled with ham, bacon, machinery and all sorts of things. There are also hundreds of tons of flour, hay and oats. I know where there is a tree bearing strange fruit—at least thirty pack saddles. Yet, when the trail was swarming with these maddened gold-seekers, flour was $80 a sack and nails $1 a pound.

Vengeance on Jerusalem*

THE plan of Vespasian was first to bring the country into subjection and then with his entire force to close in around Jerusalem, and by its destruction finish the war. In the spring of 67 A.D. he marched with an army of about 50,000 men from Ptolemais into Galilee. Before leaving Ptolemais he had, at the request of the inhabitants of Sepphoris, sent them a garrison of six thousand men, an auspicious beginning, indeed, for the Romans. The time had now come for the disciplined army of Josephus to show its training. Vespasian was approaching. Alas for the months of toil spent in trying to make soldiers of the Galileans! They fled hither and thither into the mountains on the first report of Vespasian's nearness. He gained a goodly part of Galilee without a single sword-stroke. Josephus and the few who remained with him took refuge in Tiberias.

Vespasian now turned his attention to the strongholds. At Jotapata, several miles north of Sepphoris, a large part of the army of Josephus had sought refuge. Josephus, after an appeal to Jerusalem for help, hastened to the threatened city and for forty-seven days directed one of the most desperate conflicts of the war. Forty thousand men lost their lives in those terrible days. With stratagem after stratagem the besieged met the devices of the Romans, while their courage was that of men determined to sell their lives as dearly as possible. At last, through a deserter's account of the hopeless and pitiable condition within the walls, Vespasian was led to attempt an entrance in the early morning when the exhausted sentinels would be found sleeping. The plan succeeded, and with wholesale slaughter the Romans avenged their own losses and suffering. Josephus, after several perilous adventures, escaped, surrendered himself to the Romans, and, upon being brought before Vespasian, cleverly assumed the role of a prophet, predicting that Vespasian should himself be emperor. This prophecy was not improbable; it was simply an evidence of shrewd insight into the likely result of given conditions in the Roman world. Nero was childless, and Vespasian was a highly honored officer.

In the spring of 70 A.D., just before the Passover, Titus appeared at the gates of Jerusalem. Incautious advances at first caused him much loss; consequently, giving up thought of storming the city, he began a regular siege on April 23. While he was making his first approaches to the city, treacherous dealing on the part of John put an end to the party of Eleazar. The latter opened the gates of the temple for worshippers, and John smuggled in enough of his adherents, with concealed weapons, to gain the mastery of the inner court. Eleazar was himself murdered. It was not until the threatening work of the siege had begun that the two parties gave up their own animosities and joined their forces against a common foe.

The siege lasted from April until September, five months full of desperate undertakings, astonishing endurance, matchless cruelty, and terrible issues. With force has it been said that "scarcely on another occasion in history has the spectator the same feeling of irredeemable ruin, of inevitable destruction, as in the case of the fall of Jerusalem in the year 70 A. D." Titus began his attack on the north side of the city, since everywhere else it was impregnable. Here he met the outer wall, or the wall of Agrippa, which extended around Bethzetha. On the fifteenth day of the siege a breech was made by the battering-rams, and the Romans pitched camp within the city. Orders were then given to storm the second wall, which, running from the gate Gennath in a general northwesterly direction to the corner of Antonia, protected the lower city. Five days after the capture of the first wall, an opening was made in the second, and Titus himself led the advance into the breach. Desperate fighting ensued, and four days passed before the Romans gained the upper hand.

The temple yet remained, and Titus made another appeal to those within its enclosure to surrender, and so to save their sacred shrine from pollution. Josephus was once more the messenger of the Romans, but in vain. Then timbers were brought from long distances and ramparts built for attack. On the 17th of July the daily sacrifice, from lack of both priests and animals, ceased forever. The simple statement of Josephus is alike a tribute to the ceremonial faithfulness of Judaism, and a sign of its accomplished mission. The smokeless altar was soon to be part of the debris of a desolated city. While the ramparts against the temple were being built the Romans suffered some sharp reverses, but on the 8th of August the battering rams began their work. Their heavy blows availed but little against the massive walls, so the gates were set on fire, and through the openings thus made the Romans rushed, eager for vengeance. Titus tried to save the temple, but the infuriated soldiers were beyond control, and the whole structure was soon in flames. There was just time to secure the sacred vessels. Then the glory of Jerusalem disappeared, to be seen no more. A merciless slaughter added its agonies to the awful scene. "The great tribulation" of our Lord's prophecy was being fulfilled.

How Christians Grow

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for May 6. Mark 4: 26-29

LIFE'S mysteries are not all of the spiritual kind. With all our scientific knowledge, there are many phenomena that we cannot explain. We know that they occur; we have become so accustomed to them that we are sure they will occur, but we do not understand them. Even the electricity, that we put to so many uses and are learning to make so valuable a servant, is a mystery that we have not fathomed. But we do not allow our ignorance to prevent our making a practical use of the knowledge we do possess. Although, as Christ said, the seed springs and grows we know not how, we know that under certain conditions it does spring and grow, and so we put it in the ground, confidently expecting a harvest. We know that if we plant an acorn that there will come a shoot from it, and that it will grow into a tree, and out of the soil it will draw the materials for its trunk, and out of the air it will get the qualities it needs for its life, and that it will grow into a tree from which will come other acorns: but if we cut into it to find the secret of these mysterious processes, it eludes us. We have to accept the facts that experience teaches and act upon them, without a knowledge of the method. So Christ says it is with the Kingdom of God.

Whether he was speaking of the kingdom that he was planting in the world, which grew, to the astonishment of all who witnessed its small beginning and realized the power of the forces opposed to it; or whether he referred to the kingdom in the individual soul, the same profound philosophic truth applies to it. Who would have thought that out of such unpropitious conditions as society presented in apostolic days, the kingdom could spring and grow? Yet it did, and we know not how. There was the fact, and to this day we cannot explain it. In the individual soul there is the same mystery. A man seems to be steeped in worldliness, to have no thought or care for anything but his physical comfort and gratification. He is of the earth, earthy. Plain, dull, sordid, unspiritual, he is like the brown soil, that seems the basest of material. But the Holy Spirit plants the seed of truth in him, and the change comes. Out of that soil springs a new life. We know not how, but we have seen it again and again. Graces which are angelic are developed; love and sympathy and fortitude and helpfulness appear and become active, where before everything was sterile. Evidently human nature contains the conditions out of which the godly character may be developed. There is a divine energy, a dynamic force in the seed, which finds in the gross material of the human constitution the congenial habitat for its growth.

Even the subject of the development does not understand the process. He is conscious of the power to resist. But there is in him some power attracting him towards higher things; there is a strange quickening of the conscience, excluding deleterious influences, a reaching out for sustenance of the young life; there is a mellowing of the nature and an increase in the strength of the spiritual forces, which were dormant or non-existent in the old life. So the kingdom of God grows in the soul, and we wonder as we behold the character acquiring strength as it grows out of its unpromising conditions. After all, "great is the mystery of godliness," but it is a sober fact and examples of it are to be seen in every generation. The phenomenon should encourage us both as to ourselves and as to others. Every man at his conversion, knowing his own nature, is apt to despair of its producing the graces of the Christian character. But as he yields to the force within him, he perceives that he is a different man from the man of the old time. Storms may come upon him, the winds of adversity may blow, but somehow, if he remains faithful, the strength increases and he takes on new beauty. So we are encouraged to sow and plant. The conditions we meet with could not be more unpromising than in our own case and the seed sown comes to harvest.

THE WONDERFUL VAPOR BATH

Invention of an Ohioan That Produces Perfect Health, Strength and Beauty to Every User, and Relieves Without Drugs, All Nervous Diseases, Rheumatism, La Grippe, Neuralgia, Blood and Kidney Troubles, Weakness, and the Most Obstinate Diseases, by Nature's Method of Steaming the Poisons Out of the System.

Ministers and Those Who Have Used It Declare It to Be the Most Remarkable Invigorant Ever Produced, Better Than Any Treatment at Hot Springs, Sanitariums or Health Resorts.

38,478 Quaker Cabinets sold last month.

A genius of the Queen City has placed on the market a Vapor Bath Cabinet that has proven a blessing to every man, woman or child who has used it.

Recent investigation of this remarkable invention was so very satisfactory that we have no hesitancy in indorsing the same as just what all readers need.

It is an air-tight inclosure, in which one comfortably rests on a chair, and with only the head outside, enjoys at home, for three cents each, all the marvelous cleansing, curative and invigorating effects of the famous Turkish Bath, Hot Vapor, or Medicated Bath, with no possibility of taking cold afterwards, or in any way weakening the system.

Hundreds of well-known physicians have given up their practice to sell this Cabinet—such eminent men as Emerson McKay, Detroit, who has already sold over 700, and John C. Wright, Chicago, who sold 125 last month.

Thousands of remarkable letters have been written the makers from users, some of which, referring to

will be interesting to those who suffer from these dread maladies. W. L. Brown, Oxford, O., writes: "My father was down in bed for months with rheumatism; this Cabinet did him more good than $50 worth of drugs." G. M. Lafferty, Covington, Ky., writes: "Was compelled to quit business a year ago, being prostrated with rheumatism and kidney troubles, when your Cabinet came. Two weeks' use relieved me. I have never had a twinge since." Rev. Geo. H. Hudson, Okemos, Mich., says: "I gave up my pastorate on account of nervous prostration and lung troubles; my editor so highly recommended your Cabinet, I tried it: From that day I have steadily grown better; am now well; nervousness gone; lungs strong; am a new man." Mrs. Ober, No. 994 Broad St., Columbus, O., writes: "It is grand for relieving colds, la grippe, inflammation, aches, pains; it relieved my uncle of neuralgia and sleeplessness, with which he had long suffered. A neighbor relieved herself of la grippe in one night, her little girl of measles, her son of croup. Another neighbor of eczema of many years' standing." Hon. A. B. Strickland, of Bloomington, writes that the Cabinet did him more good than two years' doctoring, relieved him of catarrh, gravel, kidney trouble and dropsy, with which he had long been afflicted.

Hundreds of Ministers

write, praising this Cabinet. Rev. H. C. Roernaes, Everett, Kan., says: "It's a blessing; made me full of life and vigor; should be in use in every family." Rev. J. C. Richardson, N. Fifth Street, Roxbury, Mass., was greatly benefited by its use, and recommends it highly, as also does Prof. R. E. P. Kline, of Ottawa University, who says: "I find it a great benefit. No Christian should be without it." Hon. V. C. Hay, St. Joe, Mo., writes: "Physicians gave me up to die; was persuaded by friends to try this Cabinet, and it relieved me. I can not praise it enough." Rev. Baker Smith, D.D., Fairmont, N. J., says: "Your Cabinet rids the body of aches and pain, and as cleanliness is next to godliness, it merits high recommendation."

Congressmen John J. Lentz, Mrs. Kendricks, Prin. of Vassar College; John T. Brown, Editor "Christian Guide"; Rev. C. M. Keith, Editor "Holiness Advocate," as well as hundreds of clergymen, bankers, governors, physicians and influential people, recommend it highly.

It Prevents Disease, and physicians are unanimous in claiming that colds, la grippe, fevers, smallpox, consumption, kidney trouble, Bright's disease, cancer—in fact, such marvelous eliminative power has this Cabinet that no disease can gain a foothold in your body if you take these hot Thermal Baths weekly. Scientific reasons are brought out in a very instructive little book, issued by the makers. To this Cabinet has marvelous power. Dr. Shepard, of Brooklyn, states that he has never failed to draw out the deadly poison of snake bites, hydrophobia, blood poison, etc., by this Vapor Bath, proving that it is the most wonderful blood purifier known. If people, instead of filling their system with more poisons by taking drugs and nostrums, would get into a Vapor Bath Cabinet and steam out these poisons, and assist nature to act, they would have pure blood, and a skin as clear and smooth as the most fastidious could desire.

The Important Feature of this Cabinet is that it gives a hot vapor bath that opens the millions of pores all over the body, stimulating the sweat glands, drawing out all the impure salts, acids and effete matter, which, if retained, overwork the heart, kidneys, lungs, and cause disease, debility and sluggishness. Astonishing is the improvement in health, feeling and complexion. The first bath makes you feel like a new being—10 years younger.

With the Cabinet, if desired, is a

in which the face, head and neck are given the same vapor treatment as the body, producing the most wonderful results; removes pimples, blackheads, skin eruptions, relieves Catarrh, Asthma and Bronchitis.

O. C. Smith, Mt. Healthy, O., writes: "Since using this Cabinet my Catarrh, Asthma and Hay Fever, with which I have been afflicted since childhood, has never returned. Worth $1,000 to me. I have sold hundreds of these Cabinets. Every one was delighted. My wife finds it excellent for her ills."

Whatever

Will Hasten Perspiration

every one knows is beneficial, but other methods are crude and insignificant, when compared to the convenience and marvelous power of this Cabinet, known as the new 1902 style

Square Quaker Folding Thermal

Bath Cabinet. We find it to be a genuine Cabinet, with a real door, opening wide, as shown in cut. When closed it is air-tight; handsomely made of best, most durable, waterproof goods, rubber-lined. A heavy steel frame supports it, making it a strong and substantial bathroom within itself. It has top curtains; in fact, all the latest improvements.

The makers furnish an excellent stove with each Cabinet, also valuable recipes and formulas for medicated baths and ailments, as well as plain directions. It folds flat in 1 inch space, when not in use; easily carried; weighs but 10 pounds.

People don't need bathrooms, as this Cabinet may be used in any room, and bath tubs have been discarded since this invention, as it gives a far better bath for all cleansing purposes than soap and water. For the sick room its advantages are at once apparent.

After investigation, it can be said the Quaker Cabinet made by the Cincinnati firm is the only practical article of its kind, and will last for years. It seems to satisfy and delight every user, and the

and assert positively that this Cabinet will benefit Nervous Troubles, Debility, Purify the Blood, Beautify the Skin and relieve Rheumatism. (They offer $50.00 reward for a case not relieved.) Benefits the most obstinate cases of Women's Troubles, La Grippe, Sleeplessness, Neuralgia, Malaria, Headaches, Obesity, Gout, Sciatica, Eczema, Scrofula, Piles, Dropsy, Blood and Skin Diseases, Liver and Kidney Troubles. It will with one bath, all symptoms of La Grippe, Fevers, Pneumonia, Consumption, Asthma, and is really a household necessity. Gives the most known, and all those enjoying health should use it at least once or twice a week, for its great value is its marvelous power to draw out of the system all impurities that cause disease, and for this reason is truly a God-send to all humanity.

HOW TO GET ONE.

All readers who want to enjoy perfect health, prevent disease and are afflicted, should have one of these remarkable Cabinets. The price is wonderfully low. Space prevents a detailed description, but it will bear out the most exacting demand for durability and Healthful properties.

Write the World Mfg. Co., 2039 World Building, Cincinnati, O., and ask them to send you their pamphlets describing this invention. The price is wonderfully low, only $5.00 complete, with heater, directions and formulas. Head attachment, if desired, $1.00 extra, and it is indeed difficult to imagine where one could invest that amount of money in anything else that guarantees so much health, strength and vigor.

Write to-day for full information; or, better still, order a Cabinet; you won't be disappointed, as the makers guarantee every Cabinet, and agree to refund your money after 30 days' use if not just as represented.

The Cabinet is just as represented, and will be shipped promptly. You can remit safely by express, P. O. money order, bank draft, or certified check.

Don't fail to send for booklet, anyway.

The Cabinet is a Wonderful Seller

for agents, and the firm offers special inducements to both men and women upon request, and many are making from $100 to $150 every month, and expenses. Write to-day.

The regular retail price is $140.00, our wholesale price when the organ takes its place in our catalogue will be $65.00, BUT in order to place the first lot of two Thousand (made up of stock bought before the enormous increase in the cost of material that is now taking place) and to introduce this most desirable organ, we will, during the period of 20 days from the above stamped date, sell The Century Chimes, complete with all extras, for the comparatively ridiculously small sum of $48.75 Cash with Order. This includes solid wood piano stool (see cut), instruction book and 20 pieces of the latest sheet music; boxing and free delivery on board cars here.

By taking advantage of this plan of payment, which involves no possible risk to purchaser, we present you with a Cash Bonus of $16.25, as this organ cannot be bought for a cent less than $65.00, cash, after the term of this offer expires. It is sold on the unique Cornish method of

1 YEAR'S FREE TRIAL

If the organ is not exactly as represented, after twelve months' use, we guarantee to take it back and to refund you the purchase money with six per cent. interest, and also to return the amount you have paid for freight; so that if you did send the organ back you would receive $51.67 and freight charges. No other firm in the world makes such a proposition, which is an ironclad insurance that protects the purchaser from any and every risk. Use this advertisement if you wish, as your order form, or write on separate sheet of paper, mentioning The Christian Herald, and send order and money at once. Of course, we are perfectly willing to sell this organ upon other plans of payment, if an immediate cash outlay is not convenient. For instance, we will sell it for $50.00 cash 30 or 40 days after shipment; or for $55.00, $25.00 cash down, balance $5.00 per month; or $60.00, $10.00 cash down, balance $5.00 per month; all first payments on installment orders to be sent in advance as a guarantee of good faith. Or we will with pleasure consider and accept if possible any other proposition that may be more suited to your circumstances. Our business is to please our patrons in every respect. We recommend, however, our cash-with-order system—you save money, and nobody knows what you pay; no deposit is necessary and no references. You run no risk in sending cash in advance; if organ is not as represented after 30 days' trial, your money will be refunded immediately on application, together with all freight expenses, and the organ can be returned to us. Note, also, that if circumstances prevent you from accepting this offer within the limited time, you can write us and obtain a Temporary Extension; we will try and accommodate you as long as this special stock lasts. If it is possible that you do not now require an organ for your own use, you can easily sell the organ for $65.00 to some friend or neighbor, and thus make $16.25; if you have a chance to do this write us about it at once, and we will help you to do it.

THOUSANDS of Christian Herald readers own Cornish Pianos and Organs, and thousands more will eventually do so. Remember! North, South, East, West, CORNISH is BEST! The ONLY High Grade Piano and Organ sold DIRECT from FACTORY to FAMILY EXCLUSIVELY at FIRST COST.

The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

These Questions Will be Answered May 30

1. Can a Christian consistently practice hypnotism?
2. How did the name Tommy Atkins, as applied to the English soldier, originate?
3. What is meant by the "elect" spoken of in Matthew 24: 22, 31; Mark 13: 27; Luke 18: 7; Romans 8: 33; Col. 3: 12, and elsewhere in the Scriptures?
4. In what States of the Union does temperance legislation prevail?
5. Can any one live like a millionaire and be a good Christian?
6. What is the best description, in a hundred words or less, of a liquor saloon, its objects and results?
7. When and with what nation did England make her first formal treaty?
8. Is suicide mentioned in the Bible and if so, where? Where do we get the idea that it is an unpardonable sin?
9. Is the writing of letters to friends on Sunday a desecration of the day?
10. What is at once the sweetest and most expressive word or phrase in any of the civilized languages of to-day?

Questions of the Week

1. To which of its languages, living or dead, is the world most indebted, and why?

Greek. It is comprehensive of the different needs of language, having given itself to philosophy, the deepest religious expression, history, poetry, oratory, fiction, description and familiar conversation. It is superior to Hebrew in its ability to portray abstract as well as concrete ideas; superior to Latin in its mobility, humanity and lack of that statistical dryness that has made the Latin fit for nothing but law; superior to the German in its musical power, and to the Italian in its rugged strength; to the English, in its purity from mongrelisms, and to the French in its serious stability. It is either the original language, or the most accurate medium of the versions of all that is best in literature up to three hundred years ago—the only language that could have held the juice and elasticity of the thought of the ancients. It was used as a medium of Scripture. It was the language of philosophy, at the same time that impassioned oratory and love were expressed by its means. No other language expresses human life so musically and sympathetically. G. F. GOODENOUGH.

2. Which war of the nineteenth century did most to benefit the world?

Our own Civil War. It brought about the abolishment of slavery—which was as harmful to the owners as to the slaves—and removed the only conceivable source of discord between North and South, thus making the Union stronger than ever and launching it upon a new era of prosperity and world-wide influence and usefulness. L. A. KNIGHT.

3. What is the meaning of Ecclesiastes 7: 16: "Be not righteous over-much; neither make thyself over-wise; why shouldst thou destroy thyself?"

This verse may be taken as a caution against a Pharisaical display of righteousness, which, while wonderfully scrupulous about the letter, too often loses sight of the spirit of God's commands. S. T. SEARLE.

4. Supposing that there were no hereafter, would it pay to live a religious life?

The moral precepts of the Christian religion—those that concern men in their relations to each other in this life—are such as will promote health, longevity, industry, wealth, happiness and every temporal blessing. It will pay, therefore, in the present existence, to live a religious life. J. G. OSBORNE.

5. What imperial ruler sat on his throne for more than three hundred years?

The body of Charlemagne was placed at death, in 814, in a sitting position, in the tomb connected with the chapel built by himself at Aix-la-Chapelle. In 1001, Otto III. had the vault opened, and the body of the emperor was found in a wonderful state of preservation. In 1165, the Emperor Barbarossa had the vault again opened, and in 1215 the remains were taken from the vault by Frederick II. and put in a casket of gold and silver, in which they are still kept in the treasury of the cathedral. R. S. HOBBS.

6. What may be regarded as the seven most useful inventions of the nineteenth century?

1. The practical application of steam in manufacturing and in transit. 2. Telegraph. 3. Electric light. 4. Use of anæsthetics in surgery. 5. Sewing machine. 6. Cotton gin. 7. Telephone. C. A. MARTIN.

7. Since we may presume that Christ knew that he would raise Lazarus from the dead, how are we to account for his weeping on reaching the site of the sepulchre?

Christ may be presumed to have wept as he saw the sad effects of sin in the parting of human ties by death and the desolation wrought in the home-life thereby. He knew that Lazarus would be brought to life and the loved ones in his home would be reunited, but countless other homes were being desolated by death, and that of which Lazarus was a member would again be disrupted by the same cause. Christ may have wept also because he saw no evidence that even the sisters of Lazarus realized the nature of his mission or powers.

L. H. SMALL.

8. Christ purposely used parables in his earthly ministry, as will be seen on reference to Mark 4: 10-12. A hasty reader might be led to argue that the Master did not intend his hearers to understand and receive the truth. How can such an objection be best answered?

Compare Mark 4: 10-12 with the parallel passage, Matt. 13: 14, 15, as it is given in the Revised Version. Here it appears not that the Master did not intend his hearers to understand, but that the hearers did not wish to comprehend his deeper meaning. "Gross" by nature, utterly indifferent to spiritual things, they listened to Christ's teachings in idle curiosity and gave them only passing attention. The disciples, on the other hand, loving and seeking to serve their Master, followed his words with sympathetic interest and were quick to perceive the real teachings underlying them. Thus to each class of hearers it was "given" (permitted) to find that which they sought; to the one "the mysteries of the kingdom of God," to the other, "all things done in parables."

A. RANNEY.

9. If a person has one hundred dollars that he regards as the Lord's tenth, what would be a good way of dividing it? What proportion to the church, to foreign missions, to the poor and sick, etc.?

No systematic proportion can be stated. The donor should be guided by the current urgency of any particular cause. The following causes should be included in any general distribution: Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Church, Bible Society, Tract Society, sick and poor, Sunday Schools, ministerial education, temperance cause and ministerial relief.

R. T. TERRY.

10. In view of the fact that Christ said, "Swear not at all, neither by heaven, for it is God's throne," etc., is a Christian justified in taking the oath as a juryman or as a witness in a court of justice?

Christ referred to the vicious, wanton and unauthorized swearing in common discourse and not to judicial oaths; for he himself answered when interrogated upon oath (Matt. 26: 63; Mark 14: 4). Paul also makes use of expressions which contain the nature of oaths (Rom. 1: 9; I. Cor. 15: 31; II. Cor. 1: 18; Gal. 1: 20; Heb. 6: 13-17). MARGARET K. RAILEY.

Miscellaneous Questions

Harris L., Lebanon, Pa. 1. What are the requirements for entering a trade school? 2. Please give names of some of the different schools.

Prof. Arthur L. Williston, Director of the Department of Technology, Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y., kindly answers this query as follows: "The best known trade schools in this country are Williamson Free School of Mechanical Trades; Williamson School P. O., Delaware County, Pa.; New York Trade School, First Avenue, 67th to 68th streets, New York City; Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y. Trade courses at Pratt Institute, however, are only evening courses. Detailed information regarding the work and requirements of admission can be had by writing to different schools for catalogue. In general, however, the requirements for entering a trade school are that the applicant shall be between about sixteen and twenty-five years of age, bright, intelligent and earnest, and that he shall make satisfactory progress in his work in order to remain. Entrance examinations, as a rule, are not required. Nowadays the idea of a trade school, where nothing but the trade is taught, is giving way to those courses which embody a large amount of practical instruction in various trades, with educational work in mathematics, physics and chemistry, mechanical drawing, machine design, steam engine theory, electricity, and the like.

Corpl. Frank P. Vaughn, U. S. A., sends us some stirring verses on the need of a great temperance movement in our army and navy. One of these is as follows:

Stretch forth your hand. He bids you!
And strength He will provide;
There's noble work for us to do
In stemming the dreadful tide.
What! sixty thousand drunkards' graves
In our bright land each year!
And our best men the devil's slaves—
Shall we longer this tale hear?

Mrs. A. A., Towne, Wis. I should like to see some words on non-spiritual preaching of which there is so much nowadays, preachers seeming to aim merely to cause laughter by their anecdotes and sayings in the pulpit; others giving so much of scientific subjects, all good enough at any other time and place, but not bearing on or dividing the Word as it should be.

Our correspondent has, perhaps, unconsciously touched one of the most prolific causes of church decadence. When a preacher coveting worldly admiration, deliberately sets the Gospel aside, and makes his pulpit a platform for the discussion of non-spiritual topics, he invites ultimate failure. He makes the fatal mistake of speaking to please the fancy instead of to feed the soul. There is only one topic that will satisfy the cravings of a hungry soul, viz.: the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Inquirer. If it is morally wrong to do a certain thing ourselves, it is wrong to aid or countenance others in the doing of it. This applies to card-playing and all amusements that tend to gambling or other forms of immorality. By attending card-playing parties, even though you yourself do not play, you countenance the evil. See our answer to "Reader, Joy, N. Y.," in THE MAIL-BAG of Feb. 21. There are so many games and amusements that are absolutely free from the remotest suspicion of wrong that it cannot be truthfully urged that a person is driven by necessity to choose a pernicious amusement which has been the cause of ruin to thousands.

A. N. B., Buckhannon, W. Va. Is it a lie not to tell the whole truth to one who has a right to know the whole truth?

It depends wholly upon the circumstances of the case. By keeping back a portion of the truth, one may give to a particular statement the color and effect of a lie, even though it should be literal fact. Conveying a wrong impression by whatever means, is indirect lying. On the other hand, we can imagine a case in which one might be silent from laudable motives, as to certain facts, the bringing out of which might serve no good purpose, but would involve others in sorrow or disgrace. Even in such a case, the motive must be unimpeachable. As to the "right to know," there is none who has the right to know the innermost secrets of the heart, save God.

Mrs. A. W. D., Worcester, Mass. When and by whom was the Apocrypha to the New Testament written?

There were nearly seventy apocryphal writings (not now extant) mentioned by authors who lived in the first four centuries of the Christian era; and there are, besides these, over forty writings of the same class which still exist, ancient copies in the original language having been preserved. The details concerning these writings would occupy too much valuable space to be given here. You can procure Tischendorf's, Farrar's, or some later commentary on the apocrypha from any publisher of religious works.

C. B. Smith, Anacostia, D. C., writes concerning a question which recently appeared in THE MAIL-BAG:

The question is in your issue of the 11th inst., whether any intelligent and reliable foreigner has been permitted within the last fifty or one hundred years to descend into the cave of Machpelah, at Hebron. Dean Stanley, in his book on the tour of the Prince of Wales through Palestine, gives a graphic account of the descent of the prince and his party into this cave, where they saw the graves of the patriarchs. The book giving this account, I presume, can be found in most public libraries.

F. C. R., Harmony, Pa. Can a professor of Christianity enter heaven while holding hatred and envy towards one who has wronged him?

Christ best answers that question when he says: "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."

Student, Ont., Can. What is being done in "spelling reform" in the United States?

Rapid progress has not been made. A number of changes, which look to the dropping of silent letters have, however, received some high sanction, though the practice of following such suggestions obtains slowly. Some response has been made to the recent proposal of the National Educational Association for revised spelling of twelve words (program, tho, altho, thoro, thorofare, thru, thruout, catalog, prolog, decalog, demagog and pedagog) has been adopted or recommended for use in public schools of Pittsfield and Northampton, Mass., in Denver, and in Chicago, and by a few prominent publishing houses. The University of Chicago press resolved to adopt the new spellings, but the reform was considered too radical, and was vetoed by conservative members of the faculty. The Chicago Society of Proofreaders has endeavored to encourage the reform.

F. A. G., Citronelle, Fla. 1. How should communion bread be prepared. 2. What should be done with that which is left?

1. The ordinary bread of every-day life will serve the purpose. 2. As only the portion used is consecrated, that which is left has no particularly sacred character; still, its association with the communion table should save it from thoughtless usage thereafter. It might be given to the very poor, who would use it gladly.

I. F., Hagood, S. C. 1. To what race do the people of India belong? 2. What was U. S. Grant's middle name?

1. The Hindus, as natives of India are commonly termed, are accredited by ethnologists to the great Aryan or Indo-European family of nations, resemblance between the languages of all showing a common origin. The mother nation of all, "which died in giving them birth," is supposed to have been in occupation of Central Asia at a period when Europe was a jungle; first, one off-shoot, and then another migrated, and thus a wide distribution resulted. The Aryan race consists, as now defined, of two branches: the Western comprehending the inhabitants of Europe (with exception of Magyars, Finns and Turks) and naturally, their descendants in America; and the Eastern, comprehending the inhabitants of Armenia, Persia, Afghanistan, and the dominant race of India. India has, however, tribes of mongolian type and peoples showing the admixture of many races. 2. Simpson.

A. G. R. Is baptism a saving ordinance?

No; but it is commanded by Christ, and what he commands should be a duty and a pleasure for Christians to obey.

Earnest Christian, Schuylkill Haven, Pa. If a young man, who had to leave the public schools through misfortune and ill health when quite young, but who has obtained a fair education through self-instruction, and has not the means available to undergo a college course now has a desire to enter the ministry, how can he decide if he is called by God? If he has been but recently converted, is there anything to cause his rejection in that direction?

Better consult, if possible, with some warm-hearted minister of the Gospel living near you, who can advise you at close range. The recent date of your conversion need not prove a hindrance. If the way does not open up for a suitable education, it is possible that Providence is leading you to seek some other field of usefulness for which you could be fitted from an educational point of view with less care and in less time.

C. R. B., Bangor, Me. What is the Monroe doctrine?

In December, 1823, it being known that the "Holy Alliance," the emperors of Russia and Austria and the king of Prussia, purposed aiding Spain in bringing back her revolted South American colonies to obedience, President Monroe called attention to the matter in his annual message. Setting forth the friendly relations of the United States with the new South American republics, he went on to say, "We could not view an interposition for oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny by any European power, in any other light than as a manifestation of an unfriendly disposition towards the United States." The Alliance speedily gave up its project. The principle of non-interference by the United States with European politics with the natural sequence, the refusal to permit European interference in American politics, has been maintained ever since.

A. E. R., Hudson, Ala. Are Mormons Christians? If so, and they do not teach the doctrine of polygamy, why are they so cruelly persecuted by people who claim to be Christians?

The Mormons claim to believe in the Bible, as supplemented by the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine, also in the salvation of a man "only if he believes in Christ's atonement, repents, is baptized by immersion by a Christ-appointed apostle, and receives the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost by only authorized apostles." The history of Mormonism shows such gross abuse of the main doctrines of Christianity that few evangelical Christians would admit their title to the name.

E. S., Waterford. Miss Gould lives in Irvington, N. Y.

W. S. T., Rochester, N. Y. Purchases on Sunday from drug stores are excusable only on the ground of absolute necessity.

Mrs. A. H. P., North Castine, Me. "God first," is a motto worth keeping in view, and our highest duty is to him. See Matt. 10: 35-38.

T. J. Schwarz, Neb. We see nothing wrong about such suppers, but good taste and a sense of the fitness of things would suggest that they be held elsewhere than in the church building.

New Englander, Concord, N. H. We have no means of knowing how many signatures our readers sent to Washington to protest against Brigham H. Roberts taking his seat in Congress, but there were doubtless many thousands.

Marion, Knoxville, Ia. All documents transferring title in real estate or other property should be regularly drawn in accordance with prescribed legal forms and signed in presence of competent witnesses: otherwise they are liable to be declared invalid.

MISSIONARIES IN COUNCIL

ENTRANCE TO CARNEGIE HALL

A SCENE that will be memorable in the annals of the Christian Church was presented in Carnegie Music Hall, New York, at the opening of the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missons on April 21. Bronzed veterans of the Christian army whose lives have been passed at the front in India, China, Japan, Asia Minor, among the savages of the interior of Africa, in the islands of the Pacific, and in other strongholds of heathenism, were there to tell of the triumphs of the Cross. Heroes unconscious of their heroism; men who have given up the world and all they hold dear for Christ, and who count the sacrifice well made, were quietly sitting side by side in a Christian land, intent only on learning what others had done, and recounting their own achievements not in boasting, but for the encouragement of their comrades from other fields. It was good to see such men at least for once, in the flesh, for their names are inscribed on the honor roll of Christ's kingdom, and in the great day of final award we shall see them again, welcomed and honored by Him who promised that those who gave up home and friends and country and houses and lands for his sake should in no wise lose their reward.

The spectacle was significant to the student of the movements of religious organizations. It has not been given to preceding generations to see such accord among the denominations as that great gathering showed. Probably never before in five centuries, have representatives of so many creeds been found under one roof. And they were not fiercely contending for their varied religious principles, intensely as they believe in them, but uniting in the one great purpose, drawn together by the one supreme desire of promoting the advance of the common Christianity in which they are all engaged. Surely, He who prayed in the last solemn hours of his life "that they all may be one," must have looked down with joy on that gathering and have seen the dawn of the day that he predicted as a result of such union, when the world would believe as it witnessed the unprecedented harmony "that thou hast sent me." Faith in Christ, love for him, enthusiasm in his cause, loyalty to his person, profound conviction in his Gospel as the remedy for the world's sin and sorrow—these were the principles animating that great assemblage and the regiments of veterans were less concerned about their regimental names and colors than about the great banner of the Cross under which all were united. A grand and glorious augury was that gathering of the coming time when none would say I am of Paul and I of Cephas, but all would glory in the name of Christ.

Ex-President Harrison, who is President of the Conference, struck a true keynote in his opening address when he said:

Not the least beneficent aspect and influence of this great gathering will be found in the Christian union that it evidences. The value of this is great at home, but tenfold greater in the mission field, where ecclesiastical divisions suggest diverse prophets. The Bible does not draw its illustrations wholly from the home or the fields, but uses also strenuous things of life, the race, the fight, the girded soldier, the assault. There are many fields; there are diverse arms: the battle is in the bush, and the comrades that are seen are few. A view of the whole army is a good thing; the heart is strengthened by an enlarged comradeship. It gives promise that the flank will be covered and a reserve organized. After days in the bush the sense of numbers is lost. It greatly strengthens the soldier and quickens his pace when he advances to battle, if a glance to right or left reveals many pennons, and a marshaled host moving under one great leader to execute a single battle plan.

The highest conception that has ever entered the mind of man is that of God as the Father of all men—the one blood—the universal brotherhood. It was not evolved, but revealed. The natural man lives to be ministered unto—he lays his imposts upon others. He buys slaves that they may fan him to sleep, bring him the jeweled cup, dance before him, and die in the arena for his sport. Into such a world there came a King, "not to be ministered unto but to minister." The rough winds fanned his sleep; he drank of the mountain brook; would not use his power to stay his own hunger, but had compassion on the multitude. He called them he had bought with a great price no more servants, but friends. He entered the bloody arena alone, and, dying, broke all chains and brought life and immortality to light.

Here is the perfect altruism; here the true appraisal of men. Ornaments of gold and gems, silken robes, houses, lands, stocks and bonds—these are tare when men are weighed. Where else is there a scale so true? Where a brotherhood so wide and perfect? Labor is made noble—the King credits the smallest service. His values are relative; he takes account of the per cent. when tribute is brought into his treasury. No coin of love is base or small to him. The widow's mite he sets in his crown. Life is sweetened; the poor man becomes of account. Where else is found a philosophy of life so sweet and adaptable—a philosophy of death so comforting?

No less cordial was the greeting of President McKinley whose tribute coming from the chief magistrate of this great nation was all the more significant. It must have cheered the hearts of the missionaries who have toiled for years in loneliness far away from civilization to hear the statesman who is the chosen and elected head of the foremost Christian nation on earth say:

I am glad of the opportunity to offer without stint my tribute of respect to the missionary effort which has wrought such wonderful triumphs for civilization. The story of the Christian missions is one of thrilling interest and marvellous results. The sacrifices of the missionaries for their fellow men constitute one of the most glorious pages of the world's history. The missionary, of whatever church or ecclesiastical body, who devotes his life to the service of the Master and of men, carrying the torch of truth and enlightenment, deserves the gratitude and homage of mankind. The noble, self-effacing, willing ministers of peace and good-will should be classed with the world's heroes.

May this great meeting rekindle the spirit of missionary ardor and enthusiasm "to go teach all nations"; may the field never lack a succession of heralds who shall carry on the task—the continuous proclamation of his Gospel to the end of time!

From Dr. Judson Smith, the Secretary of the American Board of Commissioners, the visitors received a cordial greeting. There was no trace of denominationalism in the glowing words with which he welcomed representatives of other creeds, nor any grudging in his tribute of praise to missionaries of other organizations. It was from the heart of a brother in Christ full of love and appreciation of sterling work that he said:

And you missionaries of every name, from every continent and island and tribe of Asia and Africa and Oceanica, part of "the far-flung battle line" of the Christian host, who come from posts of hardship and danger, of great plans and wisest statesmanship, some of whom bear in your persons the marks of the well-fought fight, who give our spirits heroic aims and lift our life from common dust to mingle with immortal light and hope—what words of human speech can tell the homage we owe, the pride we feel, the love and the welcome we give! To these rare days you bring no common gift; to these assemblies you lend a lustre above all earthly pomp and power. We move on different lines; we use each our own equipment and armor; we employ our several methods. But the goal we seek is one; the victory of each is the victory of all, and the triumph of our Lord in all the earth, among the nations, is as sure and irresistible as the flash of the sunlight, as the sweep of the heavenly globes.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT.

Moving-Day in the Cities

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Philippians 4: 12: . . . I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound.

HAPPY Paul! Could you really accommodate yourself to all circumstances in life? Could you go up without pride, and could you come down without exasperation? Teach the same lesson to us all.

We are at a season of the year when vast populations in all our cities are changing residence. Having been born in a house, and having all our lives lived in a house, we do not have full appreciation of what a house is. It is the growth of thousands of years. The human race first lived in clefts of rocks, the beasts of the field moving out of the caverns to let the human race move in. The shepherds and the robbers still live in caverns of the earth. The Troglodytes are a race which to this day prefer the caverns to a house. They are warm, they are large, they are very comfortable, they are less subject to violent changes of heat and cold. We come on along down in the history of the race, and we come to the lodge, which was a home built out of twisted tree branches. We come further on down in the history of the race, and we come to the tent, which was a home built with a round pole in the centre and skins of animals reaching out in all directions, mats on the floor for the people to sit on.

Time passed on, and the world, after much invention, came to build a house, which was a space surrounded by broad stones against which the earth was heaped from the outside. The roof was made of chalk and gypsum and coals and stones and ashes pounded together. After a while the porch was born. After a while the gate. Then hundreds of years passed on, and in the fourteenth century the modern chimney was constructed. The old Hebrews had openings in their houses from which the smoke might escape if it preferred, but there was no inducement offered for it to leave until the modern chimney. Wooden keys opened the door, or the keyhole was large enough to allow the finger to be inserted for the lifting of the latch or the sliding it. There being no windows the people were dependent for light upon lattice work, over which a thin veil was drawn down in time of winter to keep out the elements. Window glass was, so late as two or three hundred years ago in England and Scotland, so great a luxury that only the very wealthiest could afford it. A hand-mill and an oven and a few leathern bottles and some rude pitchers and plates made up the entire equipment of the culinary department. But the home planted in the old cave, or at the foot of a tent pole, has grown and enlarged and spread abroad until we have the modern house, with its branches and roots, and vast girth and height and depth of comfort and accommodation.

Architecture in other days busied itself chiefly in planning and building triumphal arches and basilicas and hippodromes and mausoleums and columns, while they allowed the people for residences to burrow like musk-rats in the earth. St. Sophia's, of Constantinople, St. Mark's, of Venice, St. Peter's, of Rome, are only the Raphaeled walls against which lean the squalor and the pauperism of many nations. I rejoice that while our modern architects give us grand capitols in which to legislate, and grand court houses in which to administer justice, and grand churches in which to worship God, they also give much of their time to the planning of comfortable abodes for our tired population. I have not so much interest in the Arch of Trajan at Beneventum, as I have in the wish that all the people may have a comfortable shelter; nor have I so much interest in the Temple of Jupiter Olympus at Athens, as I have in the hope that every man may have an altar for the worship of the true God in his own house. And I have not so much interest in the science of ceramics, which goes crazy over a twisted vase or a queer-handled jug in use three thousand years ago, or a pitcher out of which the ancient Pharaohs poured their drunken debauch, as I have that every man have on his table a plate with plenty of healthful food and an appetite to attack it.

Thank God for your home—not merely the house you live in now, but the house you were born in, and the many houses you have resided in since you began your earthly residence. When you go home to-day count over the number of those houses in which you have resided, and you will be surprised. Once in a while you will find a man who lives in the house where he was born, and where his father was born, and his grandfather was born, and his great-grandfather was born; but that is not one out of a thousand cases. I have not been more perambulatory than most people, but I was amazed when I came to count up the number of residences I have occupied. The fact is, there is in this world no such thing as permanent residence.

You see the race is nomadic, and no sooner gets in one place than it wants to change for another place, or is compelled to change for another place, and so the race invented the railroad and the steamboat, in order more rapidly to get into some other place than that in which it was then. Ay, instead of being nomadic, it is immortal, moving on and moving on. We whip up our horses and hasten on until the hub of the front wheel shivers on the tombstone and tips us headlong into the grave, the only permanent earthly residence. But, bless God, even that stay is limited, for we shall have a resurrection.

A day this Spring the streets will be filled with the furniture carts and the drays and the trucks. It will be a hard day for horses, because they will be overloaded. It will be a hard day for laborers, for they will overlift before they get the family furniture from one house to another. It will be a hard day for housekeepers to see their furniture scratched, and their crockery broken, and their carpets misfit, and their furniture dashed of the sudden showers. It will be a hard day for landlords. It will be a hard day for tenants. Especial grace is needed for moving day. Many a man's religion has suffered a fearful strain between the hour on the morning of the first of May, when he took his immature breakfast, and the hour at night when he rolled into his extemporized couch. The furniture broken sometimes will result in the breaking of the ten commandments. There is no more fearful pass than the hall of a house where two families meet, one moving out and the other moving in! The salutation is apt to be more vehement than complimentary. The grace that will be sufficient for the first of January, and the first of February, and the first of March, and the first of April, will not be sufficient for the first of May. Say your prayers that morning if you find nothing better to kneel down by than a coal-scuttle, and say your prayers at night though your knee comes down on a paper of carpet tacks. You will want supernatural help if any of you move. Help in the morning to start out aright on the day's work. Help at night to repent. There will be enough annoyances to make a Xanthippe out of a Frances Ridley Havergal. I have again and again been in crisis of moving day, and I have stood appalled and amazed and helpless in the shipwreck, taking as well as I could those things that floated ashore from the breakers, and I know how to comfort and how to warn and how to encourage the people; so I preach this practical May-day sermon. All these troubles will soon be gone, and the bruises will heal, and the stiffened joints will become supple, and your ruffled temper will be smoothed of its wrinkles, and order will take the place of disorder, and you will sit down in your new home seriously to contemplate.

My first word then in this part of my discourse is to all those who move out of small houses into larger ones. Now we will see whether, like the apostle, you know how to abound. Do not, because your new house has two more stories than the old one, add two stories to your vanity, or make your brightly polished silver door-plate the coffin-plate to your buried humility. Many persons moving into a larger house have become arrogant and supercilious. They swagger where once they walked, they simper where once they laughed, they go about with an air which seems to say, "Let all smaller craft get out of these waters if they don't want to be run over by a regular Cunarder." I have known people who were kind and amiable and Christian in their smaller house—no sooner did they go over the door-sill of the new house than they became a glorified nuisance. They were the terror of dry-goods clerks and the amazement of ferryboats into which they swept; and if compelled to stand a moment with condemnatory glance turning all the people seated into criminals and convicts. They began to hunt up the family coat-of-arms, and had lion couchant, or unicorn rampant on the carriage door; when, if they had the appropriate coat-of-arms, it would have been a butterfirkin, or a shoe-last, or a plough, or a trowel. Now, my friends, if you move into a larger house, thank God for more room—for more room to hang your pictures, for more room in which to gather your friends, for more room in which to let your children romp and play, for more room for great bookcases filled with good reading, or wealth of bric-a-brac. Have as large and as fine a house as you can afford to have, but do not sacrifice your humility and your common sense: do not lose your balance, do not be spoiled by your successes.

Years ago, we were the guests in an English manor. The statuary, the ferneries, the botanical and horticultural genius of the place had done all they could do to make the place attractive. For generations there had been an amassing of plate and costly surroundings. At half-past nine o'clock in the morning, the proprietor of the estate had the bell rung, and some twenty or thirty men-servants and maid-servants came in to prayers. The proprietor of the estate read the Scriptures, gave out the hymn, his daughter at the organ started the music, and then the music over, the proprietor of the estate kneeled down and commended all his guests, all his family, all his employees to the Lord Almighty. God can trust such a man as that with a large estate. He knows how to abound. He trusted God and God trusted him. And I could call off the roll of fifty merchant princes as mighty for God as they are mighty in worldly successes. Ah, my friends, do not be puffed up by any of the successes of this life; do not be spoiled by the number of liveried coachmen that may stop at your door, or the sweep of the long trail across the imported tapestry. Many of those who come to your house are fawning parasites. They are not so much in love with you as they are in love with your house and your successes. You move down next year to 320 Low-Water-Mark street, and see how many of their carriages will halt at your door.

Timon of Athens was a wealthy lord, and all the mighty men and women of the land came and sat at his banquet, proud to sit there, and they drank deep to his health. They sent him costly presents. He sent costlier presents back again, and there was no man in all the land so admired as Timon of Athens, the wealthy lord. But after a while, through lavish hospitality, or through betrayal, he lost everything. Then he sent for help to those lords whom he had banqueted and to whom he had given large sums of money, Lucullus, Lucius, Sempronius and Ventidias. Did those lords send any help to him? Oh, no. Lucullus said when he was applied to, "Well, I thought that Timon would come down, he was too lavish; let him suffer for his recklessness." Lucius said, "I would be very glad to help Timon, but I have made large purchases and my means are all absorbed." And one lord sent one excuse and another lord sent another excuse. But to the astonishment of everybody, after awhile Timon proclaimed another feast. Those lords said to themselves: "Why, either Timon has had a good turn of fortune, or he has been deceiving us, testing our love." And so they all flocked to the banquet apologetic for seeming lukewarmness. The guests were all seated at the table, and Timon ordered the covers lifted. The covers lifted, there was nothing under them but smoking hot water. Then Timon said to his guests, "Dogs, lap, lap, dogs!" and under the terrific irony they fled the room, while Timon pursued them with his anathema, calling them fools of fortune, destroyers of happiness under a mask, hurling at the same time the pitchers and the chalices after them. O! my friends, I would not want to make you over-suspicious in the day of your success, but I want you to understand right well there is a vast difference between the popularity of Timon, the prosperous, and Timon the unfortunate—I want you to know there is a vast difference in the number of people who admire a man when he is going up, and the number of people who admire him when he is going down.

But I must have a word with those who in this May-day time move out of larger residences into smaller. Sometimes the pathetic reason is that the family has dwindled in size and so much room is not required, so they move out into smaller apartments. I know there are such cases. Marriage has taken some of the members of the family, death has taken other members of the family, and, after a while, father and mother wake up to find their family just the size it was when they started, and they would be lonesome and lost in a large house; hence they move out of it. Moving day is a great sadness to such if they have the law of association dominant. There are the rooms named after the different members of the family. I suppose it is so in all your households. It is so in mine; we name the rooms after the persons who occupy them. And then there is the dining-hall where the festivities took place, the holiday festivities; there is the sitting-room where the family met night after night, and there is the room sacred because there a life started, or a life stopped; the Alpha and the Omega of some earthly existence. Scene of meeting and parting, of congratulation and heart-break. Every door-knob, every fresco, every mantel, every threshold meaning more to you than it can ever mean to any one else. When moving out of a house I have always been in the habit, after everything was gone, of going into each room and bidding it a mute farewell. There will be tears running down many cheeks in the May-time moving that the carmen will not be able to understand. It is a solemn and a touching and an overwhelming thing to leave places forever—places where we have struggled and toiled and wept and sung and prayed and anxiously watched and agonized. O! life is such a strange mixture of honey and of gall, weddings and burials, midnoon and midnight clashing. Every home a lighthouse against which the billows of many seas tumble. Thank God that such changes are not always going to continue, otherwise the nerves would give out and the brain would founder on a dementia like that of King Lear when his daughter Cordelia came to medicine his domestic calamity.

But there are others who will move out of large residences into smaller through the reversal of fortune. The property must be sold, or the baliff will sell it, or the income is less and you cannot pay the house rent. First of all, such persons should understand that our happiness is not dependent on the size of the house we live in. I have known people enjoy a small heaven in two rooms, and others suffer a pandemonium in twenty. There is as much happiness in a small house as in a large house. There is as much satisfaction under the light of a tallow candle as under the glare of a chandelier all the burners at full blaze. Who was the happier, John Bunyan in Bedford Jail, or Belshazzar in the saturnalia? Contentment is something you can neither rent nor purchase. It is not extrinsic, it is intrinsic. Are there fewer rooms in the house to which you move? you will have less to take care of. Is it to be stove instead of furnace? all the doctors say the modern modes of warming buildings are unhealthy. Is it less social position? fewer people who want to drag you down by their jealousies. Is it less fortune to leave in your last will and testment? less to spoil your children. Is it less money for the marketing? less temptation to ruin the health of your family with pine-apples and indigestible salads.

I meet you this Spring-time at the door of your new home, and I sincerely congratulate you. You are going to have a better time this year, some of you, than you ever had. You take God and the Christian religion in your home and you will be grandly happy. God in the parlor—that will sanctify your sociabilities. God in the nursery—that will protect your children. God in the dining-hall—that will make the plainest meal an imperial banquet. God in the morning—that will launch the day brightly from the dry docks. God in the evening—that will sail the day sweetly into the harbor.

And get joy, one and all of you, whether you move or do not move. Get joy out of the thought that we are soon all going to have a grand moving day. Do you want a picture of the new house into which you will move? Here it is, wrought with the hand of a master: "We know that, if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." When are we going to move into it? We are moving now. On moving day heads of families are very apt to stay in the old house until they have seen everything off. They send ahead the children and they send ahead the treasures and the valuables. Then after awhile they will come themselves. I remember very well in the country that in boyhood moving day was a jubilation. On almost the first load we the children, were sent on ahead to the new house and we arrived with shout and laughter, and in an hour we had ranged through every room in the house, the barn and the granary. Toward night, and perhaps in the last wagon, father and mother would come, looking very tired, and we would come down to the foot of the lane to meet them and tell them of all the wonders we discovered in the new place.

Well, my dear Lord knows that some of us have been moving a good while. We have sent our children ahead, we have sent many of our valuables ahead, sent many treasures ahead. We cannot go yet. There is work for us to do; but after a while it will be toward night and we will be very tired, and then we will start for our new home; and those who have gone ahead of us will see our approach, and they will come down the lane to meet us. And there for the first time we will realize what fools we were on earth when we feared to die, since death has turned out only to be the moving from a smaller house into a larger one, and the exchange of a pauper's hut for a prince's castle, and the going upstairs from a miserable kitchen to a glorious parlor. O! house of God not made with hands, eternal in the heavens!

Paris and its Exposition Palaces

Architectural Features of the Exposition . . .

. . . Present Condition of the Buildings—The Czar's Token

ALTHOUGH incompleteness marks the Paris Exposition, the attractions are daily growing more numerous. The first royal visit was that of the Queen of Saxony on April 18; other crowned heads will delay their visits until the period of construction is over. On April 17, the Russian section, up to that date the only section absolutely complete, was formally inaugurated by M. Loubet, President of the French Republic. It was half past ten o'clock in the morning when the President, accompanied by Gen. Bailloud, Gen. Combarien, M. Poulet and the officers of his military household, arrived under the colonnade of the Trocadero. Barriers of wood surrounded the Russian pavilion and behind the barriers were assembled the Russian workmen who shouted "Hourra! Vive Loubet! Vivents les Francais!" The President was received with cordiality by Prince Ourousoff, the Russian Ambassador, who at once conducted him to the room in which had been placed the costly present which the Czar of Russia had sent as a token of good-will to France.

This present consists of a beautiful map of France made of marble and precious stones, the whole bordered with ebony, the sombre character of which sets off the sparkling jewels most appropriately. The Ambassador made a neat little speech in presenting the map, which he said the Czar intended as a new token of the friendly relations between the two governments and peoples. The President, in reply, expressed himself as much touched, and said that the map would find its place amid the masterpieces of art in the Louvre, the home of so many French treasures. It took skilled workmen two years to produce this unique piece of topographical art.

President Loubet listened, during his visit, to delightful music by the Kremlin band which was formed by the late Emperor Alexander III., who himself had played a brass instrument in its ranks. Among the many attractive displays of the Russian section must be mentioned the handsome furs and skins. These are sure to find favor in American eyes. To the Grand Duchesse Serge is due the organization of a Russian village. This was visited by President Loubet. At the entrance to the village he was received by M. and Mme. Takounchikoff, who represented the grand duchesse, and offered the customary bread and salt. The bread took the form of a round cake, resembling the French twelfth night cake. It was tended on a white serviette, on a silver dish, while the salt was contained in a crystal salt-seller incrusted with gold. Pleasant little speeches were made by Mme. Takounchikoff and the President, the latter begging his host to thank the grand duchesse for the part which her imperial highness had taken in the success of the Russian section of the Exposition.

April 19 was children's day. The schools were closed and the little folks were early in possession. They appeared to be as much interested in the proceedings of the thousands of workmen who were busy on all hands, as in the exhibits. On this day the horticultural section was laid open. A magnificent display of fruit from the Crimea, sent by the Imperial Horticultural Society of Russia, aroused much interest.

The Exposition grounds are now covered with flowers, the electric lighting apparatus is being rapidly installed and the great Chateau d'Eau, or water palace, is being pushed to completion. This will be a singularly beautiful feature of the Exposition. The fountains will discharge about fifty thousand gallons of water an hour, the supply coming from an immense reservoir on the left bank of the Seine. With the combination of falling water and electricity many beautiful effects are promised at the forthcoming "fetes de nuit," or night exhibitions.

Whether from the unfinished condition of the Exposition or from other causes, it is not easy to say, but the average attendance has by no means come up to expectations. Sunday recorded 188,000 paying entrances, Monday 123,000, Tuesday 88,350. Nor is this last the lowest record that has been made. As a result the price of admission has been reduced. At certain hours one can get in on presentation of one ticket which costs the equivalent of about six American cents. At other hours and on certain special days, from two to five of these tickets are required for admission, but the attendance during hours when more than one ticket is necessary is not as encouraging as the officials could wish.

From the views presented on this page of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD it will be seen that the buildings are very beautiful. By the time the usual summer influx of American visitors has reached the bright capital of France they will be in their glory, the din and hum of preparation will be over, and the delay attending the earlier weeks of the Exposition will be forgotten in the impressive consummation.

A Prison Revival

DURING the past year, Rev. Wm. C. Stoudenmire, chaplain of the Maryland State penitentiary, has been earnestly striving to induce the prisoners to give up sin and accept Christ. As a result of the year's battle, 126 of the men assembled around the altar in the Penitentiary chapel, confessed their belief in Jesus Christ, renounced the devil, and promised to faithfully follow Jesus in their everyday life. Thirty-three were baptized and ninety-three were confirmed in the Christian faith. With other Christian prisoners they were then privileged to partake of communion. It was a very impressive scene, these men lost to the world through sin, guilty of almost every known crime, now saved through Christ's love and sacrifice. For months the class has been forming and receiving instruction from the chaplain, who in practical, earnest talks at the Sunday School service, has reached many hearts and caused the men to halt and think. As he came in personal contact with them in cell-to-cell visitations, he pressed home the spiritual truths with telling effect. Many during the year have been influenced and helped in their determination to lead a new life, and others who have reformed have been restored to family and friends. Rev. Joseph T. Smith, D.D., of the Presbyterian church, and Rev. Esra K. Bell, D. D., of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, assisted the chaplain in his work among the prisoners, and Mrs. Kate Doane sang for them.

A Boon to the World

DAYTON, VA.

Dear "Christian Herald": You did a wonderful thing for the world when you originated the plan of the Red Letter Testament. It is far more impressive than can be described and the reader feels that he has been brought nearer Christ, and that his conversation was personal. He talks face to face, as it were, with the Master.

SAMANTHA MEETS THE EMPRESS

BEING in Shanghai over Sunday, we attended service held by a missionary. It wuz a beautiful service which we all enjoyed. The words of this good Christian man in prayer and praise sounded to our ears as sweet as the sound of waters in a desert land. Over a hundred wuz present, and after service the pulpit was moved off and several wuz baptized in water jest as they do in America.

The rich and poor seem to live side by side more than they do in our country, and rich merchants live over their shops; mebby it is to protect them from the Feng Shui, for if that gits on track of a rich man a great part of his wealth is appropriated by the government; it very often borrys their money—or what it calls borryin'.

A Useful Ornament

Shanghai wuz the first place where I see men carryin' fans. When they're not fannin' themselves they put the fan at the back of their neck, for a ornament I guess.

Josiah made a note in his pocket diary: "Mem—To git a fan the day after I git home, to carry it to Jonesville to meetin', to fan myself with it on the way there before Elder Minkley and Brother Henzy. Mem—A red and yaller one." But of this fan bizness more anon.

There are not many wimmen in the streets here. The poorer class of Chinese let their feet grow to the natural size; it is only the aristocracy who bind up their feet.

But my mission to the Empress wore on me. I felt that I must not delay seekin' a augience. And, as it happened, or no, not happened—it wuz to be—one day whilst Josiah and Arvilly and Tommy and I wuz walkin' in a beautiful garden, the rest of the party bein' away on another tower after pleasure and instruction, Josiah and Tommy had gone to see the fish in a fountain a little ways off, and Arvilly wuz some distance away, when all of a sudden I heard a bystander say in a low, awe-struck voice, "There is the Empress."

The Meeting with Si Ann

She wuz walkin' through the garden with two ladies-in-waiting, and a elegant carriage wuz goin' slow a little ways off, givin' her a chance for excercise, I spoze. She wuz dressed in a long, colored silk night-gown—or it wuz shaped like one—though they wear 'em day times, all embroidered and glitterin' with precious stuns. She didn't have her crown on—mebby it wuz broke and away to be fixed—but her hair wuz combed dretful slick and stuck full of jeweled pins and stars, etc. I knowed her by her picture, and also by my feelins', and I sez to myself, Now is the time for me to onburden myself of the important mission that had been layin' so heavy on my chist. Yes, Duty's apron strings jest drawed me right up in front of her, and I advanced, holdin' out my hand in as friendly a way as if she had come for a all-day's visit to me in Jonesville. Her ladies-in-waitin' kinder fell back, and as I advanced I bowed real low—as low as I dasted to, for I felt that I wouldn't have ketched my feet in the facin' of my dress and fell down at that time for a dollar bill. She's smart; she recognized my lofty sperit, and her greetin' wuz considerable cordial, though held back by her Chinese education.

Samantha's Greeting

Sez I, "Empress Si Ann (I d'no but I ort to call her Sarah Ann, that's probable her name docked off by her folks to pet her. But I thought I wouldn't meddle with a pet name; I'd call her Si Ann).

Sez I, "I set out from Jonesville with a important message for you, and I've bore it over the ocean on a tower and now I lay it at your feet."

"WE WUZ WALKIN' IN A BEAUTIFUL GARDEN"

I here paused to give her a chance to wonder what it wuz, and get some excited, then I went on, "I felt that I must see you on my own account and Josiah's and the nation's, and tell you not to, oh not to lay that Piece Conference to us. I have laid awake nights worryin' about it, for fear you'd think that Josiah and I, bein' prominent Americans, had jined in and wuz tryin' to cut China to pieces. But we hadn't a thing to do with it."

I meant to keep Josiah in the background, knowin' the Chinese aversion to mix up the sects in company, but he'd come back and he had to put in his oar here and sez he, "No, they couldn't git me to jine 'em. I wuz down with a crick at the time and Samantha had to nuss me. We had our hands full and we couldn't have jined 'em anyway," he sez.

I wunk at him and stepped on his toe, but nothin' could stop him, and he went on, "I wouldn't have jined 'em anyway, Miss Hein Fong, I wouldn't treat a neighbor so."

Near Neighbors

"Neighbor?" sez she wonderin'ly.

"Yes," sez he, "you know our land jines on the under side. China jines my paster in the middle, though owin' to the way our land lays we can't neighbor much, and," sez he, "you're enough sight better neighbors than some I've got, your folks are old settlers and have always tended to their own bizness and kep' their cattle and hens to hum, which is more than I can say for all the neighbors whose land jines mine."

That Peace Conference Again

But I could see that the ladies-in-waitin' wuz oneasy at havin' a man talkin' to 'em so free and I kinder advanced in front of him and sez:

"Josiah and I wuz dretful tickled with the idee at first when we spozed that conference meant real p-e-a-c-e and tryin' to bring the most beautiful gift of God and joy of heaven nigher to earth. Why, it jest riz us right up, we felt so highly tickled with it. But when we see 'em begin to spell it p-i-e-ce, and quarrel over the pieces, why, then we turned right agin' 'em. Why, good land! even if it wuz right, Josiah has got all the land he wants to work and more too, and as I tell him, what is the use of him or the nation havin' a great lot of land to stand idle and pay taxes on, and keep a gang of hired men to watch. Men and nations can git land poor, I believe."

Advice to the Empress

I see she liked what I said about the Peace Commission, but I wuz afraid she didn't git my idee jest right, so I sez, "I believe in the first on't the Zar's idee come right down from heaven, filtered into his comprehension mebby through a woman's apprehension. But you know how it is, Si Ann, in the berry lot now if there are bushes hangin' full of big ones jest over the fence and somebody else is gittin' 'em all, you kinder want to jine in and git some on 'em yourself, though you may be a perfesser and singin' a Sam tune at the time, specially if the fence is broke down that separates you. I can see how it wuz with that Piece Commission and make allowances for 'em, but we didn't have a thing to do with it and we don't want any of the pieces." My axent carried conviction with it; I see she looked relieved. She didn't say it right out, but I felt that we hadn't fell in her estimation, and I went on:

"And I don't want you to blame Uncle Sam either, Si Ann. I believe he will help you all he can, help you in the right way, too; help you to help yourselves. But your folks have got to brace up and do their part; Uncle Sam will neighbor with you if you give him a chance. He's real good-hearted, though bein' so easy and good-natered, he is deceived lots of times and influenced and led around by them that want to make money out of him, such as the trusts and the liquor power. But he stands ready to neighbor with you, and don't turn your back on him, Si Ann. Don't do anything to get him huffy, for though he hain't quick to git mad, he's got a temper when it's rousted up."

Si Ann's Rejoinder

She said sunthin' about Uncle Sam turnin' her folks out and not lettin' 'em step their feet on our sile. I couldn't deny it, and it kinder danted me for a minute how I wuz goin' to smooth that over, but concluded that as in every other emergency in life, the plain truth wuz the best, and I sez in a real amiable voice:

"Si Ann, there is two sides to that jest as there is to every national and neighborhood quarrel. Uncle Sam hain't liked the way your folks have acted with him, and though I dare presoom to say he's some to blame, yet I can see where your folks have missed it. They would flock right over to our place, crowdin' our own folks out of house and home, and expect Uncle Sam to protect 'em, and then they would jest rake and scrape all they could offen us and go home to spend their money; wouldn't even leave one of their bones in our ground. They didn't want to become citizens of the United States, they seemed to kinder want to set down and stand up at the same time, which hain't reasonable if it is done by an American or a Chinee."

She said sunthin' about the masses of other foreigners that Uncle Sam allowed to crowd into our country.

"Well," sez I, "they're willin' to become citizens, the German and English and Irish and Russian and Italian babies grow up Americans. But it wuzn't so with your folks, Si Ann. From the children's little pig-tails down to their little wooden shues they wuz clear China, soaked in, dyed in the wool, born so, and as long as their bones hung together and afterwards, clear China. They kep' themselves jest as fur from American institutions and beliefs as ile stays away from water and wouldn't mix any more. Their bodies stayed on our shores whilst they could make money out of us. But their souls and minds wuz jest as fur removed from our institutions and constitutions as if they wuz settin' in Jupiter with their legs hangin' off. It wuz galdin' to Uncle Sam and finally he had to stop it. But he didn't do it out of meanness. He jest had to, for of course you know your own folks come first."

Breaking Down the Wall

And thinkin' mebby I'd been too hash describin' her folks I went on, "I spoze mebby that high stun wall of yourn has kinder stiffened and hardened the natur

f your folks and made it harder for 'em o change. But you're on the right track ow, Si Ann, you have begun to break own that big wall, you've begun to be nore neighborly. And don't you ever rouch down and hide behind that great tun wall agin; you jest keep right on be-n' neighborly and Uncle Sam will help ou."

A Hint About "Comfort"

Si Ann looked real good and as if she ook every word I said in good part; bein' naterally so smart she would recognize he onselfishness and nobility of my mis-ion, but I see that there wuz a real pert ook on one of the ladies' faces as she aid sunthin to one of the other ones, and mistrusted that they didn't like what I ad said about that wall of theirn, and I vent on to say to Si Ann:

"Of course you may say that a nation or a woman has a right to do as they're a nind to, but common sense must be used f you are goin' to enjoy yourself much in his world. Now, we had a neighbor in Jonesville that sot out in married life de-ermined not to borrow or lend, dretful exclusive, jest built a high wall of separa-tion round herself and family. But after tryin' it for a year or so she wuz glad to give it up, and many is the cup of tea and sugar I've lent her since, and she borries and lends her washtub now or biler, or settin' hens, or anythin'. And she sez that she and her family takes as much agin' comfort now and are doin' as well agin', for of course the neighbors didn't set so much store by 'em as they did when their ports wuz open, as you may say, and they wuz more neighborly."

No Better Than China

I could see by Si Ann's face that she not only enjoyed all I said, but believed a good share on't, and bein' such a case for justice, I felt that I ort to let her know I realized our own nation's short-comin's, as well as hern. Sez I, "I hain't got a word to say to you, Si Ann, about the different castes in your country, when the wimmen in my own land build up a wall between themselves and their kitchen helpers higher than the highest peak of your stun wall and harder to git over, and I don't want to say a word about your folks bindin' down their children's feet to make 'em small as long as our own fe-males pinch down their waists till they're in perfect agony and ten times as bad as to pinch their feet, for the life, the vital organs don't lay in the feet, or hain't spozed to, and so it don't hurt 'em half so much to be tortured. And as long as they drag round yards of silk and velvet through the streets to rake up filth and disease to carry home and endanger their own lives and their families; no, as long as our females do all this I hain't nothin' to say about your dress and customs here, nor I hain't a goin' to cast reflections agin' you about your men wearin' night gowns and braidin' their hair down their backs. Good land, Si Ann! you and I know what men be. We are married wimmen and seen trouble. You could-n't stop 'em if you tried to. If Josiah Allen took it into his head to braid his hair down his back, I should have to let it go on unless I broke it up sarahup-tishly by cuttin' it off when he wuz asleep, but thank fortin' he hain't got enough so that the braid would be bigger than a pipe stale anyway if he should let it grow out, and he is so dressy he wouldn't like that. But I've tried to break up his wearin' such gay neckties for years and years, and if he should go out and buy one to-day it would most likely be red and yeller."

I felt that China hadn't been used ex-actly right; I knowed it. Younger nations —new-comers, as you may say—had made light on her and abused her, usin' the very type the Chinese had invented to say they didn't know anything, and usin' the gunpowder they had invented to blow 'em up with. I had felt that the Powers hadn't treated 'em well, and I had made up my mind some time ago that when I see the Powers I should tell 'em what I thought on't. Then there wuz the opium trade—a burnin' shame! I wanted to sympathize with her about that, but thought mebby it wuz best to not harrer up her feelin's any more, so I sez in a real polite way:

She Bids Si Ann Adieu

"I have nothin' further to say now, Si Ann, only to bid you adoo and to tell you that if you ever come to Jonesville be sure and come and see me; I'll be proud and happy to have you."

Here Josiah had to put in his note: "Good-by, Widder!" sez he. If I had had time I would have tutored him: he spoke just as he would to widder Gowdey. I wanted him to act more courtly and formal, but it wuz too late, it wuz spoke. "Good-by, widder; we'll have to be a-goin'. We've had quite a spell of weather, but it looks some like rain now, and I have a important engagement to-night, and we'll have to be gittin' hum."

But I gently withdrawed him, bowin' very low myself and lookin' dretful smilin' at her.

"I WITHDRAWED HIM, BOWIN' VERY LOW AND SMILIN'"

ARVILLY AND THE EMPRESS

Some Royal Gifts

Like all great monarchs, she wanted to make her visitors a present, and she pro-posed to send us several drawin's of tea of the kind she used, and a little hunk of opium, though, as I told her, I should never use it in the world only to smoke in a pipe for the toothache; and she also proposed to send us a china sugar-bowl and a piece of the Chinee wall, which last I told her I should value high as a sign that the old things wuz passin' away and better days comin'.

And then I made some more real low bows and Josiah did, bein' wunk at by me, and we withdrawed ourselves from the Presence. But Josiah, always over-doin' things, takin' out his bandanna and a-wavin' it towards her as he bowed most to the ground. But what wuz my surprise as we walked away kinder backward, Josiah mutterin' to me that he should fall flat if he backed off much furder! What wuz my horrow to see Arvilly advance with a copy of her books and present 'em to the Empress. One of the ladies-in-waiting, who seemed to talk English quite considerable, looked at the books and read their titles to her Majesty, who im-megiately signified her desire to purchase 'em, and before she left the group Arvilly had sold three copies of the Twin Crimes and two of the Wild and Warlike.

Arvilly Finds a Customer

Poor Empress! Poor Si Ann! Well might she treasure the last-named book, The Wild, Wicked and Warlike Deeds of Men. Poor thing! I am afraid she will see plenty of it herself. Them Pow-ers, sometimes, when they git to goin', act like the old Harry.

The engagement my pardner had spoke on wuz to meet a Chinaman that wuz comin' to see Robert Strong that evenin'. Robert had met him in California, and Josiah seemed dretful anxious to git home so as to dress up for his reception. And I sez, "There is time enough; I shouldn't think it would take you more than two hours to wash your hands and change your neck-tie."

"Well," sez he, in a evasive way, "I—I don't want to be scrimped for time."

So, as Tommy and I wanted to stop along on the way, he left us and went home. Robert had told us a good deal about this man, Mr. Hi-wal-hum; about his wealth and high official standing, and Josiah had been talkin' more or less about him all day; he looked forrered to it. He had said to me: "Samantha, this man is a Potentate, and it stands us in hand to be polite always to Potentates."

Well, I couldn't dispute him nor didn't want to. When we arriv home I thought that I would have jest about time to go to my room and wash my face and hands and put on a clean collar and cuffs and change Tommy's clothes. Tommy went on a little ahead of me, and I see him bend down and stretch his little neck forrered and look through the door as if he wuz agast at some sight. And as I come up he put his little finger on his lips, as I spoze he'd seen me do, and he whis-pered: "Keep still, Grandma; I don't know what Grandpa is doin'."

Samantha's Lance

As one who wields a lance for truth
Samantha grasps the pen,
Now here, now there, a mighty thrust
She gives again and again.
"The powers that be" (I hope they read it)
Must "wince as galled jade."
The awful blots on history's page
She carefully has weighed.
Write on, Samantha, God will bless
Your words of clear cut sense;
For home and native land you write,
Justice your recompense.

The Whole Nation Should Read it

HICKSVILLE, OHIO.

Dear Editor:—The children as well as the older ones are reading Aunt Samantha every week. I wish the American people might read it and then I think the government might be the gainer.

A Double Tribute

I have been taught by "Samantha's" now under the mould,
Of industry, virtue: their hearth stones now cold.
The author we crowned her with laurels of fame;
But the artist's a power to the tale, "all the same."

A Grand Temperance Argument

IOWA, LA.

Dear Editor:—I want to tell you how I enjoy the trip around the world with Aunt Samantha. I think Arvilly's talk to the army officers the grand-est temperance argument I ever heard. I wish every one could read it.

Thoroughly Enjoying the Trip

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

Dear Editor:—I have been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the last twelve years, and my family and I have certainly enjoyed read-ing the trip around the world with Aunt Saman-tha. We are delighted with Samantha and Josiah.

Noble-Hearted Samantha

THOMAS CITY, Fla.

Dear Editor:—I enjoy Aunt Samantha so much that I can hardly wait from one week to another. I think she is a noble-hearted woman, one who does the whole country good. God bless her! She cer-tainly gives to us "crackers," way down in Florida, a grand idea of foreign lands and customs.

It Brings Out Unique Truths

GUILFORD, CONN.

Dear Editor:—My family think much of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and watch for its weekly vis-its. Aunt Samantha's trip around the world, I hope will sometime come out in book form. It is a fine story, told in such a unique way, and brings out many straight truths. In fact the paper is all an inspiration for good. MRS. C. A. CHAPMAN.

Samantha's Helpfulness

NEW LONDON, CONN.

Dear Editor:—I was glad to read Samantha's idea of church helpfulness socially all the week through. A church's greatness should be far more than costliness or mission offerings, and instead of thanking God that they are not as others—without social gatherings—such churches ought to be praying for power sufficient to live and control social life. "Religion never was designed to make our pleasures less," wrote Watts, years ago.

MRS. A. W. ANDERSON.

A Great Moral Crusade

TOPEKA, KAN.

Dear Editor:—I enjoy Samantha's writings. Ar-villy is sounding the alarm about right. We as an American people need such an alarm,—look at the evil places, the prize fights, the open saloons, the gambling dens and other things that belong to Satan. Awake, America, and get to work! The harvest is ripe and the laborers are few. God be with you and may the good work go on.

A Rare Family Pleasure

TROY, N. Y.

Dear Editor:—Once a week, our little fam-ily (there are five of us) gather around the sitting-room table. The day is either Wed-nesday or Thursday and the occasion is the arrival of the dear CHRISTIAN HERALD with the latest instalment of Samantha. Then, for the better part of an hour—one of us reading aloud—we have a genuine wholesome good time, a time of unalloyed enjoyment.

It would be a weak tribute to say that we enjoy Samantha. We have all grown to love her dearly. From the crown of her fuzzy old top-knot to the toe of her shoe, we dote upon her, and think she is about the best represent-ative of rural American common sense, with a strong vein of practical piety run in, that we have ever known between the covers of a book. Her humor is as clean and invigorating as the sparkling water of a mountain spring. Her droll ways keep us in a constant state of bewilder-ment as to what she purposes doing next, and the splendid pluck with which she carries her point with Josiah every time shows her to be a good general on domestic as well as moral lines. We were specially delighted with the "terrible thing" that happened in a recent chapter, in which Samantha compelled her "pardner" to stop his tenant from selling liquor. Indeed, all humor and frolic aside, Samantha is teaching us a noble lesson, not in temperance alone, but on the score of hu-manity. Long life to her! May she travel and write for many years to come.

Germany's Future Sovereign

THE WHOLE EMPIRE TO CELEBRATE THE COMING OF AGE OF CROWN PRINCE FREDERICK WILLIAM, MAY 6—IMPERIAL HOME-LIFE DESCRIBED

(SEE ILLUSTRATIONS ON FIRST PAGE)

WHEN the heir apparent to a royal crown attains his majority, the occasion is usually one of general rejoicing throughout the land which he is some day to govern. May 6th will be such a day in the German Empire. On that day, eighteen years ago, was born Frederick William Victor Augustus Ernest, the Prince Imperial, at Potsdam, in the famous "Marble Palace." The anniversary next Sunday will be an occasion of great rejoicing and thanksgiving throughout the Fatherland. The prince is the first Hohenzollern in direct succession.

When the Prince Imperial was born, his father was the heir presumptive to the throne. The babe was christened, as were his five brothers and his sister, in a marvelous mediæval font of Silesian beaten gold, embellished with many names—for most of the Hohenzollerns have been baptized in this historic bowl. He was cradled in the bassinet which had rocked the infant form of Frederick the Great. This queer old wooden cradle is treasured in the Berlin Museum, but is sometimes brought forth to accommodate some royal baby. The name of the cradle's latest occupant is always embroidered across the tiny quilt.

The Prince Imperial is a modest young fellow and very popular with all who know him. While studying at Ploen, he declined a special seat in church, and with his brothers, Eitel Fritz and Adalbert, sat with the rest of the cadets. While dining at the school, he took his seat on any bench with the other boys. He greatly resembles his father in looks; though taller, is like him, too, in character, being thoughtful beyond his years. With the Berlin public he is scarcely as popular as his brother, Eitel Fritz, who is of a livelier disposition, but less intellectual than the heir apparent. Between the latter and his sister, "Louischen," there exists a warm affection, the little princess looking upon him with mingled admiration and awe. He is a youth of strong individuality and force of character. In dress he is quiet and unostentatious; in manner, unobtrusive. Like all the German princes, he has learned a trade, he and his brother, Eitel Fritz, having both been apprenticed carpenters. Military life and action are his ruling passion, and second only to these is his love for music. Indeed, he possesses considerable talent as a musician—a trait inherited from his forefathers—and is almost equally excellent as violinist, composer and orchestral leader. At a recent celebration, he surprised his mother, the empress, by directing an orchestra of his classmates through an original composition which he had written in honor of the day.

His devotion to military affairs has made him somewhat of a martinet. It is related of him that, on one occasion, several years ago, the guard being called out to salute him, he noticed that one of the soldiers went through the motions of the manual without a gun in his hand. The poor fellow had rushed into the ranks so hurriedly that he had missed his gun as he passed the rack. The prince, instead of letting the matter pass as a trivial one, called the soldier to him, reprimanded him, and ordered him to fourteen days' arrest. Then he reported the occurrence to his father, the emperor, who promptly ordered that the prince receive the same punishment for interfering in the matter, instead of leaving it to the officer in immediate command. The lesson was not lost upon the prince, who never afterward sought to inflict needless disgrace upon a soldier.

After a term of service with his regiment, the Prince Imperial goes to Bonn University, where his father and grandfather formerly studied. At this famous university all the German princes have received their education. While in military service at Potsdam he will occupy the Kabinets House, a plain, unpretentious building, which was recently the residence of poor Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, the grandson of Queen Victoria, of Great Britain, who died so miserably last year. Just at present the Kaiserin is taking an active interest in furnishing the quarters her oldest son is to occupy. Potsdam is only half an hour from Berlin by rail.

It is an interesting study to note the influences that surround this future ruler of a great Empire, who is no longer a boy, but must be reckoned as almost reached man's estate. He is now, in the eyes of Germany, a most important personage. Already he has been decorated with the orders of the Golden Fleece, the Garter, and other high distinctions, and he is giving entertainments as an independent host.

Prince William Eitel Frederick Christian Charles, popularly known as "Eitel Fritz," was born on July 7th, 1883, and he has, until now, shared the education of his elder brother. It is the emperor's wish to send him to Oxford, and then to have him enter the German government service in some civil or diplomatic capacity. Prince Adalbert Ferdinand Beringer Victor was born July 14th, 1884, and is destined to be a sailor like his seagoing uncle, Prince Henry of Prussia. He is already a lieutenant in the navy. Prince Augustus William Henry Gunther Victor, the fourth of the princes, was born on January 26th, 1887, and Prince Oscar Charles Gustavus Adolphus, the fifth son, on July 27th, 1888. Prince Joachim Francis Humbert, the first of the children to be born after their father was emperor, and the only prince in the direct line who can claim to be a "Berliner" by birth, was born on December 17th, 1890. The only daughter came in the autumn of 1892, and her advent was hailed with the greatest enthusiasm. She was christened Victoria, after her mother, her grandmother, her great-grandmother, and Louise, after the "good Queen of Prussia."

While there are many who criticise the Emperor as a ruler and statesman, all unite in regarding him as a model father. Notwithstanding the manifold duties that call for his daily attention, he has always found time to look after the education and moral training of his children. He frequently talks with their tutors concerning their progress, their personal peculiarities and their capabilities. He is an uncompromising opponent of over-study, and makes it an absolute rule that the minds of his children shall not be cultivated at the expense of their physical health. As a result of this system, the young princes are all active, robust and healthy. They are, moreover, carefully trained as to deportment, and are noted for the courteous manner toward all with whom they come in contact. To parents and friends who know them best they are young people of noble impulses, with a high sense of honor and strong moral and religious feeling.

The Princess "Louischen" and Prince Joachim are the pets of the royal household. "Louischen" is said to have a will of her own, and she sometimes takes a fancy to stand up in the imperial carriage when driving in the streets of Berlin with her governess. That lady may implore her to sit down, but she jumps up again like a little "jack-in-the-box," to the horror of her companion and the amusement of the passers-by. Prince Joachim is the only one that might be called delicate. On his ninth birthday, a few months ago, the emperor gave him a handsome chestnut pony and his mother added a sleigh.

As a whole, the home-life of the royal household is as simple and free from ostentation as that of many citizens of the Empire, and this fact has done much toward making the young princes popular. The feeling of the German nation will find fitting expression in the approaching celebration.

THE KAISER, KAISERIN, AND GERMAN PRINCES AT A GARDEN PARTY

The Easter Tribute Commended

Dear Editor: I wish to give my testimony to the magnificent work THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has done and is doing in our country, and, indeed, in other countries; but your Easter number is verily a triumph. I wish it had a place in every home everywhere. I wish that every theological student in this land might study those grand tributes from our leading women. Those clear, ringing convictions come like the sound of many waters, and will do far more to solidify belief, crystalize truth, comfort human souls, inspire Christian action and mould religious character than all the theories along the lines of so-called advanced thought and higher criticism that ever dropped from pen or lip, from the first sentence to the last letter. Let us have more out of life experiences, and less of fog, and maybe's and perhaps! Thank God the old Gospel ship is in demand and the Pilot of the Galilean Sea in charge, and all heading, not for the rocks, but the country of heaven! Again I thank you. REV. S. R. CHUBB.

Our Trouble with Turkey

The Porte Must Pay for the Destruction of Our Mission Buildings During the Massacres

WHEN the fury of Turkish fanaticism against the helpless Armenians was at its height, in 1896, mobs of Koords and Turkish soldiery wrecked and looted the buildings of the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions at Marash and Harpoot. At the former place, the handsome American college was destroyed. At Harpoot, eight buildings, the property of the mission, were partially destroyed, their contents wantonly burned or otherwise demolished, and the occupants driven out. When comparative peace had been restored, the claim of the American Board, having been laid before the United States Government, was presented to Turkey through our Minister at Constantinople, and the demand was made that the Sultan's government pay a sum by way of indemnification. The amount asked, it was said, was about $100,000. U. S. Minister Straus made repeated efforts to bring the matter to a satisfactory conclusion, but the Sultan's government, with characteristic diplomacy, evaded a direct answer.

It is now understood that our government has decided to press the claim to a settlement, being convinced of its absolute justice. The State Department has accepted Minister Straus' declaration that the Sultan has repeatedly promised settlement of the claims, and it does not propose to permit the matter to drift along any further. There has been some indefinite talk of an ultimatum to Turkey, followed by the presence of an American fleet in the Bosphorus; also of the possible seizure of Smyrna or some other Turkish port by our warships, such port to be held until sufficient custom duties are collected to liquidate the claim. These rumors however, probably represent the feelings or wishes of some writers of the European press rather than the intentions of our own State Department, for while the claim will be pushed to a settlement, it is scarcely conceivable that such an event as the collection of a just debt should cause the rupture of diplomatic relations and the adopting of an attitude which might be construed as warlike.

From another source, the suggestion comes that this claim would be a proper subject for submission to the Peace Conference. This, however, can hardly be regarded seriously, since Turkey has admitted the validity of the debt, and the Sultan stands in the position of a delinquent debtor, unwilling to pay. In all probability the firm stand taken by our State Department, will produce the desired result.

A Business Men's Bible Class

Every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD believes in Sunday School work. But too often it happens that adults believe in the efficacy of the work only as applied to children. In Washington, D. C., in the First Congregational Church, there is a body of some sixty men, thirty-five to eighty-two years of age, known as the "Business Men's Bible Class." Over ten years ago, a deacon of the church conceived the idea of a Bible class for business men exclusively, and soon he had enrolled ten or a dozen members. After the class had experienced a checkered career of about four years under different leadership, Mr. Elphonzo Youngs, a local business man, was elected moderator, and has had charge of the class ever since. It has increased in numbers to over sixty. Mr. Youngs has evolved a plan of work which renders the class wonderfully unique and effective. Each week he divides the International Lesson into six or seven topics which he allots among the members of the class, changing them each Sabbath. Many of the class are fine Bible students, and all are greatly benefited. Members of Congress, professors of Howard University and lawyers and professors in other lines are members and take an active part in the proceedings of the class. In connection with the church is a Soldiers' Union of over one hundred members, composed of ex-soldiers of the Civil War.

FRED. I. DEAN.

The War in South Africa

PATIENCE has been needed on the part of the British public during the past two weeks. The people who expected Lord Roberts to set out on a victorious march from Bloemfontein to Pretoria have been disappointed. For some reason not fully disclosed, the British commander has remained comparatively inactive at the Free State capital. One of the reasons assigned, which has doubtless contributed to the delay, was the necessity of obtaining fresh horses for the cavalry. The part played by that arm of the service in the capture of Cronje, the relief of Kimberley and Ladysmith and the other successes of this year's campaign had told heavily on the mounts, thus crippling the cavalry, which in this war has proved of greater importance than was expected. The need has now been supplied, and there are several indications that Lord Roberts is now preparing for some decisive movement. As is usual with him, no hint of his plans is suffered to transpire. In the meantime there has been grave anxiety about the safety of Mafeking, where Col. Baden-Powell is known to be suffering many hardships and privations, but has been making a gallant defence. Another beleaguered officer is Capt. Dalgety, who, with about two thousand men, is surrounded by a strong Boer force at Wepener, a town about sixty miles southeast of Bloemfontein. Gen. Roberts has dispatched two divisions to his relief, apparently in the hope of surrounding and capturing the attacking force. It is necessary to clear the flanks and rear of the invading army of menace before getting out for Pretoria. There are abundant indications that the forces in front occupying strong positions will be sufficiently formidable without having the enemy harassing the flank and rear. Among the signs of a speedy advance are the new flying ambulance cars which are being pushed forward. They are designed for use in the cavalry divisions, being much lighter than the ordinary heavy vehicle. They contain two stretchers within and four above, the central passage being used for storing surgical instruments and medical appliances. When an engagement occurs, the car is taken as near the fighting line as possible. It is drawn up under the shade of a tree or a hill out of range. The stretchers are unhitched and carried to the front by the attendants. When a man is wounded he is placed on the stretcher and carried to the car, where the surgeons bind his wound, and when the car is filled, it is driven to the nearest field-hospital and returns to the scene of action for another load. It is a sad and ghastly business in spite of all that is done to alleviate the suffering. War has not changed in its horrible cruelty since the days when the prophet lamented over it:

If I go forth into the field, then behold the slain with the sword! and if I enter into the city, then behold them that are sick with famine! (Jer. 14: 18).

THE NEW AMBULANCE CARS FOR SPEEDY RELIEF OF THE WOUNDED

A Valley Becomes a Hill

A surveyor who has been examining timber lands in the Mount Baker district of the State of Washington, has arrived at Seattle, bringing astonishing news of a remarkable natural phenomenon. He says that on March 27 he and his party were startled by the quivering of the earth, as if there had been an earthquake and this was followed by a prolonged rumble like thunder. Later in the day, returning from their work, they had to cross a valley which they had crossed in the morning. To their astonishment it was a valley no longer. In its place there was a hill, seventy feet high in some places. The hill was about a quarter of a mile square. The Nooksachk river had been turned from its course and ran around one side of the hill. Nearly in the centre of this high bank of earth was a large lake. A forest had formerly occupied the ground, and trees which had escaped destruction rose above the water. There were cracks here and there in the mound large enough to ingulf a horse and wagon. There was a smell of sulphur in the air, and it is the surveyor's impression that the disturbance was caused by gases underneath the mountain. A trapper, whose wrecked cabin now stands in the centre of the huge mound, was absent at the time of the upheaval and thus escaped death. His cabin was split in two. We have but a faint idea of the forces imprisoned in the earth's interior. This one incident shows what is yet to occur on a gigantic scale in the day when the world is once more restored to its original beauty.

Every valley shall be exalted and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight and the rough places plain (Isa. 40: 4).

Acquiring Foreign Accent

A correspondent of a Philadelphia journal calls attention to a curious linguistic phenomenon that he found in that city. At a restaurant at which he dined recently, he was waited upon by a negro, who addressed him in a decided German accent. Having never heard a colored man speak in that way, he was still more astonished when he observed that the German idiom was as noticeable as his pronunciation. He asked the man if he had ever been in Germany, but he said no, though he had been reared from infancy in the home of a German family near Reading, Pa. The same correspondent mentions another coincidence of a similar kind. It was that of another waiter who was really a German, but he spoke English with a marked Irish accent. On his arrival in this country he went into the service of an Irish family and learned English with their assistance. He had no idea that he was acquiring a brogue, but it is now well-developed. So much association will do in influencing the speech. But it will do more than that; it will influence moral character and may ultimately affect the final destiny.

He that walketh with wise men shall be wise: but a companion of fools shall be destroyed (Prov. 13: 20).

Married in Fun

A justice of the Supreme Court in New York, was requested last week to relieve a young couple of the consequences of a joke. It appears that about two years ago a lad of sixteen years of age, then a student at Columbia College, New York, was visiting the studios of some artist acquaintances in company with a number of girl friends. In one of the studios they encountered a graduade of Columbia, who had just passed through a theological course and been admitted to the ministry. The whole party was very merry, joking, laughing and playing pranks around the studio. Some one suggested that it would be good fun to enact a wedding ceremony. There were plenty of volunteers for the part of bridesmaids, ushers etc., and a boy and girl consented to take the leading parts as bride and groom. The girl was quickly adorned with some of the artist's draperies, the studio was made to look as much like a church as possible, and to the music of a guitar the procession was formed and marched up to the dais that did duty as a chancel. The theological student officiated and pronounced the two man and wife. The party separated and no more was thought of the morning's amusement until some months afterward, when the youth who had acted the part of the bridegroom casually mentioned the joke at home. His father took a serious view of it and consulted a lawyer, who declared it a valid marriage and said that a suit in the Supreme Court would be the only way to have it annulled. That suit has now been brought and as there was no opposition a decree of annulment was granted. There was no need of a divorce because the court considered the ceremony, though legally valid, not a real marriage. It is so in spiritual matters. There are some who take upon them the name of Christ and are in the church who are never really joined to Christ by living faith.

They went out from us, but they were not of us, for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us (I. John 2: 19).

A Troublesome Trust

Among the recently published reminiscences of our Civil War, by a surgeon in the Federal army, is one of tried fidelity to a trust. A great battle was impending, and the regiment was going to take up the position assigned to it, when the Irish sergeant-major entered the hospital tent and asked for the surgeon for whom he had professed great regard. "Doctor," he said, "I know I am going to be killed in this battle, and I want you to take care of my money and see that it is sent to the old folks in Ireland." There was no time to remonstrate, so the surgeon took the money, which consisted of gold coin weighing about three pounds. All through the busy days that followed, the surgeon kept the bag with his surgical instruments, and it was a burden and an embarrassment to him. Before the week ended he was a prisoner, and had lost his instruments and his medicine case, but had managed to save the bag of gold. He made a belt in which he concealed it and tied it around his waist next to his skin. During the long weary march that followed, the gold pieces chafed his body and added to his suffering. Very often in his imprisonment he had great difficulty in hiding it from his captors, but he was determined that the Irishman's "old folks at home" should have the money, if it was possible. By the exercise of patience and caution he succeeded in keeping it until he was exchanged and returned to Washington. There he found his regiment in camp, and one of the first men to welcome him was the Irish sergeant-major, who was so delighted to learn that the doctor had saved his money that he got drunk and gambled it all away the first night. The surgeon had done his part to save the money, and so he had the satisfaction that comes from duty faithfully performed; but it must have caused him some chagrin to see the money, which had cost him so much trouble to preserve, wasted in such a way. But the most melancholy of all such wasted effort is the spiritual one. How sad it is to see the soul, which Christ suffered and died to redeem, being lost after all.

How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation? (Heb. 2: 3).

BRIEF NOTES

Gen. Booth, of the Salvation Army, received a purse containing $250,000 on his seventy-first birthday (April 10), the proceeds of "self-denial week."

Professor McGiffert, who resigned from the Presbyterian Church to relieve his brethren from the trouble of trying him for heresy, has been cordially welcomed to the ministry of the Congregational Church.

The McAll Mission in Paris has opened a hall opposite the entrance to the Exposition, at 59 Avenue de Labourdonnais, for work among country visitors. Daily meetings will be held there while the Exposition is open.

We are frequently told that in the average public school it is sufficient to teach the three R's. A New York clergyman makes this pertinent suggestion that even in the most elementary school a fourth R should be added, representing Righteousness.

William Phillips Hall, the business man evangelist, is preaching to large audiences at the Metropolitan Temple, New York, every Sunday. Dr. Cadman, the pastor of the temple, is hoping for large accessions to the church from these services.

A cable dispatch from Manchester, Eng., says that Dr. Talmage, on a recent Sunday, addressed an immense throng in church in that city, and afterward, being urged to speak to those who had been unable to gain admittance, addressed a still greater audience in the open air.

Dr. Sayce reports the discovery among the tablets brought from Nineveh of the catalogue of a free library in that city dated 2000 B.C. The catalogue shows that every book in the library was numbered, and that the student had only to write down the number of the book he wanted and the volume would be handed to him by the librarian.

Dr. D. K. Pearson, of Chicago, celebrated his eightieth birthday on April 14 by giving fifty-five thousand dollars to two colleges, Yankton, S. D., and Colorado College. Before the close of the year he intends to distribute half a million more among twelve colleges, of which Mount Holyoke is the highest beneficiary, with $150,000. During the past ten years he has given two millions in his way among twenty-one colleges and he has letters from large numbers of young men who through his beneficence have been able to get a college education. He intends to distribute the whole of his fortune among colleges before his death.

Bishop Vincent has been holding meetings in the M. E. Church, of Denver, Colo., of which Dr. Cobern is pastor. The principal object of the meetings was to reach men who had been brought up in Christian homes, but had drifted away from religious associations and had deserted the house of God. Dr. Cobern succeeded in getting large audiences of these men, and Bishop Vincent talked to them in an earnest affectionate manner. He astonished them at the close of his address by inviting all who were ready to consecrate themselves to Christ to join in partaking of the Lord's Supper. Many accepted the invitation though they were not members of any church.

.. THE PRIMACY OF LOVE ..

JESUS AT THE PHARISEE'S HOUSE .·. BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

International Sunday School Lesson for May 13: Luke 7: 36-50. | Golden Text, Luke 7: 50: "Thy faith hath saved thee."

"IT is a great crime, but I don't love God," said a young girl of tender conscience, whose very anxiety belied her confession. But many dull consciences need to be taught that it is the capital crime of the universe not to love God with the love of gratitude and esteem and that it is also "a great crime" not to love the sinful as Jesus loves them. "Thou shalt love God"—that is the first and great commandment; and the second is like unto it, "Thou shalt love man." There is no special merit in loving God, the altogether lovely. We prove ourselves godly, that is godlike; and Christian, that is Christlike, by loving the unlovely, the sinful, the hateful, with the love of compassion, because they are sons and daughters of God, brothers and sisters of Christ, for whom he died, and so our own brothers and sisters. This is the love which is the soul of religion, without which the individual of many great virtues described in I. Cor. 13 is "nothing" and the church of many good works described in Rev. 2: 1-7 is condemned. These passages are the keys to an understanding of the Pharisees, who are also credited with many virtues, but lacking love; their religion was but a galvanized corpse. If they had loved the sinful their hateful pride would have turned to double thankfulness that they had been kept from vices and could lift up and restore the vicious.

A PHARISEE

Thankfulness in Place of Pride

"You must be very proud of your gifted daughter." "No, I am rather thankful for her," said the wise mother. Pride at its best is a usurper of the place that belongs to thankfulness. "What hast thou that thou didst not receive?" Are you proud because others call you gifted? Let that very word teach you humility. What if you had missed the great gift of good blood, and the greater one of good training, and the more fundamental ones of a good birthplace and a good birthtime? The millionaire could earn about half a dollar a day if turned out in an undeveloped world. "Office is opportunity." Thank God and those who bestow it, for the "opportunity," but do not prove yourself unworthy of it by prating about "honor," as if the purpose of office was to pamper your pride rather than to give you a place of usefulness. President Lincoln's favorite poem, "O why Should the Spirit of Mortal be Proud?" might well be hung in public offices, and also the text that hangs ever above the desk of Toronto's mayors, "Except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain." Only an ignorant man can be proud of his knowledge. The great scholar feels, like Newton, that he has gathered only a few pebbles, while the ocean of knowledge stretches before him unexplored. As to pride of virtue, Jesus shows that there is hardly a greater fault than the consciousness of none. That is one meaning of the parable of the elder brother and the prodigal son; and also of the Pharisee and the publican, the first of whom went to the temple to pose, the other to pray. Again we see the same contrast in the Pharisee and the sinner of this lesson. If he had measured himself against the virtues of Christ instead of measuring himself against the sinful woman, he would have cried out, like that Simon who became Peter, "Depart from me, for I am a sinful man."

One of the Pharisees. We should not overlook the many virtues of the Pharisees. We shall find that to "exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees," as Jesus says we must do, to be saved, is no light task. Politically they were patriots, despising all Roman bribes and favors that had won over the Herodians. Theologically they stood for the resurrection and for loyalty to the Old Testament Scriptures, in opposition to the Sadducees, who were materialists and rationalists. They proved their sincerity by self-denial, fasting twice in the week and devoting one-tenth of their incomes to the promotion of religion, besides many additional free-will offerings. Morally they were no doubt free from the coarser vices of appetite and lust.

Where the Pharisee Failed

For all this eminence in virtue, they should have been thankful instead of proud. They should have poured out the perfume of loving gratitude because they had been kept from vice. The Pharisee got near the right words when he said, "I thank thee that I am not as other men!" If he had given God the glory for his virtues, instead of taking the credit to himself, emphasizing "thee," rather than "I," he would have gone home justified. Better be a moralist, grateful to have been kept from vice, than a reformed man or woman grateful for rescue. But the Pharisees' virtues were overshadowed by their pride and hypocrisy. Many of them were guilty of covetousness, a sin into which in all ages, many fall unconsciously who are proud of their freedom from the grosser sins which Christ condemned less frequently and less severely. Ernest H. Crosby regards hypocrisy as the Pharisees' chief fault:

Ye other sins, like covetousness, ye are idolatry.
But have ye not at least your idols set up before you? Do ye not at least worship something?
Your face is turned to the future; ye climb the steps of some temple, tho' it be the wrong temple;
Ye have a motive and really act and live; for you there still is hope.
But hypocrisy is a mere simulacrum; it has the name to live and is dead;
It has no God, no idol, no ideal;
Its stony stare is riveted on the past;
It cannot grow and develop; it is doomed to eternal rest and stagnation;
It is the sin of death and for it is the woe of despair.
He who came that men might have life and have it more abundantly,
What truce could there be between him and death?

Magdalen a Misnomer

This incident occurred in the summer of 28 A. D., in the middle of the second year of Christ's ministry, nine months before Mary's similar anointing of Christ on the eve of "Palm Sunday." The confusing of the two incidents has put the name of Mary of Magdala erroneously upon fallen women. Mary was not a "Magdalen" in the modern sense, but the woman of this lesson was. We find her, in accordance with oriental freedom of hospitality, following Christ, "the friend of publicans and sinners" to a feast in a Pharisee's house to which he had been invited while teaching in one of the Galilean cities.

He went into the Pharisee's house and sat down to meat. Christ was neither ascetic nor monastic. He entered into the social fellowship of the rich and poor, that he might bring them into higher fellowships. To invite one to eat with you in the Orient is an invitation to friendship, and to accept it a pledge of love. In this case it was rather a cold hospitality, as we shall see, but the Pharisee wished at least to honor Christ, and to learn by closer intercourse whether he was indeed "the Prophet," whose advent the Jews awaited.

Pride and Penitence

A woman of the city, a sinner, brought an alabaster box. As Jesus reclined at the oriental table, a woman of the town, well known as such, entered the house and "rained kisses upon his feet," while her swift falling tears also fell like rain, which she wiped away with her long tresses, and then drew forth the costly alabaster flask of precious perfume which she wore in her breast and poured that also on his feet as "the sacrifice of a broken spirit." The Pharisee's loveless, thankless heart was totally unable to understand either the heart of the penitent woman or the heart of Christ. He thought Christ could not be "the Prophet" or he would have recognized the woman's character and resented her approach. The Psalms of his Old Testament abound in outpourings of penitence, but he was incapable of understanding their import. The law to which he had devoted his life is, in its very essence, love, but he found nothing of it there. "He that loveth not knoweth not God, for God is love." Failing to love God or man he had broken the whole law, which he prided himself on observing perfectly. So does many a man to-day, boasting that he has kept the whole law when he has not even begun to keep it by loving God. He also boasts that although he never prays he "lives a good moral life." It is as if a man should boast that he was faithful to everybody but his wife or that he neglected no one but his father. He who does not love God has committed the capital crime of the universe. Not loving God as his Father, he surely can not love men as his brothers, and will be brotherly to them only so far as fear and custom and self-interest restrain him.

I have no costly box to bring,
Of ointment precious, to my king:
But only my poor heart.

'Twas cold and hard, because of sin,
But when the love of God came in Grew soft and broke apart.

The incense rises like perfume:
A heavenly odor fills the room,
And reaches high above.

The love so rich, so pure, is thine.
Bestowed by thee, I claim it mine.
From thee is all my love.

Which of them will love him most. Jesus does not mean to say that the woman was in reality ten times as sinful as the Pharisee; he was rather comparing the two as they were contrasted in Simon's own pride-blinded heart. The one who feels most sinful is the one who will be most grateful for restoration. The Pharisee is the loveless moralist, priding himself on freedom from vice, while guilty of ingratitude, pride, hypocrisy and lack of love. When we see a reformed man, pouring out the spikenard of his gratitude in ardent love to Christ and enthusiastic efforts to save others, it seems as if sin might be a help to devotion, but Paul answers: "Shall we continue in sin that grace may abound? God forbid." Let us rather learn to pour out our grateful love and service because we have been kept by the power of God.

Thou gavest me no kiss. On the background of the parable, what a character sketch Jesus gives us of this Pharisee! He had thought he was honoring Christ rather than himself in inviting him to the feast, and so had shown him none of the special attentions bestowed on highly esteemed guests. He had brought no water to wash his feet and had given him no kiss. The sinful woman had given him the kiss, not alone of honor but of gratitude, and whereas the host had not even anointed his head with ordinary oil, she had anointed his feet with costliest perfume. This contrast we constantly see in the church to-day. Many loveless formalists, scorning sentimentalism, do not cultivate these noble sentiments of penitence and gratitude and love. Instead, they foster pride in the perfection of their formalism, and a sort of arrogant hauteur toward all whose Christian life has more enthusiasm.

Poor and Proud

Pride is by no means confined to the rich. There was a story in old times told of a severe, cynical philosopher visiting the house of one who was far his superior in genius as in modesty. He found the good philosopher living in a comfortable house with easy chairs and pleasant pictures around him, and he came in with his feet stained with dust and mud, and said, as he walked upon beautiful carpets, "Thus I trample on the pride of Plato." The good philosopher paid no attention at first, but returned the visit, and when he saw the ragged furniture and the scanty covering of the floor of the house in which the other ostentatiously lived he said, "I see the pride of Diogenes through the holes in his carpet." Many a one there is whose pride is thus seen by his affecting to be without it; many a one whose poverty, whose modesty in spirit can best be appreciated by seeing how the outward comforts and splendor of life can be used by him without any subserviency to them or dependence upon them.

There were once two women, both working women, and both gentlewomen. The younger grieved at the shabbiness of her friend's winter bonnet, used a piece of velvet she had meant for her own in surreptitiously making one, and sending it carefully packed and addressed in a feigned hand, to be left anonymously at the elder lady's door. Shortly afterwards the latter appeared, very irate. "What do you think, my dear? Some one has had the impertinence to send me a bonnet! How dared any one to suppose I wanted a bonnet? As if I would condescend to wear an anonymous present! What could they mean?" Meekly the girl suggested that possibly "they" meant no harm. "But it was harm. It was impertinence. Such an ugly bonnet too! I can't send it back, for I have no idea where it comes from; but I would never wear it." "Then," the other asked, "what do you mean to do with it?" "My dear, the very instant I get home, I shall take a pair of scissors and pick it to pieces." Let us watch against pride whether we are rich or poor, in religion and in common life.

HEART INSCRIPTION

.. THE WHOLE NATION HELPING INDIA ..

Its Great Heart Touched by the Woes of that Famine-Stricken Land—Many Generous Gifts to the Relief Fund

WITHIN a few days, unless some unforeseen delay arises, the fine new five-thousand-ton steamship. Quito. chartered by our government for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S India Relief Fund, will sail from New York for Bombay, carrying the cargo of grain provided by American benevolence for the rescue of starving India. It will be the Quito's maiden voyage, and the noble ship. as she steams across the ocean, will bear with her not only the life-saving gift of food, but the prayers of a great multitude of God's people in our own land that the gift may result in succoring at least a portion of the perishing millions in that famine-stricken country. In our next issue every detail concerning this relief cargo will be laid before our readers for their information.

On April 20 a cable message from Calcutta reported five and a half millions then on the government relief camps and the number growing daily, especially in the provinces of Bombay and Rajputana. Mrs. J. C. Lawson, of the Methodist Mission at Aligarh, in the northwest provinces, writes: "The money received from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund enables us to feed four hundred and fifty daily. The suffering is becoming worse and worse. A few weeks later we may have double the number. We are rushing our sheds so as to take in many more. Water is drying up everywhere, now that the heat is upon us. Last week my husband visited Hissar district again, and in a little while gathered ninety-six starving widows and children and brought them in to Aligarh. These are in addition to the four hundred widows who were received in the 1897 famine, and who are still with us. Dear friends, send us help at once for these needy ones! Others are waiting to come; we want to save them from death. A few weeks hence it will be too late. Can we depend upon you for help if we take them now? Pray for us, too. It is not easy work."

Mrs. Lawson bears testimony to the gratitude and docility of these girls. They are anxious to please, and it is surprising how quickly they become clean and tidy and keep themselves neat. The filthy condition they are in when they are received is evidently caused by their despair. They have no hope, no heart to do anything for themselves; but after two or three weeks of kind treatment they become new creatures.

Pandita Ramabai bears the same testimony. "The girl widows," she says, "are well worth saving. Some of them have shown a beautiful womanly disposition and have gladly helped in the work of the home. The more intelligent have looked around for ways of usefulness and have tried to prove their thankfulness for the benefits they have received." Ramabai was particularly impressd by the kindness and patience of one child-widow whom she received in the 1897 famine, whose picture she sends us. "She is one of those," Ramabai writes, "whom your readers supported. She is fourteen years of age. Soon after she became a Christian we received two blind girl widows into the home. They were not very good girls, having been soured by long continued ill-treatment, but the girl I speak of volunteered to take care of them, and her tact and patience in managing them astonished me. She set herself the task of learning the blind characters in order that she might teach them to read. I was so pleased when I saw her guiding their hands over the page and explaining it to them that I had her portrait taken in the act, thinking you would like to see what THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund did for one of the hundred widows it supported.

"This girl was found on a railroad station in Central India where she and her brother had come to beg a little food. Learning that she was both a widow and an orphan I offered her a home. She came gladly. She grew quiet and studious and when asked about her behavior she plainly and simply said that Jesus had changed her heart. Besides the two blind girls I mentioned she has taken charge of a feeble-minded girl who needs many repulsive duties performed for her. It was her own act to accept the task and she does it for the love of Christ."

Such reports of the results of the beneficence of 1897 may well encourage the Christian people of America to give again in this heavier calamity. The opportunity is large and the need urgent. It appears that the former gifts of our readers were instrumental not alone in saving life, but in bringing many souls under Christian influence which has led them into the kingdom of Christ. We therefore plead with increased confidence for more money, seeing that the fund contributed three years ago has led to results so blessed.

How sorely tried the missionaries are and how earnestly they are looking to us to learn if we will continue our help may be learned from the following letter just received from Miss Lilian E. Marks, of the American Mission at Ajmere, in the Rajputana District: "We are in the very midst of the direst distress. Hundreds are dying daily all about us. I am exceedingly grateful for the help you have sent me. It has enabled me to take in many orphans and to keep fifty Christian families alive who were starving.

"Thus far God has provided funds to continue this work, and we are asking him with tears and sighs to open the hearts of his people still further that they may take compassion on the starving people and on us who witness their misery, but cannot relieve it without funds. One of my friends—Mr. Inglis, of the Presbyterian Mission, has just returned from a journey of one hundred miles around this place. He says: 'I expected to see suffering, but it never entered my thought that I should ever witness the sights that have shocked me on this journey. I saw a boy dragging a skeleton of a man by the feet, that it might be burned instead of devoured by vultures or wild animals. I have seen dogs fighting over the body of a child by the wayside. I counted in one evening's journey forty dead bodies on the road, and the next day thirty-two, and the following day twenty-five. These had evidently tried to reach a relief camp, but had waited too long before setting out and had died by the way. While sitting at tea with Dr. Huntly we clearly heard some one crying. We went out and there were two little children standing wailing. Their mother had left them there and had gone away. We gave them some food and let them rest until we could decide what was the best way of providing for them. Having talked the matter over, we went out to them, and there to our astonishment, were ten children. Other mothers, hearing what the first one had done and seeing that her children had been fed, had brought their children and had then run away. Only one returned, her maternal love compelling her to bid her offspring farewell. She begged us to keep them, and though her heart was breaking at the parting, she was thankful that they at least would be fed. We gave her some food, too, which she devoured greedily, almost like an animal. Yet a very short time ago this woman was well-off and was a respectable, well-behaved woman. Now she was almost naked and ravenously hungry.'

"I could readily credit," Miss Marks continues, "such a narrative, even if it had not been told me by a friend whose word I can rely on. Heartrending cases have come under my own observation which were worse than I have ever heard of in any former famine. Families setting out to seek food and being separated, too feeble to seek any child who might linger by the way. Terrible partings, when the father is the only one strong enough to undertake the journey. Or perhaps taking one or two of his boys with him. The mother and the young girls left behind to starve. The aged, the crippled, and the blind die, of course. What can be done? There is no food for anyone but those who can travel. Last night I found a boy about four years of age by the wayside. He looked so sad and his little sunken cheeks and bright eyes told the now all too familiar story. 'Mera koi nahiu hai' (I have not any one) he wailed, as he looked tearfully in my face. I asked him where was his mother. 'Dead,' he answered. His father? 'Gone a long way off.' Friends of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, what would you have bid me do? I have no money with which to support a child except the funds you have sent. Would you have had me leave that little one there to perish? I am sure you would not. Then send us help that we may save such children, for there are thousands of such cases. Hundreds around us whom we would so gladly rescue if we had the means. May God give you compassionate hearts."

There is no diminution in the steady flow of contributions to the Relief Fund. All classes and conditions are represented among the givers. By the same mail that brings the "widow's mite," or the slender, consecrated offering of the humble worker, come the gifts of those who having been more abundantly blessed in material things, are seeking opportunity to acknowledge the blessing. One generous Christian lady in Philadelphia, who simply desires to be known as "G. H. W.," sends a check for $2,000 for the relief work. A New York lady (who desires to be recorded as "A Friend,") sends $50, "praying that God will add his blessing." Among the gifts are many from church and missionary societies and Sunday Schools. Editor Bonner, of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian, Duewest, S. C., sends $515.75, being contributions sent in response to an appeal in his paper. $500 comes from Rev. Wm. Yost, Treasurer of the Missionary Society of the Evangelical Association, Cleveland, O., being the contributions of its members.

FAMINE VICTIMS RESCUED BY MISSIONARIES

Our Inter-denominational Missionary Committee

To whom THE CHRISTIAN HERALD cables all funds it receives for the relief of the Famine sufferers in India, and who will distribute the cargo of the relief steamship, includes the following representative missionaries:

"People in the lands of plenty,
Haste to help us ere we die!"
From the mother, pinched and pallid,
From the gaunt and fainting man,
From the babies, moaning, dying,
Comes the plea, "Oh, help, who can!"

Fields by draught and mildew smitten;
Earth that, parched and barren, feeds
Nothing living in its bosom;
Blighted crops and shrivelled seeds;
Homes where hideous hunger stalking
Lays the hapless family low;
Leagues of people, dead and dying,
Who shall tell such weary woe?

Send your coin of gold and silver,
Send your meed of yellow wheat,
Send the children and the mothers
Bread, from your fair fields and sweet;
Open wide the purse and scatter
Largesse of the grateful heart,
Unto India's starving millions,
Of your plenitude impart.

Farmers, merchants, richer, poorer,
With these far-off brothers share
What the God who watches o'er us
Wills that you to them should spare.
West to East send benefactions;
Children of the Master's school
Show the little ones beyond you
Something of His blessed rule.

Borne across the rounding billows,
Borne across the naked sands,
Comes the cry of famished millions,
Holding out their empty hands.
People of the homes of plenty,
List that great and bitter cry!
People of our splendid country
Help your brothers ere they die.

My Lady's Kitchen Garden

IN great contrast to the wretched homes of India, where the horrors of famine hang so woefully to-day, are the sweet homes of America. The Spring sunshine, the soft Spring rains, the tender airs, the fertile soil are bringing us not only grain to feed our children, but succulent vegetables, and spicy and toothsome fruits. In Southern gardens already the roses are blooming by the door, and the berries are blushing as they peep out from the little green umbrellas which the leaves hold over their heads. My lady walks out into her realm of beauty, and with a grateful heart notes what the dear Lord has done for her and hers, and she is no weakling in doing her share. What fertilizers should be used, what care given to the fields, what work should be done every day, this lady of the farmstead knows, as well, and as practically as her husband. And while he looks after the broad acres and the meadow lands, her care is the plot near her own kitchen door. Sometimes she makes a neat little sum, not only from her butter and eggs, but from her honey, her fruit, her berries, whatever she personally cultivates and keeps. If she does this, it is wisely used.

About the Giving of Medicine

Miss Eveleen Harrison, in an admirable treatise on home nursing, from the press of the Macmillan Co., gives some explicit directions as to how medicine should be administered. "Medicines should be measured very carefully, as with some drugs even a drop more or less will make a great difference. The graduating glass will be found most accurate for measuring, or a glass dropper with a rubber bulb at one end, when the dose has to be measured by drops. Children need much smaller doses of medicine than adults, and the amount must be regulated according to their ages. A child three years old takes one-sixth the dose of an adult. One teaspoonful equals a fluid drachm, and a tablespoonful equals half an ounce. In giving castor oil, it is very easy to disguise the taste completely. I have given it in orange juice to a child, and it was taken with delight: half the juice poured into a glass, then the oil, and afterward the remainder of the juice on top. The best way to mix it for an adult is to disguise it with lemon juice or cinnamon water" (unless indeed the person can take a capsule), "or it may be taken in soda water.

"When giving medicine put into a small, dainty glass, perfectly clean, with a glass of ice water, and a piece of orange or lemon on a little tray covered with a snowy napkin, and thus by making the dose look attractive you will lighten very much the disagreeable task of taking it."

Under Bare Poles

It now and then happens in this world of strange and swift transitions, that a family, after a season of prosperity, unexpectedly encounters a period of rough weather. Losses occur. The prospects which were favorable change, or do not, in the reality, turn out as they had promised. Investments shrink in value, and that most hopeless of situations occurs, in which nothing is coming in, while everything is going out. Retrenchment is the order of the day, but there comes an hour when there is nothing in which to economize. The family ship is sailing under bare poles.

LOOKING OVER THE STRAWBERRY BEDS IN SPRING

Now is the time to show of what stuff the wife and mother is made. She must rise above depression and keep up her husband's courage. Both must lean hard on God. Pray, pray, pray. Ask in faith, nothing doubting. Believe that though the winds are wild and the waves in a turmoil, there is a fair haven a little way ahead. Expect that the man will soon secure a new position. Let the boys and girls help. If there is a lad who must go to business sooner than you and he had planned, do not lament over the fact, for it may be the making of the boy. It is of the greatest importance that he be developed in manliness, and it may not be too late, by and by, for him to secure the liberal education he longs for. Much culture may be gained quite independent of a college. Do not shut the young people out of your confidence, parents, but pay them the compliment of supposing them to care more for you and the family honor than for their own luxuries and pleasures. There may be great happiness for you in these days of adversity, if you cling close together and hold fast to your triumphant faith in the Father Almighty.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-all

—AUNT JANE. A boy of twenty who is morose and sullen, treating mother and sisters to fits of the sulks, is probably suffering from a disordered liver and in need of the doctor. Unless he breaks himself of this unfortunate temper, he will not make an amiable husband.

—ELSIE VENNER. Brisk rubbing with a crash towel after a cold bath in the morning will bring up your circulation and do you a world of good. Take a hot bath once a week at night for cleansing of the pores, but do not omit the cold bath in the early before-breakfast time.

—ALICE WYLIE. Let a visitor of the other sex follow you from the front door through the hall to the sitting-room. Do not allow him to pass first. If you do not yourself open the door, receive the caller in the sitting-room and take leave of him there.

—BERTHA BELL. I advise you to go to the church you prefer. Let the man who admires you come to your church if he chooses, but, at all events, while he is your lover it would be unmaidenly for you to follow him around from church to church. If I understand your letter, this gentleman does not seem to know his own mind.

—BRIDE TO BE. A simple white organdy would make a lovely wedding gown. Gloves would finish the costume, but are not indispensable. I do not think people should wear gloves during the marriage ceremony. I prefer the ungloved hand for that. The refreshments may be cake and coffee or lemonade, preceded by thin sandwiches, and may be served to the guests as they sit around the room. A grey wool dress will be pretty for traveling and church. Have it made with jacket and skirt, and wear a silk waist.

—E. B. C. Written invitations to your wedding would be perfectly in order and in excellent taste, as you wish to ask relatives and friends. I advise you sending them in your own name, thus: "My dear Eliza, will you give me the pleasure of your presence at my wedding on Monday, June —, at St. Barnabas' Church, where I am to be married to Mr. John Cox, at eleven o'clock in the morning? Affectionately yours." I give this as a sort of guide, but any other simple form will do. I have received invitations in this form from very fastidious people, and you need not be disturbed in doing this. It is quite correct; also very sensible. A great deal of money is needlessly wasted when spent for mere show.

Great Friends

LITTLE Mabel has a comrade wherever she goes, a trusty and tried friend in her dog Champion, who escorts her about, keeps her out of danger, and is as useful and nearly as loving as a big brother. The latter might not like to be tied to a baby's apron-strings, and might often be tempted to play baseball or shinny and leave Mabel to her own devices. Not so with Champion, who is as faithful as the sun, and would scorn to forsake his charge until relieved from duty by some one in whom he could repose entire confidence—her mother or her Aunt Mary or her father himself. When Mabel, tired of play, falls asleep with a dimpled arm around Champion's neck, and her dolly falls asleep, too, Champ takes care of them both, sleeps with one eye open, but does not move till the little princess wakes.

A BLISSFUL NAP

It is a good thing for a child to grow up in loving comradeship with domestic pets, with dear faithful dogs, with gentle cats, purring their pleasure at the touch of a wee hand, with any dumb creatures which require care and repay kindness with affection. Children are better and nobler all their days for being kind to animals, and for learning the true goodness in an animal's breast.

A reader, writing from Philadelphia, urges upon parents the duty of training little folks to be responsible in their care of their pets. She says: "If the poor brutes could speak in houses where prayers are daily said and grace is spoken before long luxurious meals, they would tell a sad story of untended lives, of lacking food and fresh water. If your dog must be kept shut up," she adds, "provide for him some regular exercise, a ball to roll, or something which will allure him to movement." We are prone to forget that animals, like ourselves suffer from ennui, if shut up and confined where nothing entertaining is going on. Even worse is their frequent suffering from thirst. Pussy will brighten up when she has a drink of good cool water. Our dog must have his thirst assuaged or he will suffer frightfully, just as we do when deprived of refreshing water.

Sympathy with the lower creation which is, after all, not so very far below us in the scale, is a Christian duty.

A Clear Skin

You have no right, perplexed young matron, to black shadows under your eyes. You ought to have a clear complexion, and you ought to be in the most beautiful time, physically, of your entire life. If you are sallow perhaps it is because you eat too much hot or fried food. You need daily two hours exercise out of doors and in all weathers. Every night bathe your face in hot water with good toilet soap. Rub this in thoroughly, wash it off and give your face a dash of cold water. If inclined to have rough skin, use, at night, a cold cream made of vegetable oil. Avoid mutton and animal fats generally for the face. You can easily massage your face yourself by rubbing the opposite way of the muscles.

GOSPEL WORK IN CUBA

...THE THURSTON MEMORIAL HOME AT PUERTO PRINCIPE—CAMP WORK AMONG OUR SOLDIERS

INFORMATION concerning a promising work in Cuba has been received at this office in the form of a letter from Mrs. G. E. Andrews, Puerto Principe, where a "Thurston Memorial Home" for orphans and homeless children is in process of establishment, largely through the efforts of Mrs. Andrews and her husband, reinforced by the New York Board of Managers, of which Col. Charles R. Ray is President, and Rev. Dr. Seneca Howland, 64 Bible House, is Treasurer. The projectors purpose that the work shall be self-supporting when once it is inaugurated; an individual school is to be operated in connection with the Home, and simple evangelical instruction to be given. Fifty-eight acres of land have already been given upon which to erect the Home, and while waiting for means with which to build, the missionaries are dwellers in tents, and are doing good camp work among our soldiers and in house to house visitation among natives, as Mrs. Andrews' interesting letter, given below, reveals.

"This morning we raised over our tent the American flag, with a Cuban flag underneath, and fired one gun, then we sang 'America.'

"We arrived at Puerto Principe from Nuevitas, March 12. The soldiers came country. Could you look into some of the 'shacks' whose inmates I have been visiting for a week past, your tears would hardly cease to flow. Not a dog in our land lives so meanly. I was in the 'shack' of Col. Agramonta's daughter, on Thursday last; she told me how her father was taken prisoner by the Spanish, and how his head was tied to the tail of a horse, and he was dragged through the streets of Puerto Principe, until literally torn to fragments. This lady comes from one of the wealthiest and best of the Cubans, and you would not keep a pig in her home, so dirty and poor was the place. A few miles from us is a family of eighteen; the father is dead; several girls, seventeen and eighteen years old, go about absolutely nude. Very few of the children here under seven wear clothing; so you see how great is the need of our school here. If God would only put into the heart of some person who has money, a willingness to build a church and school here for these poor darkened people! I held a mothers' meeting yesterday. A lot of women came, and about seventy-five children. The children are particularly bright and pretty. I wish you could see the services we are holding. Every night hundreds come. The Cubans have learned to sing one hymn, "Where He Leads me I will Follow." The children are learning to sing, "What a Friend we Have in Jesus." I gave each the Thursday before; they brought a large part of our freight on their train, so it cost us but little compared to what it otherwise would. We are not allowed any baggage in traveling here; have to pay freight on our trunks. I had some beautiful plants given me. I did them up in paper and kept them in my hand. The baggage-master demanded of me that I send them as freight. I just smiled and walked into the train with them in my hand. We have put one large tent on the soldiers' camp, and last night I held religious service with them, some three or four hundred being present.

"The commanding officer and his wife called on me last Monday morning; said they would do all they could to help us. On last Sunday night, about thirty soldiers came to our tent, and I held a service with them. A number of backsliders were there. One, an evangelist when in the States, has made a new start for righteousness; another, a member of Jane Street Methodist Church, in New York, was reclaimed; and one soldier confessed Christ for the first time. Praise the Lord!

"There are about seven hundred soldiers here. We shall keep our tent in camp, and hold religious services with them on Sunday evenings, and two evenings in the week. I shall conduct a service at Puerto Principe once on Sunday, and one week evening. I am full of courage and hope, and while waiting for money to build our school, am sure the Master will help me to do religious work for him here. The most abject poverty still exists in this one of the mothers a card and the children pictures and toys which we brought. They were all so delighted! Will not some one give us an organ? I need one so much to use in our meetings. The soldiers enjoy singing the hymns, which is a great help.

On Monday, March 12 (my birthday), one of the city judges of Puerto Principe gave to our organization fifty-eight acres of land in the suburbs of Puerto Principe, on which to build our school. I accepted it in the name of our organization, and on the following Thursday, accompanied by the judge and a lawyer, I went over the property. There is a beautiful river running through on one side, and a creek on the other; we would say a creek and a brook if in New York State. It is of immense value to have the good soft water that no drought can dry up, when one has had to buy water, at from two cents to twenty-five a pailful. There are also two immense wells of good water on the place. It has, too, a few royal palms, the beauty of which must be seen to be appreciated. The seed of the palm fattens the pork, so the tree is valuable, as well as beautiful. There are plum trees, mango, apple, guava, sugar cane, banana, bread fruit, besides a number I cannot name. I saw one orange tree laden with golden fruit. There is a house on the place, which will need repairing; there are only two living rooms. We will try to gather in some children and begin our school next week. I am to have land for a church also. There is no Protestant work on this part of the island, and I mean to build the first Protestant church in Puerto Principe. If I only had a stereopticon, I believe I could make some money to help build the school. The necessity for our school is greater than you have any idea. Ignorance is on every hand. God help us, is my cry every hour, and God give us faith to claim the needed funds for this work. If we believe, we shall get it. I feel my faith increasing as I write.

"THE MASTER IS COME AND CALLETH FOR THEE!"

(John 11: 28).

HAS worry and care deeply furrowed your brow?
Are hopes all imprisoned in dungeons of now?
Has sickness enclouded the sun of your soul?
Or health given spirits beyond your control?
Arise from Despondency's seat and be free,
"The Master is come and calleth for thee!"

If young and o'erburdened with doubtings and fears,
And troubled to-day with to-morrows of years,
If old and o'erwhelmed by the terrible way,
That yesterday's shadows can darken to-day,
Hurl burdens aside and bid shadows to flee:
"The Master is come and calleth for thee!"

Has Death come and taken the one you loved best,
With never a hope or a dawn to suggest?
And grieving alone you sit in the gloom
And make of the home of the living a tomb?
Then know there is hope and a life full and free,
When Jesus "is come and calleth for thee!"

And is Jesus coming and calling for me?"
Yes; list to his call in the murmuring sea;
In song of the bird, in the voice of a friend;
And bells of all Christendom messages send;
And Conscience low whispers a kind, loving plea:
"The Master is come and calleth for thee!"

A Drama of Christian Martyrdom

THAT Sienkiewicz's famous book, Quo Vadis, which tells what is probably the most realistic story of early Christian persecution and martyrdom ever written, should have been prepared with a view to popular dramatic presentation is not surprising. It is a work which, of all others, carries the mind back to the tragic days when men and women bravely met danger and death for Christ's sake. That the dramatic presentation of such a story should attract and thrill thousands, as the only authorized version is now doing in New York, was to have been expected. It proves that the stage can be made a great moral and religious agency, and that it is capable of presenting the noblest aspirations and the sublimest truths.

The author of the dramatized version of Quo Vadis is Miss Jeannette L. Gilder, the well-known writer. She has dealt successfully with a difficult problem. Sienkiewicz's book offers many pitfalls for the dramatic author, but they have been carefully avoided in her presentation of the story. Miss Gilder's version never introduces religion for sensational ends. The story of the love of Vinicius, the pagan, for Lygia, the Christian maiden, is charmingly told, and we are shown that it was Lygia's religion that opened the eyes of Vinicius to the light. We are permitted to quote a scene from Miss Gilder's dramatized version. Vinicius has been wounded by the giant Ursus and nursed back to strength by Lygia and her Christian friends. In this scene Vinicius tells her how her religion has affected him:

VINICIUS: My eyes are open now, and I believe in thy religion, Lygia.

LYGIA: O Marcus, my soul is full of light and happiness. The dark days are over. All thy wounds are healed.

VINICIUS: Twice do I owe my life to thee. Thou stayedst Ursus' hand, and thou didst nurse me back to life.

LYGIA: Good Glaucus, who is a physician, didst save thy life.

VINICIUS: No; thou didst nurse me, thou didst tend me, and thou alone hast saved my life. Thou hast given my soul peace and happiness. For long I battled against thy religion. To love our enemies, to forgive those who injure us, to be merciful, seemed madness to me.

LYGIA: Is it not better to love than to hate? Is it not better to give than to take away?

VINICIUS (rising): I know it now. When I returned, my slaves were drunk at a feast in my garden. When they saw me they were terrified. All dropped on their knees and some fainted from terror. At first I wished to call for rods and hot irons.

LYGIA: Thou shouldst be merciful.

VINICIUS: But immediately a kind of shame seized me. I felt for the first time that slaves, too, were human beings. I did not punish. The third day I said, "I forgive you. Strive with earnest service to correct your fault." They fell on their knees, their faces covered with tears, and, stretching forth their hands, called me "Lord and father," and I—it seemed to me that at that moment I was looking at thy sweet face, and that thy eyes, filled with tears, thanked me for that act. Since then all the slaves have vied with one another to divine my wishes, and I will free all those who have served me well when thou wilt come to my house.

LYGIA: Thou didst have Chilo flogged.

VINICIUS: For spying upon thee.

LYGIA: Yet, were it not for Chilo, thou wouldst have never found me.

VINICIUS: I would have found thee in spite of obstacles, distance or time.

LYGIA: Dost thou remember how when Miriam upraided me for my love of thee, Father Linus said——

VINICIUS: "Do not weep; do not suffer; thy prayers for him will be heard."

LYGIA: And a happy day when thou didst come to the father and didst say: "Teach me her religion!"

VINICIUS: I remember all. My life until now has been suffering, unsatisfied desire and an endless problem without answer, but now it is all happiness.

One of the most effective and affecting scenes in this drama of the days of the early Christian persecutions occurs in the house of Petronius, where Vinicius tells the arbiter of his efforts to save Lygia, who is now in prison waiting Nero's orders to be thrown to the lions. It is impossible to hear these words unmoved:

VINICIUS: And every day I go in agony to the arena to see if she is with the martyrs.

PETRONIUS: I pity thy sufferings, Vinicius. Dost thou hope to save her?

VINICIUS: Aye, through her God—who is my God!

PETRONIUS: Thy God!

VINICIUS: Yes, Petronius, I am a Christian, and if thou hadst seen what I have seen, thou, too, wouldst believe in God. While I have watched in the arena for Lygia, I have seen them chased by howling Molossian dogs and torn by lions. They have met death and torture with radiant faces and in clear voices singing the praises of God. Above the howls of the wolves and the roaring of the lions their hymns have soared heavenward. Yesterday, in the amphitheatre, in the highest row, stood the apostle. No one saw him, for all heads were turned to the arena; he rose and blessed with the cross those who were perishing under the teeth of wild beasts. He blessed their blood, their torture, their dead bodies turned into shapeless masses and their souls flying away from the bloody sand. Some raised their eyes to him, and their faces grew radiant; they smiled when they saw high above him the sign of the cross. But his heart was rent, as he said, "O Lord! let thy will be done! These, my children, perish to thy glory in testimony of the truth!" And he blessed them all one after another, with as much love as if they had been his own children, whom he was leading into the kingdom of heaven!

PETRONIUS: I wonder not at thy conversion.

VINICIUS: I have seen much, Petronius, but I have felt more. Cæsar and the pagan world are mad; they are swimming in the blood of the martyrs, but their day of reckoning is coming. The God of the Christians is a just God and to him Nero shall answer for his crimes!

Learning to Walk*

THE baby is learning to walk to-day,
And we watch her busy feet
As she moves along in a halting way,
With a face serenely sweet.

She stops at such tiny little things—
A rug or a paper ball—
Like a new-fledged bird, with untrained wings,
That can scarcely fly at all.

And we give her an earnest, hearty cheer;
She answers it with a smile,
Then bravely crosses the threshold near
As though it were quite a mile.

And we gather her close in our arms, and say,
"Dear little girl, well done.
May the journey long, begun to-day,
Lead home, at life's setting sun."

HEART DISEASE.

Some Facts Regarding the Rapid Increase of Heart Troubles.

Heart trouble, at least among the Americans, is certainly increasing, and while this may be largely due to the excitement and worry of American business life, it is more often the result of weak stomachs, of poor digestion.

Real organic disease is incurable; but not one case in a hundred of heart trouble is organic.

The close relation between heart trouble and poor digestion is because both organs are controlled by the same great nerves—the Sympathetic and the Pneumogastric.

In another way also the heart is affected by the form of poor digestion, which causes gas and fermentation from half digested food. There is a feeling of oppression and heaviness in the chest caused by pressure of the distended stomach on the heart and lungs, interfering with their action; hence arises palpitation and short breath.

Poor digestion also poisons the blood, making it thin and watery, which irritates and weakens the heart.

The most sensible treatment for heart trouble is to improve the digestion and to insure the prompt assimilation of food.

This can be done by the regular use after meals of some safe, pleasant and effective digestive preparation, like Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, which may be found at drug stores, and which contain valuable, harmless digestive elements in a pleasant, convenient form.

It is safe to say that the regular, persistent use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at meal time will cure any form of stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach.

Tea-Gardens in the South

Planting and Plucking at Pinehurst—The Tea-school—New Plantations

PICKERS IN THE ROSE TEA GARDEN, AT PINEHURST

THE picturesque and profitable industry of tea-culture, whose successful prosecution has hitherto been confined to the Orient, seems to be gaining ground in this country. The introduction and progress of any occupation, affording healthy out-door work to men and women, and to little children under conditions not operating against their mental advancement, is well worthy to be chronicled in a religious journal; and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD presents with pleasure some interesting facts and pictures supplied through courtesy of Dr. Charles U. Shepard, Special Government Agent in charge of tea culture investigation. Dr. Shepard may be called the father of the industry in this country, for although the problem had been under discussion for many years and several fairly successful efforts to solve it had been made, it is to the practical and persistent demonstrations afforded in his tea-gardens at Pinehurst, Summerville, S. C., that we owe renewed governmental appropriations to the project.

The experimentation at Pinehurst began about ten years ago on a small scale, gradually enlarged as results justified, until about fifty acres are now planted in tea, which should produce about 10,000 pounds in full bearing. The problem of providing labor for picking tea leaf has been solved, so far as a steady, and skilful band of nimble-fingered children goes: but its price—extremely high as compared with the price of labor in the Orient—materially affects the question of profit in home-grown tea. It was indispensable to procure a reliable corps of pickers. To meet this condition, there was built a comfortable schoolhouse and a competent teacher engaged. The colored families of the neighborhood were then invited to send their children to the school free of charge. They would be instructed in the ordinary branches, and also taught how to pick tea, and so earn money to buy food and clothing. The offer was accepted, and now there is a good list of pupils to draw pickers from as required; only children of suitable age and size are permitted in the gardens. The older children earn from thirty to fifty cents a day in tea-picking season; younger ones in proportion. In one season, the gardens were picked twenty times, or once every ten days, and it took three days for the force of children to make the rounds. The establishment of such tea-picking schools as Pinehurst's, will be a moral as well as intellectual and industrial influence favorable to inhabitants of the Black Belt.

Dr. Shepard has had no difficulty in selling all Pinehurst tea (black) at one dollar a pound, retail. He says: "Without undue endeavor I sold my crop of 1898, about three thousand pounds, as also about five hundred pounds of the previous year, altogether about three thousand five hundred pounds, at a reasonable profit, although there is no protective duty on tea."

Dr. Shepard sensibly suggests: "There is a class of people who might profitably add the cultivation of tea to that of flowers and vegetables, filling out the corners of their gardens and home fields with tea bushes, as they do in China, or substituting useful as well as ornamental hedges of that plant for fences. As one result, families would be able to supply their own tea, fresh, pure and invigorating. As another, the multiplication of little tea-gardens would mean the establishment of tea-factories in neighborhoods where the product would be bought and sold for commercial purposes." The industry can be undertaken, however, only in sections where the temperature rarely falls below 25° F., and never below zero: there must be abundant water supply.

ROASTING AND ROLLING GREEN TEA

Pinehurst has a well-equipped factory. Two of the processes of manufacturing green tea is shown on this page; the fresh leaf is roasted in an iron pot and then rolled by hand on a table; no mechanical substitute for these combined operations has been invented, and the necessity for hand labor is the factor which raises the cost of green tea. The green color of the Pinehurst brand has attracted much attention. Oriental teas lose it, and other qualities that go with it, before reaching this country. A journey through the tea-gardens of Pinehurst, when the workers are among the velvety green bushes, and over the factory where children are bringing in trout baskets filled with the leaves, and men are busy spreading these out in the drying-room, and rolling and packing tea in other departments, is quite interesting, and to the Eastern traveler somewhat like a chapter out of the Orient.

WALTHAM WATCHES

Sir Joshua Reynolds when asked by an ambitious young painter with what he mixed his colors, replied, "With brains, sir." So in watch making; it is not alone the value of the jewels that makes a first class watch---it is the brains that have planned its construction. Mechanical skill and knowledge have made Waltham Watches the best in the world.

Waltham Watches are for sale by all retail jewelers.

Vision and Service*

The Purpose and Use of the Vision in the Conflict of the Christian with Evil in the World

DULL and sordid and pitiable is the life of a man who has no visions. Perhaps there are no such men. Even the most prosaic of mortals, the man who has everything cut and dried and has every idea dessicated and laid in its labelled pigeon-hole, and talks of the grandest truths over which other men have pondered and on which they have fed as with bread from heaven, as if they were propositions in mathematics, may yet have moments in which he sees the things which are invisible and has a glimmering notion that there may be truths not included in his philosophy. The business man who thinks day and night of his business, watches the markets intently and is continually planning new schemes for extending his business and making money, often cheers himself with a vision of the time when he will have made his fortune and will give himself rest to enjoy it. There are poor men living from hand to mouth, who have a ceasless struggle to keep their expenses within their income, and must concentrate their thoughts on their duties, lest some oversight, some blunder deprive them of their occupation and leave them penniless and dependent, who have yet rare times of vision in which they see better conditions of life that may yet come to the world, when men, like horses, may be sure of food and shelter.

There are visions, too, of beneficence. Peabody had visions of model tenements in which the poor man who could pay only a small sum in rent, might yet live free from dirt and unsanitary surroundings. Peter Cooper had a vision of an institution in which the struggling boy, longing for an education, might be taught by men who knew his special need and his peculiar difficulties. Just as the Tabernacle existed in the mind of Moses when he descended from the Mount, though it had no material existence, so Cooper Union was in the mind of its founder before a brick was laid. The two essential things in such matters, are the power to see and the power to translate the vision into fact. And these are powers which bless the man and the world. Mere reverie is fruitless. The value of the vision consists in the power to adapt it. When Christ and his three disciples were on the Mount of Transfiguration, Peter said it was good to be there and wanted to build tabernacles that they might stay there always. As the evangelist observes, he knew not what he said. That is, he did not know the object of the vision. The vision was not for his pleasure and enjoyment; it was to give him strength and power for service. Sometimes the two powers are given to different men. We used to speak of Mazzini as a dreamer. He saw a vision of all the miserable Italian states united in one free Italy. It was a beautiful dream, but in his hands it was an unsubstantial vision. But he told his dream, and while some men laughed at it, Cavour and Garibaldi listened and admired and turned the vision into action. The visionary was not so useless after all as the world supposed. So it has been with nearly all great movements. The vision-seer has come first, and then after him, the man of action has realized the ideal.

There have been hours at Northfield when God seemed very near to his people. They had visions of the Infinite that seemed to raise them into his very presence. If there had been no one else in the world, the vision would have been very blessed, but it would have been absorbed without any outward result. With the world lying outside weltering in its sin, with the teeming millions around bearing burdens of sorrow and struggling with temptation, the vision had a different mission. From Northfield, Moody and his friends went forth enthused with their vision to tell the world of the Saviour, to speak to the burdened of the Burden-bearer. So it should be with everyone. The vision comes if we have eyes to see it, but it is not to occupy all our lives, but to inspire us for service. It was said that men came away from listening to Cicero, saying, "What a beautiful oration! what a wonderful orator!" But when they came away from listening to Demosthenes, they said, "Let us go and fight Philip." So it should be after every season of elevation. At the foot of the mountain on which we have been so happy, there is the man possessed with the devil, sore vexed, ofttimes falling into the water or into the fire, getting into trouble of all kinds, whom we may help. The armor and the sword that were given to the knight in olden time were not to make him look handsome and imposing, but to be used in delivering the oppressed. The Christian's armor is given for the same purpose. It is for service, and it fails of its purpose if it is not used.

Gives a Glimpse of Heaven

Dear Editor:—I received a precious gift—the Red Letter Testament. Many thanks for same. I have been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for nearly eight years. I think it is invaluable and supplies the Gospel truths, and gives a glimpse of heaven. As I journey down the bright side of the hill, nearing the river, the sermons are very precious to me, and very inspiring. I am seventy-four years of age. Pray that Jesus may be very near me and give me great faith.

THE HARP-O-CHORD CO., 59 L St., Columbus, Ohio.

The work treats of the present social conditions in the churches, showing the lack of force and power in spiritual life by the encroachment upon it of social pleasures; its reasons for failing to reach the masses; the abuses of power and influences on the part of some of its rich members, who frequently use the church as a cloak for the advancement of their selfish ambitions and designs. While the book has a religious flavor, at the same time it advances some very strong themes of morality and philosophy. You should read it.

Mr. Oliver Salmons, of Glenfield, Lewis Co., N.Y., a veteran of Company K, of the Fifth New York Heavy Artillery, has reached the advanced age of 80 years and is enjoying the best of health, but to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People he owes both his health and longevity. He came out of the war with a weakened constitution and for twenty years suffered terribly from rhumatism, which led to other complications that threatened his life and it was at this critical time that the tide of disease was turned. The story as told by Mr. Salmons himself follows:

"Twenty years ago I was taken with rheumatism which was induced by exposure while in the army. Later this trouble was complicated by diabetes and my suffering was intense. There was an excruciating pain in my shoulders and limbs, also a darting pain in my back. I could not sleep or work on account of the pain.

"I was under the care of physicians and took their medicines but the treatment did me no good.

"About two years ago a friend living at Greig recommended that I try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and I did so. I had taken the pills but three or four days when I found that they gave me relief. The rheumatic pains ceased, and to my surprise I found that the pills were also relieving the diabetes. I took the pills for over a year and was entirely relieved of both troubles.

"I am now 80 years of age but am strong, have a good appetite and feel first class, all of which I attribute to the good qualities of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People."

West Virginia's Sympathy

GOVERNOR ATKINSON, of West Virginia, has shown a remarkable interest in the India Famine work, and his example has communicated itself to his State, which is now doing yeoman service in the life-saving work. The following letter from the Governor is evidence of the splendid spirit in which the South is taking up the burden of Christian benevolence:

GOVERNOR G. W. ATKINSON

State of West Virginia,
Executive Chamber, Charleston.
April 7, 1900.

Editor "The Christian Herald":—

"I desire in this public manner to thank you for the work your are doing to relieve the people of India from starvation. You are proving to the world that your paper is in fact what its name implies—a true herald of the Christ. I sincerely hope that you will succeed in raising your two shiploads of supplies at an early day, and that they will sail the seas, under the HERALD'S banner, carrying bread to the starving in far-away India. Yours is the work of the true Christian, and I bid you Godspeed in all that you are doing.

Sincerely and truly yours,
G. W. ATKINSON,
Governor of West Virginia.

The Relief Ship

SPEED the good ship o'er the waters,
Freighted with the golden grain;
India's dark-browed sons and daughters
Must not cry to us in vain;
For the Christians' God, so loving,
Tells us they—the starving poor—
Just as truly are our brothers,
As the neighbors at our door.

Still it comes! That wail of anguish,
From that sad and stricken land;
Christian hearts have caught the echo
And respond with lavish hand.
But the need is growing greater
With each swiftly passing day;
They are dying by the thousands—
Like the mist they pass away.

God has blessed our land with plenty,
We have had abundant store;
He has said that "to the giver
Shall be given, more and more."
Where we send the needed succor,
Food to keep them day by day,
There the "Bread of Life" shall enter,
There the Christ shall soon have sway.

Speed the good ship o'er the ocean
Freighted with our love and care;
With a true, heartfelt devotion,
Waft it on with faith and prayer.
Oh, the joy that waits the faithful,
When the Master's face they see,
When they hear the welcome sentence,
"Lo, ye did it unto me."

REV. DUDLEY D. SMITH

RECTOR Emanuel Protestant Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "In August, 1893, I was attacked with severe pains in my knees, making it impossible to rise from a stooping position without great agony. Physicians whom I consulted said it was probably Synovitis. I tried various remedies. Nothing seemed to do any good. After suffering for eight months, I began the use of Oxydonor. At the end of six weeks, all pain left me, and I have not since been troubled with it. I impute my recovery solely to the use of Oxydonor."

Rev. L. L. Gladney, Pastor M. E. Church South, Magdalena, N. M., writes, Feb. 6, 1899: "I had been down in health for three years, completely prostrated by over-work. My friends thought I had consumption. Three weeks after beginning use of Oxydonor I improved at a wonderful rate, until as well as ever."

Mr. H. S. Goldey, Prop'r Goldey Wilmington College, Wilmington, Del., writes, Nov. 16, 1899: "After an interval of several years, my Dyspepsia has not returned, and so far as I can see I am permanently relieved. I am emphatic in my belief that Oxydonor cured me."

AFRICAN FEVER

Mrs. (Capt.) A. B. Miller, Wenonah, N. J., writes, Nov. 2, 1899: "We still use Oxydonor with full satisfaction. Most remarkable has been the help to my daughter, Mrs. Hellen E. Rasmussen, a returned missionary from Africa, who was still held with the daily return of the African Fever. I thought she would die. The result of the use of Oxydonor was little more than a miracle. She is alive to-day, and has since been to Africa, and had good health there."

ABSORB NEW LIFE

OXYDONOR instills new life, teeming with health and vigor, gently and unconsciously, into your system, while you rest. You soon feel as a new person. Literally, Oxydonor forces disease out of your body and rejuvenates you. Oxydonor gives the required vital energy to all the organs, to perform the functions for which they were made by Nature. No dangerous drugs are used. No surgical operations are required to see what is wrong, or to remove any part. The healing and repair all take place naturally, through extraordinary "vis medicatrix naturae," increased and intensified by Oxydonor, by maximum functional activity of the system. Oxydonor begets the primary energy, and as when fuel is supplied in food and drink, Nature does the rest. There is no difficulty, no pain, no sensation, no danger in using Oxydonor, and any sane person can use it successfully.

Buckle the disk at one end of its cord, to one ankle, and drop the vocor at the other end of its cord into cold water, and the revitalizing process begins. Oxydonor will last a life time, and serve a whole family. The purchase is the only cost. No periodical investment is required. Book of directions with each Oxydonor.

CAUTION.—Beware of Spurious Imitations. Look closely for the inventor's name—"Dr. H. Sanche"—which is plainly stamped on the Genuine.

OXYDONOR APPLIED.

Founding Sunday Schools on the Frontiers

WHEN the Sisseton Reservation in South Dakota opened, it was my privilege as a representative of the American Sunday School Union—that true Pioneer agency of God's cause in America—to carry the Gospel to the settlers. As there were neither roads nor bridges my only means of travel was horseback. A saddle outfit was purchased, and my Turkish cavalry knapsack (I had picked it up years before on the battlefield of Tel-el-Kebir) was swung on to hold my Bible and a few necessaries. Attired in an old suit, faded plush cap, yellow oil-skin "slicker" (overcoat) which reached to my feet, I mounted my good horse, Gideon, and set forth on a Friday afternoon. On Sunday evening I reached my new home, having covered over 200 miles in two days, and by nine had laid the foundation of a work which, under God, has wrought and is yet working great things to his glory.

Among other missions started in my new field was the Adams School, which had its beginning in Mrs. Adam's shanty, a dwelling of one apartment, 14x18. The morning of the Sunday for which I had called the first meeting there, I rode up to a similar abode, occupied by some young men, whom I saw inside playing cards. Taking me for a cowboy, I suppose, and certainly never thinking me to be a missionary, they proceeded with the game.

"Boys," I said, "I came to tell you that I'm going to hold a Gospel meeting at the Adams shanty, and I want you to come over." At this announcement there was confusion, the door was slammed to, stifled laughter and muttered implications were heard; a voice said: "What's the matter, anyway? He saw us. Open the door;" and immediately this speaker appeared, holding the cards in his hand. "Mister," he said, "we were better brought up than to play cards on Sunday, but we ain't got anything else to do. If you've got anything better than this for us, we want it."

The organization of Bethany Union Sunday School was in the granary side of a barn. While I stood at the door watching the eager people arriving, an old wagon rumbled up, holding among others an aged woman, who, as I helped her to the ground, asked in an undertone, "Are you the preacher." "I'm the missionary," I replied laughing. "Well," she continued in the same low voice, "I want you to take me in, as I feel real scared, for its fifteen years since I was at meetin', and I don't know how to behave." There is a strong church organization at Bethany now.

"Evergreen Union S. S." was started in a nice little cottage, perhaps one of the best built on the reservation at that time, and among a people of whom the majority were Christians and faily prosperous; this school has never gone down, and they have regular preaching there. The school at Summit began in a grocery store fresh from the builder's hands; with the help of some of the men I arranged seats, utilizing kegs and boards, and there amid the shavings we met to worship God; a Catholic lady, a musician, kindly had her organ brought in and played for us; hymns were selected that all knew. That was a service I shall ever remember. I was preaching to some that had never heard the Gospel, and to many who had not heard it for long years. Besides, it was virgin ground I had taken for the Lord, and I had got into a new town ahead of the saloon, which meant much.

When I visited this school last November, imagine my glad surprise when I saw a neat little church with its spire pointing heavenward; it seemed to say to my heart "look up and give thanks." Thus my little horse and I proved the Lord's vedettes on outpost duty; to-day seven or eight Sunday Schools and four church congregations testify to the Lord's faithfulness in rewarding our labors.

I will take pleasure in answering any communications addressed me at Rochester, Minn., and can use to good advantage in equipping schools any library books, hymn books, Bibles, lesson papers, etc., that may be sent me.

Artistic Monuments in White Bronze

COST NO MORE THAN PLAIN ONES

Marble is entirely out of date. Granite soon gets moss-grown, discolored, requires constant expense and care, and eventually crumbles back to Mother Earth. Besides it is very expensive.

White Bronze is strictly everlasting. It cannot crumble with the action of frost. Moss-growth is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Then why not investigate it? It has been adopted for nearly one hundred public monuments. We have designs from $4.00 to $4,000.00. Write at once for free designs and information. It puts you under no obligations. We deal direct and deliver everywhere. Over $28,000 worth of work sold to Christian Herald readers in the last few years

Wonderful Remedy for Rheumatism

A physician practising in Olcott, Vt., writes; "Your Tartarlithine has proved a wonderful remedy for rheumatism. I have used a very great quantity of it in the last three or four months, and I have never seen anything like it. I had one patient who had rheumatism all his life, and had taken everything, and nothing completely stopped all the manifestations of the disease like Tartarlithine, one bottle of which completely relieved him.

I had another patient, an old man who travels much on the road peddling, who was lame with rheumatism for five years, and one bottle cured all lameness and he says he has not felt as well in five years as now. These are only the two worst cases of many that I have tried it on."

Tartarlithine is supplied in bottles containing 50 doses at $1.00 and can be obtained of all druggists or post-free by mail. Pamphlets with Testimonials sent FREE.

All Now Helping India

Many Young Hearts Touched by the Plea for the Sufferers—Whole Communities Working for India's Relief

AS the days pass, the India relief movement extends steadily, and there are now very few localities where some kind, generous-hearted souls have not taken up the work.

Rev. A. W. Spooner, D.D., of Camden, N. J., has begun an active movement of the Christian Endeavor Societies on behalf of India. In his stirring call he says:

REV. A. W. SPOONER

There is not a society in New Jersey that could not give ten dollars towards saving the dying millions of India. Write to me about it, and enclose a stamp, for correspondence is heavy, and a postage stamp means one life kept from death for a whole day. I suggest that the first Sunday in May be made "Rescue Day," and that on that day money be gathered by every society in the State in behalf of the dying millions in India. Plan for it. Get your "mite-boxes," give them to the Juniors and all Endeavorers; gather all you can in the meantime, and on that day bring in the offering.

The High School pupils of Charleston, W. Va., through Claude Cunningham, Secretary of the Senior Class, have generously forwarded $56 for the India sufferers.

Mr. W. C. Whitney, proprietor of the Evening News of Marshall, Tex., sends $61.70, being contributions sent to his newspaper by sympathetic readers who desire to aid the India relief work. Mr. Whitney, in sending the gift, added these words: "I hope it will be in time to save some life."

The young men of Kokoma, Ind., have been working energetically among the young people's societies of that town, and have collected a car-load of corn for India by means of a "corn social," which proved a very enjoyable and successful affair. The Committee of Managers were: J. D. Kirkpatrick, W. O. Finch, John McIntosh, Will Starkey, Chas. Rosell, and W. S. Clore.

DAISY MANLEY

Many of the letters received contain contributions from young people whose hearts have been touched by the call of suffering.

Daisy Manley, of Milo, Iowa, writes:

I am a little thirteen-year-old girl. I felt so sorry for the poor sufferers of India that I have collected the amount on enclosed list ($6.25), and hope it may be the means of saving some of the poor children from starving.

Dora Perkins, Madisonville, La., writes:

I was visiting at a friend's a week ago, when a paper came with your appeal for India; a boy of the family, about five or six years old, was listening to the reading of the appeal unnoticed by the others, when all at once he broke out crying (his little heart was too full to hold itself) begging his mother to send some food to the little children and not let them starve. It was with a deal of difficulty she at last made him understand that she could not send them bread, and that she was poor and had no money; then the little fellow, still sobbing as if his heart was broken, went and got his little all, that he had saved through many childish privations, and brought it to me and asked me to send it to the little children to buy bread; so you will find it enclosed, and may God's blessing go with it.

Harvey Long, of Antigo, Wis., sends this letter:

Please accept this dollar for the India famine. This is out of my own savings bank. Last year I sent $3 to the Fresh Air Fund, and will send more when I get it saved. I am seven years old.

HARVEY LONG

Surely these gifts, sent so freely by pure young hearts, are doubly consecrated, and will bring blessing both to the sender and those for whose benefit they are sent.

Mrs. John P. Wilcox, Springfield, Mass., in forwarding $77 for the Fund, writes: "My prayer is that this money I have sent may save many lives, which may also soon be brought to Christ."

R & G CORSETS

The kind that do not stretch

Over 10,000 dealers sell R & G Corsets to more than two millions of women every year. Every R & G Corset is sold with a guarantee of satisfaction—satisfaction, or a new corset. There are over seventy styles and sizes of R & G Corsets—a corset to fit every figure. R & G Corsets are the corsets that do not stretch. They fit; they wear; they hold their shape. They do not have to be broken in. No other corset has this feature.

Our new number 397 is our most popular dollar corset. It is a sensible corset—short under the arms, to give perfect ease and freedom of movement—not over-long at the clasp, but with comfortable and shapely length in the bust and over the hips.

The shape and style of No. 397 is shown in our photograph, which, however, really represents our newest number—402. It is made over the same form as 397, but is made of different materials, with wider lace at top and bottom and with the bones placed on the inside, giving it a smoother finish—the price of No. 402 is $1.50.

If your dealer will not supply you with R & G Corsets, send his name, say what style and size you require, and enclose a money order for the price. Our new booklet will be sent on request. It contains corset information which every woman should have.

HOW THE CHRISTIAN PEOPLE OF AMERICA ARE SAVING A NATION FROM DEATH

HOW intense and urgent is the need of help for the starving people of India, may be learned from the eloquent appeal issued to the people of the United States by the missionaries, who have ome from India to attend the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions. moved by the thrilling words of the missionaries now before the public. As a matter of fact, we have not told one-half of the horrors that have been reported to us. There are some stories, literally true, that were too dreadful to print. They are indescribably shocking and they harrow the heart as they are read. But sufficient has been told to enlist Christian sympathy, and the response from our readers told him that we thought it would be useless to appeal on behalf of the same sufferers. But the Bishop urged that the gifts previously made showed that the givers were people constrained by the love of Christ, and that there were no bounds to the outflow of hearts that he had touched. So it has proved. Large gifts came from the well-to-do, and even the poorest denied themselves to give their ism have the readers of a periodical proved so conclusively the power of the religion of Christ over heart and life, as have the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in these two famines. And the end is not yet. We believe that until the news comes that the people of India have reaped the harvest that will provide for their wants, the stream of liberality will not cease to flow. We know our friends too well to

VICTIMS AWAITING THE DISTRIBUTION OF FOOD IN A FAMINE CAMP AT AHMEDABAD, INDIA

They, better than any others, know the ondition of the people and have witnessed their sufferings in the horrible grasp of the famine now nearing a crisis. If a shadow of doubt lay on any mind about he sober truth of the appalling statements of suffering and death that have been published in this journal, it would be has exceeded our most sanguine expectations. The fund contributed by our readers for the relief of the sufferers in the famine of 1897, was so recent and so generous, that when Bishop Thoburn came to the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in November last and begged us to make another appeal in the new emergency, we mite. The appeal from the Bishop's pen, that we published on Dec. 13, 1899, elicited a response that was prompt and liberal, and, as new facts came to light, showing that the famine was far more severe and more widespread than had been foreseen, more money was sent. Never before in the history of religious journal- think that the lives they have saved and are saving will be lost, after all, through lack of funds. These Questions Will be Answered June 6

1. New York is to have a Hall of Fame, in which ultimately several scores of America's immortals are to be enshrined. What ten sons has the nation whose title to a place in such a temple it would unqualifiedly agree to recognize?

2. What causes the blue appearance of the sky?

3. What authority does the Church of Rome claim for denying to her laity the use of the cup in the mass, which in that body takes the place of the Protestant communion service?

4. What is meant by the command of the Saviour, "Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations" (Luke 16: 9).

5. Christ teaches us to pray, "Lead us not into temptation." Since it is impossible for our heavenly Father to tempt any man to evil, what is the necessity for such a prayer?

6. By which is a person more influenced, by heredity or environment?

7. Who is the author of the words, "Knowledge by suffering endureth, and life is perfected," and what is the meaning of the sentiment?

8. Is the exemption of places of religious worship from taxation reasonable, and if so on what grounds?

9. At what age or period of his earthly life did Christ fully comprehend the import of his mission into the world?

10. When was the telescope invented and which is the most powerful telescope in the world?

Questions of the Week

1. Which is likely to be the happier man, he who has but small means and comparatively small opportunity to give, or he who has large means and could, if he would, give much away?

Generally speaking, the poor and those of limited means enjoy giving what they give far more than do those of ample means. The former sacrifice to be able to give; the latter part with that which is of little or no use to the owners. Man's true happiness lies in the happiness and comfort of others. The one who can give but little, brings with his offering the true, the divine part of the offering; the gift of self. The one who can give away much, too often gives only enough to secure peace of conscience and he is sure to reach that condition before the line of self-denial is reached. H. W. CUMMINGS.

2. What, in brief, are the varying beliefs among Christians concerning the condition of the elements used in the Communion of the Lord's Supper?

The Roman and Greek Catholic churches hold to transubstantiation. They teach that "the whole substance of the bread is converted into the body, and the whole substance of the wine into the blood of Christ." The Lutheran view, known as consubstantiation, is that there is an actual substantial union of the body and blood of Christ with the elements, so that the communicant truly partakes of both. The High Anglican view is that bread and wine become by consecration really and sacramentally (though in an inconceivable manner), the body and blood of our Lord. The general Protestant view is that consecration does not change the elements, though the worthy communicant does by faith partake of the body and blood of Christ after a heavenly and spiritual, and not a corporal and carnal, manner.

W. P. ANDREWS.

3. Of what practical benefit to the world have the various expeditions to the North Pole been, or would their success ensure?

The North Pole expeditions have had scientific objects as their principal inspiration. Certain electrical problems and questions relating to the world's axis and meteorological problems would presumably be solved were absolute success attained in the quest for the North Pole. The marvelous enterprise and indomitable courage manifested in these expeditions has served to further the spirit of exploration in other directions, and to inculcate lessons of hardihood that have proved to the profit of the race. B. ABBOTT.

4. What, in the space of not over one hundred words, would be the best presentation of the claims of the Bible to divine origin, such presentation being specially prepared for the somewhat sceptically inclined?

Written by many different persons during a period covering fifteen hundred years, the consecutive design throughout the Bible argues a common authorship of its contents. The Book furnishes the highest code of moral law—a code promulgated when morals were low. It contains gleams of scientific light, the meaning of which it has taken the race many centuries to realize. Numerous prophecies, inconceivable to any human minds, are recorded and have been fulfilled. Moreover, acceptance of the Bible's teachings revolutionizes for good individuals and communities. L. T. SMART.

5. Who are the world's ten greatest philosophers, in their chronological order?

Any list of ten that can be made will be open to criticism. If the permanency of their work and their extended influence be considered, the following philosophers will, I believe, be entitled to be placed in the list: 1. Socrates, d. 399, B. C.; 2. Plato, founder of the Academic school, d. 347, B. C.; 3. Aristotle, founder of the Peripatetic school, d. 322. B.C.; 4. Bacon, the great apostle of the inductive method, d. 1626; 5. Descartes, founder of "cartisianism," d. 1650; 6. Leibnitz, the "universal" genius, d. 1716; 7. Newton, the profound mathematician, d. 1727; 8. Locke, the founder of the "sensational" school, d. 1774; 9. Kant, founder of the critical philosophy, d. 1804; and Hegel, the great logician, who died in 1831. J. D. MEESE.

6. What texts most clearly state the soul's immediate ushering into glory after death?

Paul's words to the Church at Philippi: "I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better." The New Testament teaches that Christ is in heaven as our mediator with God. Paul says to the Corinthians: "We are confident I say and willing rather to be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord." John describes the saved from earth, in Revelation, as being in heaven and as exempt from sin, sorrow, pain and death.

IDA L. MCJUNKIN.

7. What may be regarded as the more important influences at work for the betterment of the American nation?

The most important influences by far are these three: the church, the press, and the public schools. Of these three, the press is much maligned by some classes, but after all is said, it remains true that the influence of the great journals is for the betterment of the people. JOHN D. MEESE.

8. What may we expect will be the next great forward achievement in the practical application of science for the welfare of mankind?

Probably the greatest in a wide humanitarian sense will be the application of cold air through pipes to dwellings, hospitals and public buildings. A successful experiment along this line has already been made by air forced through ice vaults and conducted into chambers in the same manner that hot air is now conducted through furnace pipes. The value of such an application is obvious.

B. S. LAWSON.

9. If the Revised Version is better than the Authorized Version, why is the former not more generally read in the churches?

The results of the Revision proved that there were no serious errors in the King James Version of the Scriptures, while whatever additional light has been furnished by the Revision is easily accessible to all Bible students. There is, therefore, less advantage than there otherwise might have been in substituting the Revision for the "Authorized" or Common Version. The English of the earlier Bible is very generally preferred; the average reader is glad to have the Bible divided up into texts, the divisions aiding his memory in the retention of many comforting portions; while the substitution of the Revised Bible would involve heavy expense and the relegation to practical oblivion of Bibles long used and treasured. These are reasons enough to suggest hesitation about making so radical a change. There are other reasons why it would not be wise to predict a general putting away of the old for the new, at least at an early date.

C. A. FORD.

10. Is the use of the individual cup at the Holy Communion a Scriptural and a better practice than the cup out of which all communicants drink?

During a continuous ministry of forty years in the Methodist Episcopal Church, I have used the individual cup in two pastorates. In one of these churches the membership numbered seven hundred communicants. In these churches the new mode proved far more impressive, and the attendance on communion occasions increased forty per cent. Nobody wanted to go back to the old system. Physicians said that the individual cup method was in accordance with sanitary laws. Scholars writing of the Passover, at which national Jewish festival it is said of Christ that "he took the cup and gave thanks and gave it to them," say that a number of cups of wine were on the table; and that the term cup referred to its contents, wine, as a symbol. In the famous painting at Milan of "The Last Supper," by Leonardo Da Vinci, each disciple has a goblet of wine beside his plate. It was painted four hundred years ago, and has been much admired by Popes and Cardinals.

Miscellaneous Questions

S. T. W., Warren, N. J. Why is it wrong for professing Christians to attend a private dance?

This has been repeatedly answered in THE MAIL-BAG. If by our indulgence, weak brethren and sisters are made to stumble, we would be doing well to sacrifice liberty for the sake of others. There may be no sin in the act of dancing; but the dance too often leads to promiscuous and evil acquaintanceship and has been the first step to ruin of so many souls that we do not belive any earnest follower of Christ can hesitate as to the proper course to pursue in such matters.

F. L. P., North Jackson, Pa. Why did Christ choose twelve instead of some other number of apostles?

Presumably because he judged twelve the fitting number to carry on his work. The number corresponds to the twelve tribes of Israel, but there is no intimation in Scripture that this fact affected Christ's decision in the matter, although it may have done so.

A. E. D., Wagstaff, Kan. If the one hundredth year of a person ends with the one hundredth anniversary of his birth, why is it not so with the age of the world?

It is. We know that there was an error of four or five years in fixing the Christian era; but suppose for the sake of our argument that it was correct, and that Christ was born on the first of January, and that people of that time recognized the era and dated their letters by it. All that year they would be writing March of the year one, or July of the year one, or December of the year one, as the case might be; but on January first, when Christ celebrated the first anniversary of his birth, they would write January first of the year two. On the first of January of the following year, when the second anniversary was celebrated, they would write: January first of the year three. The tenth anniversary would be celebrated on January first of the year eleven; the one hundredth on January first, 101, and the nineteen hundredth on January 1, 1901, when we shall enter on the twentieth century.

W. J. K., Janesville, Wis. Are large, extravagant and expensive churches, which employ the most cultured singers as well as ministers, more conducive to the salvation of men, as a rule, than the smaller and less extravagant ones?

Cultured singing and a cultured ministry are not antagonistic to soul-saving. Where the great object of preaching—namely, the salvation of souls—is lost sight of, and the whole aim of preacher and people is toward ornate service, soul-saving work is not likely to be noticeable. As a rule, small churches reach plain people more readily than do the large and more aristocratic churches.

E. S. G., Citronelle, Fla. Of what use are canceled stamps and where could one dispose of them?

If you desire to dispose of foreign stamps, you should consult a dealer in cancelled stamps. If you have simply a collection of cancelled United States two-cent stamps, your treasures are probably of little value.

E. B., Durham, Ontario, Canada. Is it a sign of irreverence when the singing of hymns is heard on the public street by those who may not be saved? Does it help to lower the cause of Christ?

It is quite possible that the singers in such an instance may become interested in the meetings. A little tract might lead them to take deeper interest.

C. D. H., Bellwood, N. J. Can you throw any light on the question why our Father in heaven allows such a severe visitation as the famine in India to fall upon the people?

We are assured that God "does not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men." When we know more of him and are better able to understand his ways, we shall surely discover that in every calamity that he permits men to endure, he had some beneficent purpose in view. We must, however, be careful not to ascribe to him calamities due to human wrong-doing or negligence. In this case, both the Government and people of India are in fault. Every one knows that such soil as that of India cannot support a large population without moisture. A source of moisture is usually at hand in the rains that the wind called the monsoon brings, and as the wind brings it without trouble or expense to the people, they depend upon it, though it was known to be precarious and might fail in any year. There is enough water running to waste in India's great rivers to water the whole country, but to turn it to account it would be necessary to build huge dams and construct enormous canals. That would cost immense sums of money and an expenditure of energy which the Oriental does not possess. So he sits down quietly and hopes that God will send him the rain he needs. The Government shows the same folly. If the money it has spent in feeding the famine victims in 1897 and this year had been spent years ago in irrigation, it would have made those famines impossible. But with the people of India as with ourselves, there is need for compassion even when the sufferer has been unwise. We cannot sit quietly by and tell the individual victim that he is suffering the consequences of public folly. We save him from death and hope eventually the lesson will be learned and measures be taken to avoid a recurrence of the calamity. But do not let us hold our Father in heaven responsible.

Reader, Colorado Springs, Colo. Is it right for a Christian to have mining stocks, or is it all gambling?

If the stock is legitimate stock in a bona-fide mine, he has a right to hold it as he would hold any other property. If it is a purely speculative transaction, as buying on margin for a rise, or dealing in wildcat stock, it is gambling.

Mrs. C. H. L. 1. Will you kindly tell me what missionary work the Protestant churches, especially the Presbyterian, are doing for our native Indians? 2. How many Indians are church members? 3. What is the present rate of decrease in our Indian population?

1. In 1899, $261,515 were contributed by all evangelical churches and societies for educational work among the Indians; and for general mission work, the total contribution was $119,407. The Presbyterian church alone contributed $94,000 for Indian work last year; in Alaska alone this denomination spends $40,000. 2. There are about 260,000 Indians in the United States; they have 348 church buildings with a membership of about 31,000. 3. For the last few years there has not been a perceptible decrease.

Miss Jean R., Concord, Tenn. Is there any scriptural warrant for denominations? If not, are they not an evil? Are they a necessary evil?

The Scripture does not specifically command Christians to divide themselves up into denominations, and it would be well for the Church to show its inter-denominational unity; but denominations are not an unmingled evil. It would be quite easy to expend a great deal of time and energy in seeking to break up denominationalism that would yield no satisfactory result. There may be many roads leading to heaven, but their number need trouble no one, as long as they all meet at last at the foot of the Cross.

C. B., Walnut Prairie, Ill. Why is General Roberts, of the British Army, called "Bobs of Candahar?"

In the Afghan war of 1878 he commanded the column sent to operate through the Kooram Valley, and, surmounting the difficulties of the Peiwar Pass, gained a brilliant victory at Charasiab and entered Cabul. On the investiture of Candahar by Ayub Khan, he rapidly performed the march from Cabul to Candahar, one of the most brilliant feats of modern times, and defeated the pretender utterly. For these services he was made a baronet, and when, in 1892, he was, for further services, made a peer, he elected to make the name of Candahar part of his title. His soldiers gave him the nickname of "Little Bobs," "little" because of his stature, and "Bobs" as the diminutive of Roberts.

J. M. J., Cedar Falls, Ia., writes:

In reply to "Ouie," Cohasset, Mass., in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of March 21, page 226, I will say, to be right on this great liquor question, the most momentous of the day, one should always act in opposition to the liquor dealer, for he is a menace to all that is good, and threatens the very existence of this republic. His work destroys both soul and body, brings to an untimely grave 100,000 people each year in this nation, and contaminates millions of others. Those who have made the matter a study, have found that wives of those who have come from foreign countries, in large numbers in those states where they now vote, do not vote the same as their husbands, that a larger per cent. of the good than of the bad women vote, and that those who do vote and take an active part in politics, are more respected than those who do not. The liquor vender knows that it would be death to his vocation if the women were allowed to vote.

Isaac Parkin, Wilmington, Del., writes:

Some time ago I saw in your paper a letter to the effect that God had answered the prayer of faith in healing the sick, this being acknowledged by the writer as of God. Awhile ago my wife was sick and this particular case came before me. Why could not I pray and confess the result in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD? I made an appeal to the throne of God on her behalf and I now confess that the God of the Apostles is the God of to-day, for he took her sickness away and I should be under condemnation if I did not now confess to his Almighty power.

The Travelers in Alexandria and Cairo

NUMBER II.

By the Rev. C. S. Mason

NAPLES, SEEN FROM THE STEAMER "UMBERTO"

AT noon on Washington's Birthday, our party of eighty-six, twenty of them ministers, and the whole party followed by the good wishes of over 80,000 friends, sailed away from Naples. Soon after starting, our party began to melt away. We missed our fellows one by one. If the King of Italy is not more stable than his namesake, the Umberto, which bore us over the deep, his kingdom will soon topple. The urbane pastor of the Church of the Strangers in New York, Rev. Dr. Blackburn, as he lay reflectively upon the upper deck, remarked: "A little more of this and a fellow won't care whether he attends his own funeral or not." Next morning he spoke more cheerfully, remarking: "It is a great comfort to realize that if I am too sick to think about God, he thinks about me." We are on the sea where Paul fasted. Little wonder that we fast. A rolling ship and an Italian menu are enough to make the most stalwart fast. In spite of the raging waves a prayer service is held, led by the Rev. Dr. Hopwood of Newark, N. J., who read from the seventh chapter of John: "Go ye up to this feast." The sea broke over the upper deck, and there was danger at every lurch; but in solemn yet triumphant thought, the pilgrims lifted their voices in the prayer song, "Jesus, Saviour, pilot me."

Crete and Clauda were sighted with a calmer sea. We were under the lee of Crete, an island 160 miles long, with a population of 279,000. We longed to stop at Fairhaven, but hastened on to Alexandria. We entered the latter harbor at one o'clock P.M., Sunday, 5,600 miles from New York Harbor, fourteen days from the home land. Here we found the steamer New England, with 500 tourists from Boston.

Alexandria! We love it for its past associations; we despise it for its odors, its wicked life, the nuisance of its importunate beggars who make a prey of the tourist. Here we had the first touch of homesickness. All was confusion; the streets were packed with human beings—Syrians, Turks, Copts, Albanians, Nubians, French dandies, Hindu monstrosities, Bedouins, women in trousers, men in petticoats, children and young people masked (for it was a carnival day), acting the fool, a la fiesta de Los Angeles and Mardi Grass, New Orleans—heathenish, disgusting. We arrived a day ahead of time, our party of eighty-seven distributing at the various hotels. Some attended divine service at the English church.

On Monday, we rode about the city to Pompey's Pillar, Lake Mareotis, the Khedive's Summer Palace, the Garden of St. John Antonius, and visited the bazaars. The stores were well stocked, and there was an abundance of fine fruits. After lunch and short walks we had our first experience locked in a compartment car; but the company was congenial: Mr. and Mrs. W. Sleicher, Jr., of Troy, N.Y.; Mrs. Clara Oden-Smith, of Cincinnati, O.; Mrs. M. E. Kellyer and Miss J. M. Kellyer, of Troy, and Rev. J. D. Countermine, minister-editor, of Topeka, Kan. The journey was a pleasant one, our eyes being attracted by the series of villages, homes of the Bedouins, Egyptian buffalos, camel trains, ducks, hawks, eagles, irrigating, etc. At the stations we were offered all kinds of stuff. Then came the darkness and we rested our eyes, and wondered what of Cairo.

Cairo, the capital of Egypt, is the largest city in Africa, one hundred and thirty-one miles from Alexandria. Fashionable Cairo, oriental Cairo, cosmopolitan Cairo! Turks, Arabs, Jews, East Indians, Englishmen, and Americans—recent arrivals. The pilgrim party distributed among three hotels, Shepheard's, Continental, Bristol. We certainly attracted attention, for at once hosts of natives attacked the Americans on all sides. Dragomen without number clamoring for a job at two dollars a day. "Yankee Doodle have a Donk? You remember me. I your servant. Mr. America don't fur-get me. I see you to-morrow."

The street scenes of Cairo are enough to make an Englishman blush, and an American to hide his face. There are people clad and unclad, all kinds and conditions, street beggars, children who are expert gymnasts, performing on the street, women performing slight of hand tricks, boy and girl bootblacks, promenades filled with the elite, men smoking incessantly, and occasionally a woman with a cigarette. The Highland Military Band discoursed sweet music, hotel lackies dogged your steps, beggars innumerable crying "Baksheesh." And yet Cairo, with its oriental air, its venerable Turks, its wealthy merchants, its rich bazaars, its costly wares, its contrasts of life, and above all its ancient associations is a place of great interest. The hotel with its parks is a perfect dreamland. One of the ladies of the party remarked, "The rugs are a dream." The furnishings of Shepheard's beggars description — the rooms are luxurious. So are the prices.

On Tuesday the party had a free day—"going as they pleased," but a majority visited the famous bazaars. Some hired carriages and dragomen, while others walked and strolled by the way, viewing the great display of all kinds of wares. The Muske presents a scene unsurpassed for variety. It is one great department store, and the narrow street is thronged with cosmopolitan life; some walking, some riding in all kinds of vehicles, and some on donkeys.

On Wednesday, the party took a carriage drive, visiting the Citadel, built A.D. 1166, also the Mabaster Mosque, where in order to tread holy ground, shoes were supplied—roomy, broad, expansive. Many able clergy trod in other men's shoes.

We were only ten minutes' walk from Joseph's well, two hundred and ninety feet deep. We visited the tombs of the Marmelukes, then hastened "home" for lunch, after which we visited old Cairo, then the rich Jewish quarter, where also are the fine residences of the brother and sister of the Khedive, the French Ambassador, and other notables. Then we hastened on toward the pyramids, under overarching trees passing hundreds of loaded, heavy-laden camels, the Libyan Desert, the Mokuttam hills, the green fields, asses laden with packs of grass and our own train of carriages, all forming parts of the interesting scene. And now the modern menu hotel, with its brass band, and just beyond, the pyramids! The modern and the ancient united. In memory we go back 3,733 B.C. We lie upon the sand, and gaze upon the mass of blocks, 2,300,000 in number, each averaging three feet. Many go to the top. Subsequently we went by camel and donkey to the Temple of the Sphinx, where we partook of a bountiful lunch amid the ruins. After viewing the Sphinx, taking pictures, and dickering with the camel drivers who demanded double pay, we returned to our carriages, visited the museum where our Egyptian guide is as mum as the mummies themselves.

Friday, March 2, was another free day, and we visited as fancy directed. Some of our party went to the Obelisk of Heliopolis, "land of On." Here Joseph was married. Here Joseph, Mary and the Holy Child Jesus came. Here Joseph the Prime Minister reigned. Some revisited the bazaars, the Pyramids, and some rested. At Naples one of our leaders had his pocket picked—a learned D.D. At Cairo history repeated itself, as another innocent, confiding D.D. met the same fate.

On Saturday, some, to avoid Sunday travel, took the morning train for Upper Egypt, where a special steamer will (if Providence permits, for the Nile is lower by eight feet than it has been in one hundred years) carry them to the first cataract of the Nile.

Sunday, March 4. Rev. T. L. Smith, of Chicago, Ill., and your correspondent spent at Ezbah, a village south of the great health resort of Heloun, as guests of the medical missionary Dr. Witten, who, with his daughter Ada, have a neat home, and are winning their way into the hearts of this benighted people. The story of their lives is most interesting.

On Tuesday, March 6, the writer held a service at the Soldiers' Home in Cairo—a true Gospel mission, which has grown from small proportions to a grand work.

On Wednesday, March 7, a small party of us started for Jerusalem, taking the 11.40 A.M. train to Ismallia via Suez Canal, through the Land of Goshen to Port Said, where we are to take the steamer Vorwaerts for Jaffa.

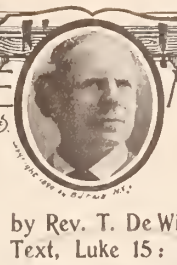
PUBLIC SQUARE IN CAIRO



THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT.

The Angry Brother

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Luke 15: 28: . . . . } And he was angry, and would not go in.

MANY times have I been asked to preach a sermon about the elder brother of the parable. I received a letter from Canada, saying, "Is the elder son of the parable so unsympathetic and so cold that he is not worthy of recognition?" The fact is that we ministers pursue the younger son. You can hear the flapping of his rags in many a sermonic breeze, and the cranching of the pods for which he was an unsuccessful contestant. I confess that it has been difficult for me to train the camera obscura upon the elder son of the parable. I could not get a negative for a photograph. There was not enough light in the gallery, or the chemicals were poor, or the sitter moved in the picture. But now I think I have him. Not a side-face, or a three-quarters, or the mere bust, but a full-length portrait as he appears to me. The father in the parable of the prodigal had nothing to brag of in his two sons. The one was a rake and the other a churl. I find nothing admirable in the dissoluteness of the one, and I find nothing attractive in the acrid sobriety of the other. The one goes down over the larboard side, and the other goes down over the starboard side; but they both go down.

From all the windows of the old homestead bursts the minstrelsy. The floor quakes with the feet of the rustics, whose dance is always vigorous and resounding. The neighbors have heard of the return of the younger son from his wanderings, and they have gathered together. The house is full of congratulators. I suppose the tables are loaded with luxuries. Not only the one kind of meat mentioned, but its concomitants. "Clap!" go the cymbals, "thrum!" go the harps, "click!" go the chalices, up and down go the feet inside, while outside is a most sorry spectacle.

The senior son stands at the corner of the house, a frigid phlegmatic. He has just come in from the fields in very substantial apparel. Seeing some wild exhilarations around the old mansion, he asks of a servant passing by with a goatskin of wine on his shoulder what all the fuss is about. One would have thought that, on hearing that his younger brother had got back, he would have gone into the house and rejoiced, and if he were not conscientiously opposed to dancing, that he would have joined in the Oriental schottische. No. There he stands. His brow lowers. His face darkens. His lip curls with contempt. He stamps the ground with indignation. He sees nothing at all to attract. The odors of the feast coming out on the air do not sharpen his appetite. The lively music does not put any spring into his step. He is in a terrible pout. He criticises the expense, the injustice, and the morals of the entertainment. The father rushes out bareheaded and coaxes him to come in. He will not go in. He scolds the father. He goes into a pasquinade against the younger brother, and he makes the most uncomely scene. He says: "Father, you put a premium on vagabondism. I stayed at home and worked on the farm. You never made a party for me; you didn't so much as kill a kid; that wouldn't have cost half as much as a calf; but this scapegrace went off in fine clothes, and he comes back not fit to be seen, and what a time you make over him! He breaks your heart, and you pay him for it. That calf, to which we have been giving extra feed during all these weeks, wouldn't be so fat and sleek if I had known to what use you were going to put it! That vagabond deserves to be cowhided instead of banqueted. Veal is too good for him!" That evening, while the younger son sat telling his father about his adventures, and asking about what had occurred on the place since his departure, the senior brother goes to bed disgusted, and slams the door after him. That senior brother still lives. You can see him any Sunday, any day of the week. At a meeting of ministers in Germany some one asked the question, "Who is that elder son?" and Krummacher answered, "I know him; I saw him yesterday." And when they insisted upon knowing whom he meant, he said, "Myself; when I saw the account of the conversion of a most obnoxious man, I was irritated."

First, this senior brother of the text stands for the self-congratulatory, self-satisfied, self-worshipful man. With the same breath in which he vituperates against his younger brother he utters a panegyric for himself. The self-righteous man of my text, like every other self-righteous man, was full of faults. He was an ingrate, for he did not appreciate the home blessings which he had all those years. He was disobedient, for when the father told him to come in he stayed out. The only perfect people that I have ever known were utterly obnoxious. I was never so badly cheated in my life as by a perfect man. He got so far up in his devotions that he was clear up above all the rules of common honesty. These men that go about prowling among prayer-meetings, and in places of business, telling how good they are—look out for them; keep your hand on your pocket-book! I have noticed that just in proportion as a man gets good he gets humble. The deep Mississippi does not make as much noise as the brawling mountain rivulet. There has been many a store that had more goods in the show-window than inside on the shelves.

This self-righteous man of the text stood at the corner of the house hugging himself in admiration. We hear a great deal in our day about the higher life. Now there are two kinds of higher-life men. The one is admirable, and the other is most repulsive. The one kind of higher-life man is very lenient in his criticism of others, does not bore prayer-meetings to death with long harangues, does not talk a great deal about himself, but much about Christ and heaven, gets kindlier and more gentle and more useful, until one day his soul spreads a wing and he flies away to eternal rest, and everybody mourns his departure. The other higher-life man goes around with a Bible conspicuously under his arm, goes from church to church, a sort of general evangelist, is a nuisance to his own pastor when he is at home, and a nuisance to other pastors when he is away from home, runs up to some man who is counting out a roll of bank bills, or running up a difficult line of figures, and asks him how his soul is; makes religion a dose of ipecacuanha; standing in a religious meeting making an address, he has a patronizing way, as though ordinary Christians were clear away down below him, so he had to talk at the top of his voice in order to make them hear, but at the same time encouraging them to hope on that by climbing many years they may after a while come up within sight of the place where he now stands. I tell you plainly that a roaring, roystering, bouncing sinner is not so repulsive to me as that higher-life malformation. The former may repent; the latter never gets over his pharisaism. The younger brother of the parable came back, but the senior brother stands outside entirely oblivious of his own delinquencies and deficits, pronouncing his own eulogium. Oh, how much easier it is to blame others than to blame ourselves! Adam blamed Eve, Eve blamed the serpent, the senior brother blamed the younger brother, and none of them blamed themselves.

Again, the senior brother of my text stands for all those who are faithless about the reformation of the dissipated and the dissolute. In the very tones of his voice you can hear the fact that he has no faith that the reformation of the younger son is genuine. His entire manner seems to say: "That boy has come back for more money. He got a third of the property; now he has come back for another third. He will never be contented to stay on the farm. He will fall away. I would go in too and rejoice with the others if I thought this thing were genuine; but it is a sham. That boy is a confirmed inebriate and debauchee." Alas! my friends, for the incredulity in the Church of Christ in regard to the reclamation of the recreant. You say a man has been a strong drinker. I say, "Yes, but he has reformed." "Oh," you say, with a lugubrious face, "I hope you are not mistaken, I hope you are not mistaken." You say, "Don't rejoice too much over his conversion, for soon he will be unconverted, I fear." That is the reason why more prodigals do not come home to their father's house. It is the rank infidelity in the Church of God on this subject. There is not a house on the streets of heaven that has not in it a prodigal that returned and stayed home. There could be unrolled before you a scroll of a hundred thousand names—the names of prodigals who came back forever reformed. Who was John Bunyan? A returned prodigal. Who was Richard Baxter? A returned prodigal. Who was George Whitefield, the thunderer? A returned prodigal. And I could go out in all the aisles of this church to-day and find on either side those who, once far astray for many years, have been faithful, and their eternal salvation is as sure as though they had been ten years in heaven. And yet some of you have not enough faith in their return.

You do not know how to shake hands with a prodigal. You do not know how to pray for him. You do not know how to greet him. He wants to sail into the warm gulf-stream of Christian sympathy. You are the iceberg against which he strikes and shivers. You say he has been a prodigal. I know it, but you are the sour, unresponsive, censorious, saturnine, cranky elder brother, and if you are going to heaven one would think some people would be tempted to go to perdition to get away from you. The hunters say that if a deer be shot the other deer shove him out of their company, and the general rule is, away with a man that has been wounded with sin. Now, I say, the more bones a man has broken the more need he has of a hospital, and that the more a man has been bruised and cut with sin the more need he has to be carried into human and divine sympathy. But for such men there is not much room in this world—the men who want to come back after wandering. Plenty of room for elegant sinners, for sinners in velvet and satin and lace, for sinners high-salaried, for kid-gloved and patent-leathered sinners, for sinners fixed up by hairdresser, pomatumed and lavendered and cologned and frizzled and crimped and "banged" sinners—plenty of room! Such we meet elegantly at the door of our churches, and we invite them into the best seats with Chesterfieldian gallantries; we usher them into the house of God, and put soft ottomans under their feet, and put a gilt-edged prayer-book in their hands, and pass the contribution box before them with an air of apology, while they, the generous souls! take out the exquisite portmonnaie, and open it, and with diamonded finger push down beyond the ten-dollar gold pieces and delicately pick out as an expression of gratitude their offering to the Lord, of one cent. For such sinners plenty of room, plenty of room. But for the man who has been drinking until his coat is threadbare, and his face is erysipelased, and his wife's wedding-dress is in the pawnbroker's shop, and his children, instead of being in school, are out begging broken bread at the basement-doors of the city—the man, body, mind, and soul on fire with the flames that have leaped from the consuming cup which the drunkard takes, trembling, and agonized, and affrighted, and presses to his parched lip, and his cracked tongue, and his shrieking yet immortal spirit—no room.

Oh, if this younger son of the parable had not gone so far off, if he had not dropped so low in wassail, the protest would not have been so severe; but, going clear over the precipice as the younger son did, the elder son is angry and will not go in.

Again, I remark that the senior brother of my text stands for the spirit of envy and jealousy. The senior brother thought that all the honor they did to the returned brother was a wrong to him. He said, "I have stayed at home, and I ought to have had the ring and I ought to have had the banquet and I ought to have had the garlands." Alas, for this spirit of envy and jealousy coming down through the ages!

A wrestler was so envious of Theogenes, the prince of wrestlers, that he could not be consoled in any way; and after Theogenes died, and a statue was lifted to him in a public place, his envious antagonist went out every night and wrestled with the statue until one night he threw it, and it fell on him and crushed him to death. So jealousy is not only absurd, but it is killing to the body and it is killing to the soul. How seldom it is you find one merchant speaking well of a merchant in the same line of business. How seldom it is you hear a physician speaking well of a physician on the same block. Oh, my friends, the world is large enough for all of us. Let us rejoice at the success of others. The next best thing to owning a garden ourselves is to look over the fence and admire the flowers. The next best thing to riding in fine equipage is to stand on the street and admire the prancing span. The next best thing to having a banquet given to ourselves is having a banquet given to our prodigal brother that has come home to his father's house.

Once more I have to tell you that this senior brother of my text stands for the pouting Christian. While there is so much congratulation within doors, the hero of my text stands outside, the corners of his mouth drawn down, looking as he felt—miserable. I am glad his lugubrious physiognomy did not spoil the festivity within. How many pouting Christians there are in our day—Christians who do not like the music of the churches, Christians who do not like the hilarities of the young—pouting, pouting, pouting at society, pouting at the fashions, pouting at the newspapers, pouting at the church, pouting at the government, pouting at high heaven. Their spleen is too large, their liver does not work, their digestion is broken down. There are two cruets in their castor always sure to be well supplied—vinegar and red pepper! Oh, come away from that mood. Stir a little saccharine into your disposition. While you avoid the dissoluteness of the younger son, avoid also the irascibility and the petulance and the pouting spirit of the elder son, and imitate the father, who had embraces for the returning prodigal and coaxing words for the splenetic malcontent.

Ah! the face of this pouting elder son is put before us in order that we might better see the radiant and forgiving face of the father. Contrasts are mighty. The artist, in sketching the field of Waterloo, years after the battle, put a dove in the mouth of the cannon. Raphael, in one of his cartoons, beside the face of a wretch, put the face of a happy and innocent child. And so the sour face of this irascible and disgusted elder brother is brought out, in order that in the contrast we might better understand the forgiving and radiant face of God. That is the meaning of it—that God is ready to take back anybody that is sorry, to take him clear back, to take him back forever and forever and forever, to take him back with a loving hug, to put a kiss on his parched lip, a ring on his bloated hand, an easy shoe on his chafed foot, a garland on his bleeding temples and heaven in his soul. Oh, I fall flat on that mercy! Come, my brother, and let us get down into the dust, resolved never to rise until the Father's forgiving hand shall lift us.

Oh, what a God we have! Bring your doxologies. Come, earth and heaven, and join in the worship. Cry aloud. Lift the palm branches! Do you not feel the Father's arm around your neck? Do you not feel the warm breath of your Father against your cheek? Surrender, younger son! Surrender, elder son! Surrender, all! Go in to-day and sit down at the banquet. Take a slice of the fatted calf, and afterward, when you are seated, with one hand in the hand of the returned brother, and the other hand in the hand of the rejoicing father, let your heart beat time to the clapping of the cymbal and the mellow voice of the flute. It is meet that we should make merry and be glad, for this, thy brother, was dead, and is alive again: he was lost, and is found.

SOILS AND SOULS

PARABLE OF THE SOWER

BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

International Sunday School Lesson for May 20: Matt. 13: 1-8; 18-23 | Golden Text, Luke 8: 11: "The seed is the Word of God"

"THERE are three kingdoms," said a learned man to his little niece, who had nestled into his neck at his invitation to come and hear about the wonderful world we live in. He told her of the "mineral kingdom," whence came the coal on the fire, and the gold of his chain, and the diamond of mother's ring; then of the "vegetable kingdom," whence came the flour for bread, and the flowers of beauty; and the "animal kingdom," to which belonged the cat and dog and little Maud herself. "Oh! uncle," exclaimed Maud, "there are four kingdoms I know; please tell me about the other one, the kingdom come we pray about, the beautiful kingdom of heaven; please tell me of that, dear Uncle Charlie." The uncle was an infidel, but the child's words brought back the memory of his own childhood of trusting faith, and he hurried away to think, and at length found once more his faith in God. Little Maud had proved herself one of God's sowers, and had sown the good seed of God's truth in her uncle's soul, where it had proved mightier than the thorns of doubt, and grew up into a life of great benevolence.

The learned uncle was wrong in saying that people belong to the animal kingdom. We belong to the spiritual kingdom, with God and angels, and so are called to live more than an animal life.

In the parable of the sower, Jesus sought to teach that the kingdom he was to develop was something that was to grow out of his living words planted in living hearts; not something built like a house, set up by external force. His truth was in some hearts to find acceptance, and from individual convictions grow into righteous individual action, then into the social Christian institutions of a Christianized society, in which, in fulfilment of the prayer that he could not have taught us to pray in vain, God's will is sometime to be done, as in heaven, so on earth.

Jesus . . by the Seaside. The time of this story is near the close of the second year of Christ's ministry, and the place is the Lake of Galilee, to which Jesus had gone from "the house" in the crowded city of Capernaum, where he commonly lived. The story is to be taught all round the world just before the time when so many people flee for days or months to the seaside and lakeside. Let our life by lake or sea be as noble as was his. A Sunday School teacher wrote a friend: "I have loaned my canary to a neighbor, chloroformed the cat, and said good-bye to the Ten Commandments, and am off for a summer at the seaside." She did not mean it for herself, but many a Christian really chloroforms conscience for a long sleep in vacation. We may, like Jesus, make a boat a pulpit, even though we have no eloquence to draw a multitude. There is nothing to prove that even so much good came of the truth-seed Christ scattered in the hearts of that multitude as grew from what he planted at the wayside watering-place in Samaria in the soul of that one woman, who proved such good ground, notwithstanding her sins, and produced such a harvest of saved souls (John 4.)

He spake many things in parables. Seven parables in this one sermon. Let us not only be Christians in our seaside life, but sowers also of truth in the hearts we meet, making the scenes of nature in which we seek health and strength, parables of the kingdom of righteousness. "What is it like?" is the sickle with which we can harvest illustrations everywhere—from nature, from the Bible, from common life—as Jesus did. As the Word and the world both come from the same God, they must be full of parallel passages.

Behold a sower. Let no one say, "That means the preacher," or, "That means the teacher," or, "That means the parents." Every Christian is at once soil and sower. He is the plant that grows from seed, and in its ripeness scatters seed, as from the dandelion thistle the wind-wafted seed flies far and wide to multiply the golden flowers. "They that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the Word." "Blessed are ye that sow." Sinful are all who do not. Away with that reversed version: "Here is my check; send somebody else." No one can hire a preacher or church visitor or city missionary to do his sowing. Every soul must sow or sin in refusing.

The Hardened Soul Some seeds fell by the wayside. Now we are to see four spirit photographs, more wonderful than X-rays, taken by the Christ who knew from divine intuition what was in man; and one of the pictures is yours. It is this first picture of the hardened soul. A strip of the field yonder, where Jesus pointed out the sower at work, had been hardened by the sower's own footfalls for a path. Our very teaching, if not received, hardens the soul. May it not sometimes be the fault of the unprepared teacher? The seed takes no hold on the hardened soil, and the watchful birds soon devour it. Every preacher has such souls in his audience, and almost every teacher has one or more in his class. The words of God himself they hear, but do not heed. The moment sermon or lesson is over, some frivolous conversation about bonnets, or baseball, or politics, or business, like a swift bird, swallows up the divine seed. Teaching such is hardly more helpful than the act of the Irishman who came from the city to work on the farm, of whose life he had no knowledge. Being told to feed the cattle with "corn in the ear," he returned and reported that he had filled the cattle's ears with corn, but they had shaken it all out. It is impolite not to be an attentive hearer when in conversation with a man. It is hardly less than impious not to hear when it is God's Word that is spoken.

THE FOUR KINDS OF GROUND

The Shallow Soul Some fell upon stony places. The reference is to a ledge with a little earth upon it. Is this your picture, the shallow soul, that quickly blooms and quickly fades? At the loss of a friend you pour out cries and tears, but soon forget. You accept Christ at the first invitation, and profusely boast of wholesouled, lifelong devotion; but deny Christ and renounce him at the first temptation. And you are thus converted and perverted every year. Your piety is a fire of shavings, very hot while it lasts, but soon burnt out.

The Thorny Soul And some fell among thorns. The picture is of a field that had been pre-occupied with thorns that had not been uprooted but only cut off. Small chance had the wheat in such case. The thorns are of two chief kinds, "the cares of the world," the anxieties of extreme poverty and those other equally vigorous thorns, "the deceitfulness of riches." That wealth fostering pride and tending to excessive indulgence is hostile to the "high thinking" that goes with "plain living" is well known. It is not so generally remembered that extreme poverty, daily fighting of "the wolf" at the door is equally unfriendly to the growth of noblest character.

"Alone, in the garret of a dilapidated house, within a wretched room, stretched upon a pallet of straw, covered only by some scanty and filthy rags, with no fire in the empty chimney, and the winter wind blowing in cold and fitful gusts through the broken and battered window, an old woman lay, feeble, wasted, and gray. She had passed the eleventh hour, and the hand was creeping slowly on to the twelfth. Seeing this, the preacher who had called to fix her thoughts upon Christ spoke to her of her soul. He told her of the Saviour's life and work, urging her meanwhile to prepare for that other world upon whose awful borders her spirit was then hovering. She looked up, stared wildly, raised herself with difficulty on her elbow, and then, with chattering teeth and a ravenous look, muttered, 'I am cold and hungry.' Promising her help, the preacher still continued to warn her that there was something worse than cold and hunger. Whereupon, stretching out her naked and skinny arm, and fixing her fierce eyes upon the preacher's face she exclaimed: 'O my God! I am starving. If you were half so cold and hungry as I am, you couldn't think of anything else!'"

If faith had only been planted first in her heart, she could have borne not only hunger, but death with fortitude and even joy, as so many of the noble army of martyrs have done. More frequently the thorns are not bodily hunger, but a restless hunger for wealth, position, pleasures. These are "devil grass" indeed. A poor man may be as covetous as a rich man. It is not money, but "the love of money," the absorbing desire for it, that constitutes the thorn "root" that chokes the Word of God in a man's soul. Is this your picture? The hardened, stony, thorny soil cannot do anything to produce a change itself; but the hardened, stony, thorny soul may become good ground by accepting the Word of God in an honest and good heart. Christ breaks up the fallow ground, changes the heart of stone, uproots the very love of sin and makes us faithful.

First the blade, and then the ear,
Then the full corn shall appear.
Lord of Harvest, grant that we Wholesome grain and pure may be.

The Fruitful Soul But others fell into good ground. Four sowings with but one ripening. Let discouraged preachers and teachers take note that Christ was not discouraged, though he knew that three-fourths of the souls in which he sowed the wonderful words of life would never grow them up into Christian living. If even one soul of all to whom we bring the seed shall develop it into a fruitful Christian life, it will be worth all our efforts. The good ground "brought forth fruit." Is that your picture?

Lessons of Spring Let us not miss the lessons that Christ would find in reviving nature, if he were teaching in our land on May 20, 1900. All growth proclaims God. The ancients called the earth "Mother," as they saw it bringing forth its manifold children in the Spring. But Earth could do nothing without heaven's co-operation in sun and shower. Thus God and man, divine and human, must co-operate in bringing even good ground to the fruitfulness which is the crown of human life, no less than of the fields. Let us not decry "humanitarianism." That is what the Bible means by the "fruits" that a Christian life must bear or be condemned. Let us look first to roots, then to fruits.

Bible Personations of the Four Kinds of Soils, i. e., Souls. We are men who often listened to the words of Jesus. When he taught in the temple, we were there. When he preached by the seaside, we were there. We heard him in the synagogues. Wherever he was speaking, there we went. His words and his ways did not please us. We did not feel that he could teach us anything, because we knew so well what was in the Bible. We only followed him to find fault with him. Who are we, and what ground are we like? The Pharisees, whose souls were like the hardened ground where the seed would not grow.

I am a young man, very rich. I heard Jesus preach many times. His words were wise and beautiful, and quite made me feel that I would like to have a home in heaven, and be with him forever. I thought I must do something to buy this home, but when I asked him what I could do, instead of telling me how to buy such a home, he told me to sell everything I had, and give the money to the poor. This was too hard for me, for I was proud of being rich, and so I gave up my desire for a home in heaven, and went sadly away from Jesus. Who am I? The rich young ruler. Like which ground was he? Like the ground where there was but little earth, and a quick growth that faded away on the first hot day.

I am one of ten men who heard the wonderful words of Jesus, and saw his wonderful works as he went about doing good in the land where we lived. The whole ten of us had a disease that no physician could cure. We asked Jesus to heal us. He spoke gracious words to us, and told us what to do that we might be healed. As we went obediently on a journey he commanded, we were all healed by his unseen power; but only one of our number took the trouble to go back to him, and thank him for what he had done for us. I am one of the nine who did not go back to him; indeed, I forgot all about it when I found myself well, and able to go to my friends and my work. Who am I? One of the ten lepers. Like which ground is he? Like the thorny place, for they remembered Christ in adversity, and forgot him in prosperity. The cares of the world, to which they had been restored, and the pursuit of business and pleasure choked the growth of gratitude.

I am a man who is always at a disadvantage in a crowd, because I am such a short man. My head is about as high as the shoulders of other men, and so I generally try to get on some high place when there is a crowd, if there is anything to be seen. One day Jesus passed through my city, and I wanted to have a good look at him, so I climbed up in a tree. He saw me as he was passing and actually stopped, and spoke to me, and told me that he would like to go to my home. How happy I was to come down, and take him for my guest. What wonderful words he spoke to me as he sat with me, while we were at dinner. As he talked, I grew so ashamed of my meanness, that I up and told him how I had cheated men in collecting taxes, and I also told him that I wanted to give back all the money I had taken four times over and that what I had left, I would divide in two equal parts, and give one-half to the poor. Who am I? Zaccheus, the publican. Like which ground is he? Like the good ground.

EMINENT CHRISTIAN WORKERS DESCRIBE THEIR LABORS IN HEATHEN LANDS—THEY APPEAL FOR INDIA

EVEN the missionary, accustomed as he is to a busy life, must have found the week of the Ecumenical Conference a period unusually full of occupation. There were not only three regular sessions each day, but there were sectional meetings held simultaneously in different buildings to consider special details of the great missionary problem, so that the visitor had to make his choice of a meeting, not being able, as he must have often wished he was, to be in two or more places at the same time. Besides this, not even Carnegie Hall would hold the vast throngs who desired to see and hear the distinguished men whose names are "familiar in our mouths as household words," and neighboring churches were pressed into service for overflow meetings. These claimed their share of the speakers so that some missionaries had to pay the penalty of greatness by delivering their addresses twice over—once to the main Conference and once to an overflow meeting. It would be impossible to give even a brief summary of the proceedings at these interesting gatherings. All that can be done is to mention some of the most and to refer our readers to the volume of official reports which will soon be issued.

On Monday, April 23, the subjects were: "The Authority and Purpose of Missions," "A Survey of Fields," and "A Century of Missions." One of the most memorable addresses was that of Dr. J. Hudson Taylor, the founder of the China Inland Mission. In the course of his address, he said:

"We have given too much attention to method and machinery and resources; too little to the supreme service of power, the filling with the Holy Ghost. This, I think, you will agree with me, has been the great weakness about the service in the past, and unless remedied will be the great weakness in the future. We are commanded to be filled with the Spirit. If not, we are living in disobedience and sin, the sin of unbelief. God is ready to fill us in this hall with the Holy Ghost. Now, when we are gathered together a mighty power may come on missionary labors and in ideas in every quarter of the globe.

"In November, 1886, we spent eight days in waiting upon God. We spent days of fasting, alternated with prayer, and we were led to pray to God to send one hundred missionaries. We were led to pray for one hundred missionaries to be sent out by our English board from January to November. We were led to ask God to give $50,000 in addition to the income of previous years, and we asked for it to be given in such a manner—in such large sums—that the force of our staff might not be occupied in keeping accounts. God answered our prayers wonderfully. He sent us offers for more than six hundred missionaries, and at the end of the year one hundred had gone.

"You ask, What about the income? God did not give us exactly the $50,000 we asked for, but gave us $55,000. And the $55,000 came in eleven contributions, the smallest amount being $2,500.

The Source of Power

"The living God is an available power. We can call on him in the name of Christ. Only prayer can overcome the appalling doctrines of heathendom. One great power is the Gospel itself. It is my privilege to know hundreds of native Christians who accepted Jesus Christ as their Saviour the first time they heard of him

"The Chinese are dying a million a month and without God. Those only who have seen know the darkness of a heathen deathbed. With what despair do they look forward to the judgment which they know is coming! They know they are sinners, and as their proverb puts it: 'Evil doing brings the evil reward.' They know nothing of God's atonement, nothing of the forgiveness which he has provided."

Dr. Taylor related instances of conversion of heathen Chinese. His testimony was a strong refutation of the claim made that conversions are not sincere. He gave one instance of a Chinaman who heard the Gospel preached but once, and then lived for fifteen years as a Christian in the interior where he never in that time saw a missionary. When finally a missionary went there, he found this one Christian man and his family living and worshiping daily, "A light in the province and known as a Christian family."

In Many Fields

In the survey of fields to which nine simultaneous meetings were devoted on Monday afternoon, the work in Corea occupied a prominent place. Dr. C. C. Vinton, a Presbyterian missionary from that land told of the way missionary work was started in Corea, which, he said, was through medical missionaries. "Religious missionaries were forbidden to enter the country," he went on. "Baptism had to be administered in secret. Now the Church of Christ is the most vital thing among them. The Christian Church is established in three hundred cities, and there are 5,000 Christians in the country. The Corean converts build their own churches, and institute and maintain their own schools. They are self-supporting, but they need missionaries to lead them. Those now there have their hands tied. They find little opportunity to preach the Gospel in regions beyond."

The Rev. Albertus Pieters, missionary of the Dutch Reformed Church in Nagasaki, Japan, said that there were at present 82,000 Shinto priests and 81,000 Buddhist priests in Japan, with 193,000 Shinto shrines and 108,000 Buddhist temples. There was thus one priest to every 280 persons, and one place of worship to every 150 persons. "This," he said, "effectually disposes of the statement that the Japanese are irreligious. We have 100,000 Christians in Japan."

Cannibals Transformed

The Rev. John G. Paton, who has labored in the New Hebrides for forty-two years, gave a brief account of the work in those islands. He said: "When I first went to the New Hebrides I found the people in the most degraded condition. They were cannibals and were constantly warring among themselves. To-day there are 18,000 converts, 3,000 church members who understand the Scriptures, and 300 preachers and teachers. Every church member becomes an earnest worker. If Christians in America were as much in earnest as this people, what multitudes would be brought to Christ! In every family daily worship is held, and every one, old and young, faithfully attends the house of God. One of the greatest obstacles with which we have to contend in those islands is the American traders who go to the natives with rum and firearms. Were there time, I might give many instances of cruelty and death resulting from these deadly weapons of Satan. I appeal to you Americans to try and stop this."

The Rev. Dr. T. S. Wynkoop, Secretary of the Northern India Bible Society, said that India led all countries in the extent and development of her missions. Every part of India was accessible to the Gospel. The different missionary societies annually distributed 177,000,000 pages of Christian literature. The Bible had been translated into sixty-two languages and dialects. Christian ideas and ideals were disintegrating those of ancient custom. The Hindus, he said, are a great religious people, and their influence has extended far and wide outside of India. Of the 117 Mohammedan converts in North India in 1893 no fewer than 62 had become clergymen. He looked to India for Mohammedan converts to carry the Christian religion across the Red Sea.

Woman's Work

The most thrilling spectacle, however, of the whole conference, was the mass meeting for women at Carnegie Hall, which brought out such a crowd as the great auditorium has never before held in its history. The climax was capped, when at the close of the meeting the hundreds of missionaries on the platform were introduced separately to the audience by Mrs. A. J. Gordon, of Boston. It seemed as if the applause attending the reading of the papers and the addresses of welcome had exhausted itself, but the women had been patiently waiting for the hour when they should see and "meet face to face," the workers who were busy throughout the world spreading the Gospel.

The women were in a receptive mood when Mrs. Gordon arose. She said that the best had been kept for the last, and she asked that as the workers came forward the house should rise and wave a salute. Instantly the women acted on the suggestion. Mrs. Gordon made a short address. She said that many in the hall had lived in the time of civil war, and that those must remember that the enthusiasm was kept up until the veterans paraded. If it was right and splendid, Mrs. Gordon said, to show this enthusiasm for military veterans, she hoped it would not be considered fanatical to show a similar enthusiasm when there came before the audience the

Veterans of the Mission Fields

Mrs. Gordon then began calling the names, and the wonderful march past began. As the names were called, women in the hall recognized in some of the women the scions of those who had died martyrs to the cause of Christ, and the enthusiasm burst all bounds. There were vigorous hallelujahs from all parts of the house, and the fluttering of handkerchiefs looked like thousands of snowflakes. It was a scene to be remembered.

When Mrs. Gordon introduced Mrs. Butler and said that she had worked for forty-four years in the mission field, the enthusiasm broke forth afresh. It had hardly exhausted itself when Mrs. Yule, a white-haired self-possessed little woman, came forward. Mrs. Gordon announced that Mrs. Yule had been sixty-six years in the service, and the scene of enthusiasm was repeated.

For a long time the parade went on. Over four hundred missionaries, summoned from all parts of the house, came forward and bowed their acknowledgments. They represented, Mrs. Gordon said, twenty-nine American, nine British and three Continental societies, and through it all the applause and waving of handkerchiefs continued. Finally, at the end of the service, the women all over the house joined hands, but instead of "Auld Lang Syne" there came the hymn, "Blessed Be the Tie That Binds Our Hearts in Christian Love." Five minutes of silent prayer followed, that brought to a close the most memorable day of the conference.

Conference Appeals for India

The culminating event in the week of the Conference was the great mass meeting in behalf of the India Famine Relief Work, which was held in Carnegie Hall, Sunday evening, April 29. The great auditorium was filled with a representative New York audience. On the platform were a number of eminent divines and a group of missionaries from the Indian field. Hon. Seth Low, the President of Columbia College, presided, and in opening the meeting urged that "we do what we can to make this great trouble bear less heavily on that stricken land and people." Rev. J. H. Barrows, President of Oberlin College, the first speaker, told of the horrors of an Indian famine, to which, as an eye-witness he could testify from observations made during a recent visit. He also gave a pleasing picture of some of the peaceable fruits of Christian benevolence won from previous famines. In Rev. Dr. Hume's school at Ahmednagar he had seen many intelligent Christian girls, who had been adopted into the missionary's home. As our readers had a hand in helping Dr. Hume's orphanage, they will be doubly interested to hear from one who has recently seen the children benefited of their good weal. Rev. L. B. Wolf's subject was, "What Causes Lead to Famines in India." The real causes, he said, are the failure of the winds, which bring rain at the usual seasons. When the rains fail the crops fail also, and there is no work for the laborer; as supplies become exhausted and the earth brings forth no grain, starvation ensues. "The Anglo-Indian Government are not failing in their duty; they simply deal with a calamity of whose magnitude we in this fruitful land, can form no adequate conception."

"There are always," said he, "from 50,000,000 to 61,000,000 people in India on the ragged edge of starvation, so it is not hard to see what happens when the rains fail. When the British took India, it was a land of 120,000,000 people. Under her benign rule, the population has increased almost 100 per cent. Under the old Moguls the tax was fifty to sixty per cent. on the total products of the soil, under British rule it is only three to six per cent., and hence, overtaxation cannot be stated as a cause of famine, as is sometimes unfairly done." Rev. Dr. Downie, American Baptist missionary, followed Dr. Wolf in exempting the British Indian Government from blame, and attributing famine solely to natural causes, the failures of the rain-bringing monsoons; he described the tremendous schemes of irrigation works, and railroad and canal systems undertaken by the Government in order to provide work for the unemployed, transportation for food into needy districts, and, above all, the best artificial substitute for rainfall possible under India's climatic conditions. There was yearly a sum of £1,500,000 on the Indian expense budget for famine relief; and the Government was always ready to meet ordinary scarcity of crops, but a case of such tremendous proportions had a claim on the help of the whole Christian world. He described, graphically, instances of terrible privation of water as well as of food. He came once to a village where a thousand people were living; there was just one well to supply these. In the bottom of that well he saw twenty women and counted twenty pitchers, each of which might hold a gallon; all were empty but two. The well, or spring, was a little hole about as big as his two hands—that was the only water supply that had been left for all these people.

Dr. Findlay, an English missionary, described the "Famine Code," prepared and in constant use by the Indian Government to meet the emergency of famine. Rev. James Smith, the American Board's missionary at Ahmednagar, said that the famine area is larger than in 1896–97; the present famine is an unparalleled calamity; latest estimates show 61,000,000 are affected. Rev. T. S. Johnson of Jabulpur, who distributed a large part of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund in 1897, told of the first signs of famine, people wandering about in search of work and then of food. Rev. Dr. E. D. Parker, who also received large sums from the gifts of our readers in 1897, spoke of the dire distress of the women and children. He said that when hunger attacked the men, they threw off the women and children: little ones were left by the wayside. He spoke of the great aid America had rendered in 1897, and of the gratitude which their generosity evoked; he described feelingly the magic of one word sent in cipher over the cable announcing coming help.

A speaker who deeply interested the audience was a daughter of Ramabai. She dwelt on the opportunity the famine afforded for saving India spiritually through ministering to its desperate physical need, and she told of the young girls and children rescued by her mother in the last famine, many of them now doing excellent work as missionaries to their own race. Here, again, our readers have a personal interest in the story, for Pandita Ramabai's noble endeavors have been most generously reinforced by their gifts. The last address of the evening was by Bishop Potter, who urged the chartering of ships, and loading them with grain and other food stuffs, and sending them off to India as soon as possible. He said:

"There is not a man or woman in the room who could not get in touch with some person who would contribute grain for this cause. The honor of the United States is at stake in this matter. If the Ecumenical Conference should have ended without this appeal it would have been a burning shame and a disgrace."

Tribulations of Travel

I LOOKED over his shoulder and thought to myself I should think as much, I should think he wouldn't know. There stood Josiah Allen before the glass and of all the sights I ever see his dress went ahead. He had got on a red woolen underskirt and his dressin' gown over it kinder floated back from it, and he had took out of my trunk a switch of hair that Tirzah Ann had put in, thinkin' mebby I would want to dress my head different in foreign countries; I hadn't wore it at all, and it wuz clear in the bottom of my trunk, but he had got at it somehow and had fastened it onto his head, and it hung down his back and ended with a big broad, red ribbin bow; it was one of Tommy's neck-ties. And he'd got all my jewelry—every mite on't—and had fastened it onto him on different places, and all of Tommy's ribbins to tie his collar with, wuz made into bows and pinned onto him, and my C. E. badge, and W. C. T. U. bow of white ribbin, and he had got my big palm leaf fan and had tied a big, red bow on't, and he wuz standin' before the glass fannin' himself and cranin' his neck one way and tother to see how he looked and admire himself, I spoze. And anon he tried to put the fan over his right ear. The idee! a palm leaf fan that wouldn't shet. And he spoke out to himself:

"No, I can't do that, but I can be fannin' myself, all the time fannin' and bowin." And then he stepped forrerd towards the glass and made a bow so low that his switch flopped over and ketched on the rocker of a chair and he couldn't move either way without jerkin' his braid off.

"Goodness gracious!" I hearn him say, "I never yet tried to be genteel without its being broke up some way," and he gin a jerk and left his switch on the floor. He took it up tenderly and smoothed it out and wuz tryin' to attach it to his head agin. It wuz fastened on by a red ribbin comin' up over his head and tied on top. But at that minute he ketched sight of me and he looked some meachin', but he begun immegiately pourin' out profuse reasons for his costoom and manners.

Sez he, "You know Robert wants us to meet that high official, and I felt that it would help our relations with China if I should dress up China fashion."

Sez I, "It will help one of your relations if you'll take off that red petticoat and ribbins and cameos and badges and things."

A Patriotic "Pardner"

Sez he, "I am doin' this for political reasons, Samantha, and can't be hampered by domestic reasons and ignorance." And he kep' on tyin' the bow on his foretop.

Sez I, "For the sake of your children and grandchildren won't you desist and not put 'em to shame and make a laughin' stock of yourself before Miss Meechim and Arvilly and all the rest?"

"I shall do my duty, Samantha," sez he and he pulled out the ribbin of the bow, so that it sot out some like a turban over his forward. "Of course I look very dressy and pretty in this costoom, but that is not my reason for wearin' it; you and Arvilly are always talking about political men who don't come up to the mark and do their duty by their constituents. I am a very influential man, Samantha, and there is no this when they eat their catridge boxes and friz themselves at Valley Forge," and he fingered some of them bows and ornaments on his breast agin with a vain, conceited smirk of satisfaction. I wuz at my wits' end; I glanced at the door; there wuz no lock on it; what should I do? Religion and common sense wouldn't move him, and as for my sharpest weepon—good vittles—here I wuz hampered, I couldn't cook 'em for him, what could I do?

Sez he agin, "I only do this for patriotism; I sacrifice myself on the altar of my country," and he fanned himself gracefully, lookin' sarahuptishly into the glass.

"Yes," sez I, "you could do great bizness in savin' me, togged out as you are, made helpless by your own folly; but," sez I, in a holler, awful axent, "It hain't that, Josiah; it is fur worse than losin' my life; that wouldn't be nothin' in comparison."

He looked white as a piller case. Sez he: "Tell me to once what you lay out to do."

"Well," sez I, "if you must know, I spoze that it might help our relations with China if I should part with you and wed a China potentate. It would kill me and be bad for the potentate, but if our country's welfare is at stake, if it would help our relations I—"

"Let the relations go to Jericho, Samantha! every one on 'em, and the Potentates! every one of them;" and he kicked off them robes quicker than I can tell the tale.

Sez I, "Josiah, you needn't tear every rag you've got on; take 'em off quietly." He'd put 'em on over his own clothes. He obeyed me implicitly, and sez he anxiously, as he laid 'em all on the bed:

"You've gin up the idee, hain't you, Samantha?"

Sez I, "I have for the present Josiah. I wuz only doin' it to emulate your sacrifice; if you don't sacrifice yourself any further, I shan't."

He hadn't been so good to me for sometime as he wuz for the rest of that day. I only done it to stop his display, and my conscience hain't been quite at rest ever sence about it, but then a woman has to work headwork to keep her pardner within bounds. I wuzn't goin' to have him make a fool of himself before Arvilly and Miss Meechim. Arvilly would never let him hearn the end on't nor me nuther.

"Well," sez I, growin' calm as I thought of a forlorn hope, "Mebby it is best, Josiah, and I hain't a goin' to be outdone by you in patriotism. I too will sacrifice myself." And I proceeded to comb my hair with a firm look on my face. He looked alarmed.

"What do you mean, Samantha?" sez he.

"I won't let you go ahead of me in sacrificing yourself, Josiah. No, I will go fur ahead of what you or anybody else would do; it will most probable kill me, but I shall not falter."

Samantha's Sacrifice

"What is it, Samantha?" sez he, droppin' the fan and approachin' me with agitated mean. "What are you goin to do? If it is to throw yourself in front of any idol and perish, I will save you if I shed the last drop of blood in my system!"

tellin' how much good I shall do my country this day, and the sneers of the multitude shall not deter me."

Sez I, almost fearfully, "Think of the meetin' house, Josiah, where you're a deacon and looked up to; what will they say to hear of this, passin' yourself off for a Chinaman; dressin' up in petticoats and red ribbins!"

Sez he, cranin' his neck round to see the bow hangin' down his back, "Our old forefathers went through worse trials than

Off to Singapore

Well, we met the potentate in our own clothes and he met us in his own clothes, jest as he and we had a right to. He wuz a real sensible man, so Robert Strong said, and he understood a good deal of his talk and ort to know.

Well, from Shanghai we sailed for Hongkong and then embarked for Point de Galle on the island of Ceylon, expectin' to stop on the way at Saigon in Cochin-China and Singapore.

It wuz dretful windy and onpleasant at first. It is much pleasanter to read about a monsoon in Jonesville with your feet on a base burner than to experience one on a steamer. Everything swayed and tipped and swung, that could, even to our stomachs. We only made a short stop at Saigon—a hotter place I wuz never in. I thought of the oven in our kitchen range and felt that if Philury wuz bakin' bread and mea' and beans and got into the oven o turn 'em, she knew a little about the limate we wuz enjoying.

As we ascended the river our ship got a ittle too near the shore and kinder run ts prow into a jungle where the monkeys ung from the tree tops and made fun of us, I spoze, mad at our invadin' their lomain and wanted us to pay, tennyrate the muskeeters sent in heir bills, sharp ones. Saigon is pretty place set in its tropical scenery; it has eighty or ninety housand inhabitants and belongs o France. The natives are small nd slower than time in the primer.

Josiah's Ideas on Dress

Singapore is an island in the straits of Malacca and is twenty-four milds long and fourteen wide; t is a British province ruled by native princes under the Queen. Here the days and nights are of equal engths and it rains about every day: t has a mixed population of Chinamen, Malays, Europeans and a few Americans, mebby a hundred thousand in all.

We didn't stay long here, but rode out in what they called a Jherry lookin' like a dry goods box drawed by a couple of ponies.

Josiah sez to me, "I am glad that the Malay coolers wear a little more than the Japans." And the coolies here did wear besides their red loin cloth a narrer strip of white cotton cloth hangin' over their left shoulders. Our hotel wuz a very comfortable one; it consisted of several buildin's two stories high connected by covered halls; it wuz surrounded by handsome trees and beautiful ornamental shrubbery and flowers.

The wide verandas wuz very pleasant, with their bamboo chairs and couches and little tables where you could have tea served. Birds of the most beautiful plumage soared and sung in the trees, and butterflies that looked like flowers on wings fluttered about. You can't tell men from wimmen by their clothes. They all wear earrings and bracelets and nose-rings. Josiah sez to me:

"I have always said, Samantha, that men didn't dress gay enough; a few bracelets and breastpins and earrings would add to a man's looks dretfully, and I mean to set the fashion in Jonesville. It would take ten years often my age. Jest see how proud the men walk; they feel that they're dressed up; it gives 'em a lofty look."

The men did seem to have a different gait from the females; the wimmen looked more meek and meachin. We didn't stay long in Saigon, but we visited the Whampoo gardens and found that they were perfectly beautiful, made by Mr. Whampoo, a rich Chinaman. There wuz fifty acres under most perfect cultivation. Here the Chinese fad of dwarfing and training trees wuz carried to perfection; there wuz trees trained into all sorts of shapes. One wuz a covered carriage about three feet high, with a horse, all tree but natural as life; and then there wuz pagodas and men and wimmen and animals and birds all growin' and havin' to be trimmed by the patient Chinese gardener. The tree they can uses best is a evergreen with a little leaf and a white flower not much bigger than the head of a pin. But there wuz not only every tropical tree you could think on, palm, cocoanut, nutmeg, cinnamon, tea, coffee, and clove bush, but trees and plants from every part of the world, some from America.

Here wuz a Victoria lily in its full beauty, the dark green leaves edged with brown and red, as big round as our washtub, and turned up on the edges about two inches. Each plant has one leaf and one flower. And we see the most lovely orchids here; Dorothy thought them the most beautiful of all. Well, in a day or two we sot out for Ceylon's isle.

A Poetical Reminder

As we drew nigh to Ceylon I sez to Josiah: "Did you ever expect, Josiah Allen, to feel

> 'The balmy breezes
> That blow from Ceylon's Isle
> Where every prospect pleases,
> And only man is vile?'"

And he sez, holdin' on his hat, "I shouldn't call these breezes very bammy, and you no need to lay such a powerful stress on man, Samantha, that term, man, means wimmin too in this case."

"Yes," sez Arvilly, who wuz standin' nigh, "that term, man, always includes wimmen when there is any blame or penalty attached, but when it sez 'Man is born free and equal,' it means men alone."

"THE WIDE VERANDAS WUZ VERY PLEASANT"

"Yes," sez Josiah, smilin' real pleasant, "you've happened to hit it jest right, Arvilly."

"Well," sez I, "do look and enjoy the beauty that is spread out right before you." Our good ship made its way into the harbor of Colombo, through a multitude of boats with men of every color and size at their oars and all gesticulating and jabbering in axents as strange to us as Jupiter talk would be. Some of the boats wuz queer lookin'; they are called dugouts, and have outriggers for the crew to set on. They carry fruit and provision to the steamers in the bay, and take passengers to and fro.

A Land of Rainbow Hues

Bein' took by one to terry firmy, we soon made our way through the chatterin' strange lookin' crowd of every color and costoom to a tarven where we obtained food and needed rest, and the next mornin' we sallied out some as we would if we had jest landed on the shores of another planet to explore a new world.

We walked through the streets by big gardens that seemed jest ablaze with color and swoonin' with perfume. The low white houses wuz banked up with drifts of blossom and verdure as the Jonesville houses wuz with snow drifts on a winter day. Sweet voiced birds in gayest plumage swung and soared aloft instead of the ice-suckles that hung from the eaves of Jonesville houses. And instead of Ury clad in a buffalo coat and striped wool mittens walking with icy whiskers and frost-bitten ears to break the ice in the creek, wuz the gay crowd of men, wimmen and children dressed in all the rich colors of the rainbow, if they wuz dressed at all. Solid purple, yellow, green, burnin' colors palpitating with light and cheer under the warm breezes and glowin' sunshine.

Gorgeously Colored Costumes

Sometimes the children wuz in jest the state that Adam and Eve wuz when they wuz finished off and pronounced good. Sometimes a string and a red rag comprised their toilette, but they all seemed a part of the strange picture, the queer, mysterious, onknown Orient. The gorgeous colorin' of the men's apparel struck Josiah to the heart agin; he vowed that he would show Jonesville the way for men to dress if he ever got home agin. Sez he, "I will show Deacon Henzy and Uncle Sime Bentley that a man can wear sunthin' besides that everlastin' black or gray." Sez he:

"I can dress gay with small expense; I can take one of your white woolen sheets and color it with diamond dye a bright red or a green or yeller at a outlay of ten cents per sheet, and one of my bandannas will make a crackin' good turban. Let me walk into the Jonesville meetin' house with that gorgeous drapery wropped round me, why I should be the lion of the day."

"Yes!" sez I, "you would break up the congregation as quick as a real lion would."

"Well, I'll tell you, Samantha, there is beauty in such a costoom that our sombry coats and pantaloons and vests can't come nigh to."

I spoze Ceylon is the most beautiful place in the world, such glow and richness of color, such aboundin' life in the verdure, in the animal and vegetable kingdom. No wonder so many think that it wuz the original Garden of Eden; no shovelin' snow for Adam or bankin' up fruits and vegetables for winter's use. No, he could step out barefoot in the warm velvety grass in December, and pick oranges and gather sweet potatoes and cucumbers, and strawberries if Eve took it into her head she wanted a shortcake pie. And little Cain could cut up cane literally, and every way, in January, and Abel pile flowers and fruit on his altar all the year round. But I wonder which of their descendants built these immense magnificent cities layin' fur below forests and billows of turf and flowers.

I wonder how they looked and what language they spoke and what their politics wuz. Arvilly thought they must have been temperance folks. Sez she, "Any city that has reservoirs twenty milds long believed in drinkin' water." We had took a tower to see one of them dug up cities, and sure enough the water reservoir wuz twenty milds long; jest think from that what the size of the hull city must have been, when their waterin' trough, as you may say, wuz as long as America's biggest city. Stately stairways, up which twenty carriages big as our democrat could pass side by side if horses could climb stairs.

A row of tall pillers, ten milds in length line the roads to some of them cities, and I sez:

"Oh, good land! How I wish I could be a mouse in the wall and see who, and what passed over them roads, and why, and when, and where."

And Josiah sez, "Why don't you say you wish you wuz a elephant and could look on? your simely would seem sounder."

The Worship of Elephants

And I sez, "Mebby so, for hull rows of carved marble elephants stand along them broad roads; I guess they worshiped 'em."

And he sez, "I wuz alludin' to size."

Robert Strong looked ruther sad as we looked on them ruins buried so deep by the shovel of time. But I sez to him in a low voice:

"There is no danger of the city you're a rarin' up ever bein' engulfed and lost, for justice and mercy and love shine jest as bright to-day as when the earth was called out of chaos. Love is eternal, immortal, and though worlds reel and skies fall, what is immortal cannot perish."

He looked real grateful at me; he sets store by me.

Everywhere, as you walk through the streets you are importuned to buy sunthin; some of the finest jewels in the world are bought here. The merchants are dretful polite, bowin' and smilin', their hair combed back slick and fastened up with shell combs. They wear white, short pantaloons and long frocks of colored silk, open in front over a red waistcoat; sometimes they are bare-footed with rings on their toes; they wear rings in their nose and sometimes two on each ear, at the top and bottom.

Josiah studied their costoom with happy interest, but a deep shade of anxiety darkened his mean as they would spread out their wares before me, and he sez with a axent of tender interest:

"If you knew, Samantha, how much more beautiful you looked to me in your cameo pin you would never think of appearin' in diamonds and rubies."

I sez, "I guess I won't buy any nose-rings, Josiah, my nose is pretty big anyway."

"Yes," he interrupted me eagerly, "they wouldn't be becomin', Samantha, and be in the way eatin' sweet corn on the ear and such."

There are lots of men carryin' round serpents, and I sez to Josiah, "Who under the sun would want to buy a snake unless they wuz crazy?"

"Yes," said Josiah, "Eve made a big mistake listenin' to that serpent; there probable wuzn't but one then, and that's the way they have jest overrun the garden, her payin' attention and listenin' to it. Females can't seem to look ahead."

And I sez, "Why didn't Adam do as you always do, Josiah, ketch up a stick and put anend to it?" I always holler to Josiah if I see a snake and he makes way with it.

But such talk is onprofitable. But Josiah hadn't a doubt but this was the Garden of Eden and talked fluent about it.

are needed. In the years to come, there will be thousands of persons living and thriving in India, who will bless God that such people as the readers of this journal heard their cry of agony and stretched forth a hand to save them. When American missionaries tell them the glad tidings of the Bread of Life, they will remember the gifts from the same hands of "the bread that perisheth," and will listen to the still better message.

All arrangements were completed last week for the sailing of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Famine Relief steamship Quito. Her cargo consists of 200,000 bushels of the choicest two-year-old American corn, sacked and placed in four clean, capacious and well-ventilated holds. The cargo is insured and is valued at $100,000, which, at the famine rates at which corn is now selling in India (about three cents a pound, fifty-six pounds to the bushel), will be equal to $300,000 worth of corn when it reaches Bombay. In other words, the cargo will accomplish three times as much in the direction of life-saving as if its equivalent in money had been sent instead. The ship's charter cost $40,000, which is paid by the generosity of the United States Government, being its official contribution to the relief movement. The grain will reach its destination in ample time—months before the famine is ended. Arrangements for its transportation from the Indian port to the interior are so thorough that some of the grain will be in the hands of the distributors within a day or two after it is taken out of the steamer. Dr. Klopsch, aided by the Inter-denominational Committee, will personally receive and superintend the distribution of the corn.

Valuable service has been rendered to the relief work by our government officials in Washington and New York. Special acknowledgment is due to Secretary Hay, of the State Department, and Secretary Long, of the Navy Department, whose prompt co-operation hastened the grant of a vessel by our government, and to Pay Director Denniston, of the United States Navy Pay Office, New York, who personally conducted the details of chartering the Quito to bear the gifts of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers to perishing India. All arrangements for bringing forward the cargo and other necessary matters connected with the life-saving mission were under the care of Rev. R. G. Hobbs, who went to India in 1897 with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD relief steamer Everett, which sailed from San Francisco.

Dr. Klopsch, who is now on his way to Bombay, before leaving London had an interview with Lord George Hamilton, the British Secretary of State for India, at which plans for the relief work were fully discussed. The Secretary expressed the warmest appreciation of America's generous aid to India. He gave to Dr. Klopsch letters of introduction to Lord Curzon, the Viceroy of India, and to several other high officials. On the same day, Dr. Klopsch and Rev. Dr. Talmage (who is now on a preaching tour in England) were entertained at luncheon at the Mansion House by the Lord Mayor of London. That official also gave expression to his warm admiration of American benevolence. In the evening, Dr. Klopsch left for the Continent, on reaching which he was to proceed by rail to Brindisi, and thence by steamer to Bombay. Before sailing, he said that his official visit in England had been exceedingly gratifying, and that the cordial and appreciative attitude of the British people toward America, in its efforts to help stricken India, showed the warm and fraternal feeling between the two nations. He expects to return to the United States in July.

Unhappily, there is no favorable news from the famine districts, but, as was feared, reports of increased suffering and death. A cable message from Simla, the present seat of government, says that "the horrors of the famine are daily becoming worse." Donald Mackenzie Smeaton, one of the British Commissioners, who has just returned to Calcutta from a visit of inspection to the famine districts, says relief is urgently needed. He adds: "The misery in parts of the Bombay and Rajputana and central India districts is beyond description and is unparalleled."

Mrs. Ada Lee, of Calcutta, whose orphanage our readers have been helping to support, writes: "We have just received from Rajputana twenty-four living skeletons whom we are trying to nurse back to health. So weak were they when they arrived that they could not stand without trembling. Their bodies were in a dreadful condition. The water famine is so severe that there is a difficulty in getting water enough to drink, and they dare not use any for washing. Twelve of them had been fine strong women. Now they are bent and haggard—widows without friends or food. The other twelve were boys—at least that is what the report said; but when we went out to receive them, one of the boys looked up pleadingly in my face and said, 'This one by me is not a boy. She is my sister. You will not take her from me, will you?' He had kept her with him in all their wanderings in search of food. They had suffered the pangs of hunger together. Whatever he could get he had divided with her. She was all he had left. We commended him for his devotion and love, and assured him we would care for both, and that they should be near each other. It was touching to see his gratitude. Two others were brothers, one about eight and the other six years old. They had clung to each other and seemed so fond of each other—two bright little fellows who, we trust, have a mission.

"Another poor little fellow with a cough and so weak, has about his neck a charm. I asked him who put it on him, and he said his mother. She and his father had given to their child—denying themselves—until finally their own life went out. The boy saw them both die, and was very near the end himself, when God sent a kind lady to rescue him, and she sent him to us. He is in a critical state, but he now gets food and medicine and all the care many loving hearts can give, for all in the Girls' Home are interested in these sick, starving people. The charm hanging down over his bony breast is a relic of Hinduism, but I feel I cannot remove it yet, for his mother put it on him, hoping through it some way he would escape. It was all she knew, and God surely heard the poor mother's prayer and saved her boy, although she knew not the true God.

"Could our friends see the pleading faces as we go about among them, I am sure they would realize as they never could otherwise do, the awfulness of famine.

A SPECIMEN GROUP OF FAMINE VICTIMS RESCUED BY THE MISSIONARIES

"One widow carried in her bony arms a little skeleton we took to be a child eight or ten months old, but upon examination we found it a boy of three years. We did all we could to save the little fellow, but food had reached him too late. And after three days with us the angels came and took our first fruits of the famine back to God. As the heathen mother bent over her dying child she uttered not a word, but the hot tears fell thick and fast; and my heart was knit to hers in her sorrow. The little group of Hindu women looked on with intense interest as we nailed together the box, and dressed the little body clean and laid it in. The school girls brought flowers and strewed them all over, putting a bunch of the brightest within the folded hands. The Hindu women had never seen the like before. Then we laid the little body away to rest; but we thought of the happy spirit which had fled to the land where there is no more hunger and thirst, and felt sure our own children would welcome the little stranger there, and have a special interest in him because he had come from their home below, where we had tried to minister to him.

PAY DIRECTOR H. M. DENNISTON
Of the Navy Pay Office, New York

"The poor mother stood by as we thanked God for the privilege of even saving this little body from being left by the roadside, as this mother had seen many another left. We intend to rescue as many of these as the Lord may send us money for.'

We are glad to notice that interest in the work of relieving this appalling suffering is spreading in our land. We rejoice to see that other religious journals are taking a hand in the work. All the help available is needed. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Inter-denominational Committee in Bombay will take care that money contributed will be given to missionaries needing it most, regardless of denomination.

HON. JOHN D. LONG
Secretary of the Navy

Canada's Great Disaster

SINCERE sympathy from the whole civilized world goes out to Canada in the sad affliction which has befallen the cities of Ottawa and Hull. The fire which devastated them on April 26 was the worst conflagration that has occurred on this continent since the great fire of Chicago. It started in Hull, on the Quebec side of the Ottawa River. Some accounts attribute its beginning to a defective chimney, but others convey a suspicion that it was of incendiary origin. The fire was first seen about an hour before noon, and it spread with such rapidity that in half-an-hour it was beyond the control of the fire departments. It leaped the river at a point where there were several large lumber yards, which fed the flames and carried them into the city of Ottawa. Help was rendered to the fire departments by Brockville, Peterboro and, finally by Montreal, which sent a special train. It seemed, however, useless to attempt to extinguish it, and the efforts of the firemen were directed to preventing its spreading. Seventeen hours passed before it burned itself out, and in that time five miles of area had been turned into smoking ruins. It is feared that eighteen thousand persons have been rendered homeless and that property worth from fifteen to twenty million dollars was destroyed. Hull is almost entirely wiped out. Happily, a change in the direction of the wind during the later hours of the fire saved the Parliament buildings and other fine edifices from destruction. The loss of life, so far as has yet been learned is less than might have been expected. Five men and two women are believed to have perished and there are several children missing, but considering that nearly three thousand houses and other buildings were burned, there is reason to be thankful that there were not more people killed. There will, however, be widespread destitution for some time and the homeless people will need food and shelter. We are glad to learn that from New York, Boston, and other American cities funds are being sent for immediate use and that help has been forwarded from England. It may be hoped that the gifts will be of the most generous kind and the words of the prophet be amply fulfilled in the experience of the stricken city:

To give unto them beauty for ashes; the oil of joy for mourning (Isa. 61 : 3).

THE CITY OF OTTAWA, THE SCENE OF THE RECENT DISASTROUS FIRE

Traced by a Perfume

Recent mails from Europe report the arrest of a notorious burglar in Paris. The police have been looking for him for many months to answer a charge of robbing a lady of her jewels. One night she was awakened by the presence of a man in her bedroom. Fearing that he might murder her if she made outcry, she closed her eyes and feigned sleep. But as soon as he had departed she raised her window and shouted. The police went in pursuit, but were unable to overtake the robber who had taken the lady's jewels with him. The case was then given to the detectives, but as the lady was unable to give any description of him they, too, failed. But she described the missing jewels, and the police sent the list to all the pawnbrokers in Paris. One other clue they had. The lady noticed when the robber was near her bed, a strong odor of eucalyptus oil. This statement was added to the list of the jewels sent out. One afternoon a man called on a pawnbroker with a number of jewels that he wanted to pledge. Referring to the list furnished by the police, the pawnbroker soon found that none of the missing jewels was there; but he detected the odor of eucalyptus oil about the man's garments and he summoned a policeman and had his customer arrested. When the police searched the man's apartments the missing jewels were found there and he has been tried and convicted. It was apparently a very slight clue, but it proved a sure one. The odor was associated with the robber's evil deed, but there are odors that recall to the memory the greatest of all the services that have been rendered to the human race. The Psalmist alluding to the salvation that was to be won by suffering and the healing that was to come to the world therefrom, foresaw the Saviour with garments redolent of perfume.

All thy garments smell of myrrh and aloes and cassia out of the ivory palaces (Ps. 45 : 8).

A Mother's Will Disregarded

A remarkable suit was tried in the Supreme Court in New York a few days ago. It was based on the will of a lady who died two years ago. She had bequeathed the whole of her property to the gentleman to whom she was engaged to be married, and she had also constituted him the guardian of her three-year-old son, the child of her first marriage. The will was contested by the mother of the deceased lady, but the court gave the property as directed by the will. As to the custody and guardianship of the child, however, it withheld its decision pending certain investigations. It has now given judgment reversing the arrangement made in the will. It confides the child to the care of his grandmother, on the ground that the first duty of the court in the case is to consider the best interests of the child. The court was evidently influenced in the matter by certain other suits in which the gentleman, whom the mother of the child had chosen to be his guardian, had been concerned. It is somewhat unusual for a court to disregard the wishes of a parent in regard to a child, but there can be no doubt that if it had sufficient reason for distrusting the guardian that the mother selected, it was right in committing the care of the child to some one whom it could trust. The best interests of the child ought certainly to be the first consideration. To conserve them, God frequently proceeds in his providential dealings as did the court, and does not grant the wishes of the parents, whether they be living or dead. There are so few of whom he can say as he said of Abraham:

I know him that he will command his children and his household after him and they shall keep the way of the Lord (Gen. 18: 19).

A Burglar's Use of a Bible

A burglar, under sentence of five years' imprisonment, used a Bible to assist him in escaping from the county jail, at New Haven, Conn., a few days ago. About two weeks before he made his escape, a friend sent him a bunch of bananas. It is thought that some fine saws were concealed in the fruit. He sawed through the iron bars in the window of his cell, and, in order to avoid detection, substituted some wooden broom handles for them. Every night when he had finished his sawing, he filled the marks in the bars with licorice. When all his preparations were complete, he climbed through the window of his cell and made his way into the prison chapel, in the ceiling of which there is a slide. To reach the slide, he used a stepladder, but found it too short. Looking around for some means of raising it, he saw the pulpit Bible, and used it for the purpose. Once on the roof of the chapel, he could easily get to the street. His liberty is little likely to be turned to any account but that of other crimes. If he had put the Bible to the purpose for which it was given—that of enabling him to escape from the power and the defilement of sin, there would have been some hope of his reclamation; but they who cling to their sin while they use the Bible to try to escape from the consequences of their sin, deceive themselves and add to their condemnation.

For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning (II. Peter 2 : 20).

Has Waited a Century

A claim for payment for services rendered one hundred and ten years ago was under the consideration of Congress last week. It appears that in 1790, Col. Benjamin Wilson, a revolutionary soldier, constructed a fort in what is now Randolph County, W. Va., for the protection of settlers against the incursions of Indians. He served his country also as Colonel of Militia in other ways, and proved himself a loyal and useful citizen. How much money Col. Wilson received and what reward was given him for his valuable services does not appear, but there is an outstanding claim of $2,998.80, which has been under the consideration of a Committee of the Senate, and that committee now recommends that it be paid to his daughter. It seems extraordinary that such a claim should have been neglected so long. A man whose patriotism was of so high an order and who exerted himself so vigorously in the cause of his country ought not to have had compensation delayed for more than a century. We may hope that the worthy Colonel was a servant of Christ and a soldier under the banner of the Cross. If so, he has learned by this time that Christ never overlooks services rendered in his cause, and that though earthly governments may prove unmindful, his heavenly Sovereign never fails to reward those who serve him.

Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give every man according as his work shall be (Rev. 22 : 12).

BRIEF NOTES

A missionary in Arabia makes the estimate that there are now about 196,500,000 Mohammedans in the world.

Gambling is largely on the increase in France. A Parisian newspaper states that it could be proved that at least one-half of the suicides that occur result from losses at the races.

The London Missionary Society reports that 29,000 out of 35,000 of the population of Samoa belong to churches connected with the society. These churches are supporting their own pastors as well as their educational work.

The Free Church Council of South Manchester, as a result of their recent house-to-house canvas, show that 4,500 families belong to Nonconformist churches, 3,800 to the Church of England, 1,100 to the Roman Catholic or other bodies, while 2,000 attend no place of worship. Only three were avowed atheists.

Major James H. Cole's union meetings in Springfield, Mo., have led to a widespread revival. The Criminal Court, one of the largest buildings in the city, was not large enough to accommodate all who sought to attend the meetings. On April 20, after the meetings had been continued for four months the interest had increased rather than abated.

It is reported that large numbers of Mormons are settling in the Western Provinces of Canada. A Mormon authority claims that they have ten thousand adherents in the Dominion.

Dr. Joseph Parker, referring to a recent debate in the English Parliament, said: "I pray God that he would dissolve both houses of Parliament and readmit members only on proof of character." If that prayer were answered as to all legislatures on earth, there would be some difficulty in making a quorum.

Dr. Clough, the famous Baptist missionary of India, reported some time ago: "I preach seven sermons a day on an average of seven days in the week, beginning at 6 A.M. in one city and taking seven cities a day, always leaving behind me some native preachers and colporteurs to hold the congregation and answer inquiries."

The seventeenth annual meeting of the International Missionary Union will be held at Clifton Springs, N. Y., May 30-June 5, 1900. All foreign missionaries of evangelical boards are eligible to membership and entitled to free entertainment. Missionaries or other persons desiring further information, address Mrs. C. C. Thayer, Clifton Springs, N. Y.

Rev. A. C. Geyer, pastor of the M. E. church of Lafayette, Ind., writes us that the church building erected only three years ago, at the cost of many sacrifices and much self-denial, has been destroyed by fire. The congregation, exhausted by their efforts to pay for it, are now at the end of their resources and would sincerely appreciate aid from their brethren in other cities.

Dr. Allyn writes hopefully of his work in Brazil. He believes that the Gospel seed that has been sown during the past years of difficult labor is coming to fruition. Among other cheering signs is that a colporteur of the American Bible Society, who visited Sao Joas del Rei recently, sold over one hundred and fifty Bibles and Testaments in two days. This is something unprecedented in that region.

Under the Evening Lamp

By Margaret E. Sangster

CONTRASTED PAIN

ONE folds the little white hands
And lays a flower between,
And sees death's lilies pale
Where life's sweet rose hath been,
And aches through all her heart beside the Baby face serene.

One smiles a brave good-morrow,
And walks with even tread,
The while she bears the burden
Of a great and nameless dread.
God wot—a living grief is worse than the Peace that folds the dead.

—MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

HOUSE-CLEANING

BUSY days these for the housekeeper, when closets must turn out their contents, trunks, boxes and barrels be overhauled, cellars be cleaned and whitewashed, carpets shaken, turned, and re-made, and the whole house gone over. The annual house-cleaning is a necessity, if we would possess our souls in peace; yet no matter how easy we make it, the work is a large undertaking, and no sinecure in the average matron's hands.

Certain rules may be observed with propriety, and to our manifest assistance in getting through the Spring campaign. The first is, finish the closets first. The next, begin at the top and come down. The third, secure extra help if you possibly can. The fourth, keep one room comfortable and intact for John and the children. The fifth, have one place where you may have a fire if there comes a cold and rainy spell of weather. The sixth and the most important of all is threefold: don't hurry, don't worry, don't get along without your regular meals.

I hope that moving is not added to the task of cleaning in too many of my friends' homes. All rules fail when one must pack up her goods and chattels, and take them bodily from one house to another. If an unhappy mortal in similar plight of ill-fortune is moving out as we are moving in, then are woes multiplied. Some of us are going to pack up and move to the country out of the town, and that is a pleasant step to take. Others from the country will seek the town, and they may expect to be homesick for pastures green and meadows fair.

An Honest Face

"A homely face, but an honest one," said a woman speaking of a lad who had just gone out. An honest face is a good recommendation. Boys may have few worldly advantages, but if they have a candid look, if they gaze boldly into the eyes of those who speak to them, if they have nothing to conceal, they are, so far, well started for life's journey.

Making Flags for the Exposition

It is pretty work, and the young fingers are deft and fly fast as they sit sewing the flags for that gay Paris Exposition of 1900, which some of us will cross the ocean to see. Those who do not go in their own persons may receive an accurate impression of the wonderful scene from Dear Aunt Samantha, who has the gift of painting in words if ever a woman had it.

These immense industrial and artistic displays which call together the ends of the earth and show their inventions, their progress, their manners and customs, their mineral and vegetable productions, and whatever they have that is rich and rare, are improving and broadening to all beholders. Anyone who went through the great aisles and avenues of our own White City by the Lake, in 1893, had eyes opened to the extent of this earth's resources, and was convinced that the age is magnificent. For the young, such shows of manufactures and art are an education. We hope that many of our readers may visit Paris this summer, and come home the better for the pleasure-trip.

Mamma's Story

"Tell us a story, mamma," plead the little ones, gathering about the maternal knee, when the restful hush of evening had followed upon the bustle and stir of the day—a day that had been a hard one for busy, patient mamma. "Run away!" was on her lips; then she said to herself, "No, I can't neglect one opportunity to sow good seeds before tares are planted." So she told in the way they loved to hear of little Samuel listening to the voice of God, giving with the story information the little minds were eager to receive concerning the Tabernacle worship and the customs and family life of ancient Israel; and so speaking of Samuel's listening for God's voice as to implant in them a desire to listen also.

Women's Work in the Great Missionary Conference

The work which for some weeks has been quietly and patiently done by women in preparation for the Ecumenical Conference has resulted in a most complete and educational missionary exhibit. The various fields of the world have been so illustrated as to present an object lesson to all visitors, and quite frequently young women in the native dress have shown people how the Burmese maidens look, how the Karen girl is dressed in her home, how the Syrian matron walks abroad, and so on. Many possessors of curious and interesting missionary relics, and articles brought from the ends of the earth have cheerfully loaned them for the great occasion, and as part of one of the most impressive gatherings ever seen in a Christian land, the work of the women has received attention and elicited much appreciative comment. Thursday, April 26, Woman's Day at the Conference, was one of the most interesting and instructive of the week. The mass meeting for women on that day brought out such a crowd as the great auditorium has seldom held, and an overflow meeting was held in a neighboring church. One fact made prominent during all the sessions of the Conference is that woman's work in the foreign field is, if anything, more necessary than man's, since she alone can effectually reach the woman, wife and mother of the Orient.

MAKING FLAGS FOR THE PARIS EXPOSITION

Little Helpers

Birds are the farmer's helpers. A tiny chickadee for a single meal eats 250 eggs of the cankerworm. This worm ruins orchards. Robins destroy cutworms; and all our birds except the English sparrow, two species of hawk and one of owl, are our allies in preserving fruits and vegetables from harm; yet our friends and songsters are slain by the thousands just to decorate hats!

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-all

—LUELLA. Strawberries for breakfast may be served unhulled, with their stems. They are then dipped in powdered sugar, and eaten singly.

— ELLA MARTHA. If you set out to be a business woman, be faithful, prompt, and accurate. Do not ask any concession on account of your sex.

—M. E. B. If you possibly can do so, assume an air of indifference to the man in question. Try to put him out of your heart. Refuse his escort and stand independently so far as he is concerned. From what you tell me, he is culpably selfish and thoughtless, and you will be much happier to think no more about him. In a general way, it is well for young people thrown together in church work to eliminate sentiment, and it is always safe simply to go on in work, without introducing the personal element.

—DOUBTFUL. It is always a very serious matter to make a radical change in the form of one's faith. Your own family will undoubtedly be long unreconciled if you leave the communion in which you have been brought up, and go to a church so different in many of its aspects as the one which now attracts you. Still, the matter is one which you must settle for yourself, by the light God gives you. The young lady, as you describe her, is very lovely and I am not surprised that she has won your heart. As a rule, it is best in the interests of family peace, and for the best development of both wife and husband, that in matters of faith they should be agreed and should both attend the same church.

AN EGYPTIAN MOTHER AND HER LITTLE ONES

In the Land of the Pharaohs

MOTHERHOOD is the same under every sky and in every clime, and the poor Egyptian peasant toiling on with one baby on her shoulder and the other clinging to her hand, loves her chicks just as you do when you go about your work, with the little ones following you at every step. When the babies are under foot and in one's arms, one is sometimes weary; but it is a good kind of weariness, and there is sweetness at the very core of it. We cannot always know where our wandering boy is when he reaches manhood; we have often a heartache for the troubles of our grown-up sons and daughters; but when they are little, we can gather them close in the home nest and take care of them. Hard taxation and deep poverty are in the lot of the Egyptian common people, and the patient, plodding women going about their errands, have furrowed wrinkles very early in their brown-veiled faces, but the mother-love makes them happy, just as it makes you and me.

An International Kindergarten Union

In Brooklyn, on April 18, 19, 20, there were convened in several large buildings, including the Academy of Music, Adelphi College, Plymouth Church and the Pouch Mansion, representative assemblies of intelligent and enthusiastic mothers and teachers, who discussed the welfare of little children. Addresses were made by inspiring and eloquent speakers, papers were read, and there was animated comparison of methods and of views. The kindergarten means a great deal to our little people; it insures them days of interest in their earliest schooling, and develops them morally as well as mentally. The sweet, refined countenance of Mrs. Birney, President of the National Congress of Mothers, was a benediction in these meetings.

Words and Smiles

Cheerfull words and merry smiles,
And the path grows short and smooth;
Blest the word that pain beguiles,
Blest the words the ache that soothe.

BESSIE ... The True Story of a Tenement Waif ... THE "LITTLE MISSIONARY"

A LITTLE maid, who has asked for several summers to be taken to Mont Lawn, has not sent in her usual request.

Bessie's face looked older, but she was only five when she first went to the Home—a tiny, bowed creature, who walked with a limp. She could not play with the other children; she would sit on a grassy hillock and watch with great, wistful eyes the stronger lads and lassies chasing over the lawn, whirling about in ring-a-rosies and swinging 'way up into the green tree tops. "All around the mulberry bush!" the merry group would sing at their happy games; and Bess, to be good company, would croon softly to herself in a wonderfully sweet little voice, beating time with her tiny hands.

When the hour for the children's service in Chapel would ring out, the little maid, all a-quiver with eagerness, would hobble painfully to her place in the line of boys and girls, marching sturdily down the path to the beat of the drum. Some kind teacher would be sure to swing Bess to her shoulder and set her down in "Kindergarten Row," as the front benches, where babies are established, are called. She could not read, of course, one word from the little music sheet of hymns, Psalms and patriotic songs provided for our children; but she would pipe forth happily in her clear, pretty treble, her blue eyes shining and always fixed with loving expectation on the face of the leader of the meeting.

THE LITTLE MISSIONARY'S IMPROMPTU SONG SERVICE

Bess was kept for longer than ten days, and went back to the city much improved, although the poor little back was still lame; and as for the limp, the Home doctor confirmed the sorrowful prophecy of the physicians at the hospital where Bessie had spent several months of her short life; they had said the child would never walk well, and that she might at any time lose altogether the use of her lower limbs.

How Bessie came by her affliction is a tale almost too sad for telling. Her father is an honest, industrious dock laborer. Once he was out of work for a good while, and his wife, sickly, overworked, lost her mind through fear that her family would starve, and—well, she is in the insane asylum now, but she did not go there before Bessie got the fall that lamed her.

The missionary who first presented Bessie as a candidate for the Home says:

"One rainy Sunday, two years ago, the father sent for me at a new place to which they had just moved. As I climbed the steps, flight after flight to the room, I could not help seeing through open doors men drinking and gambling on all the floors. Drunken men were lying on the stairs; I had to step over one to enter Bessie's home, and inside the door the rain struck my face. Bessie, her father and little brother were sitting at a table, and she was singing to them songs she had learned at Mont Lawn—singing loud and clear in a beautiful little voice. I had heard her from way down below:

There is sunshine in my soul to-day.

"Her father looked at me with tears in his eyes. 'I've paid a month's rent and the landlord won't give it back. It's a terrible place for the children, and I away all day. And look, how the rain is pouring in!'

"I will see the landlord," I said.

"I had left the door open, and now, to my dismay, several men lumbered in. The father rose half angrily.

"'We want to hear the little gall sing,' the foremost one said sheepishly.

"Let them stay," I whispered.

"'All right, neighbors,' he said with simple heartiness, 'There ain't much to make you welcome to, but you're welcome all the same. Sing for 'em, Bess.'

"The child wanted no urging; she gave her favorite:

I think when I read that sweet story of old,
When Jesus was here among men,
How He called little children as lambs to His fold,
I should like to have been with Him then.

"When she finished the last stanza:

In that beautiful place He has gone to prepare,
For all who are washed and forgiven;
And many dear children are gathering there,
'For of such is the kingdom of heaven,' there was scarcely a dry eye in the room. Hardly had the last words died away, before the willing entertainer was piping No. 4 of the Mont-Lawn song sheet, 'Yield not to Temptation.' "True, sweet and tender the little voice rang:

Ask the Saviour to help you,
Comfort, strengthen and keep you,
He is willing to aid you,
He will carry you through.

"'Friends,' I said, 'I think we can all ask God, as with one voice, to bless this little one who has cheered us so, and to make each of us more childlike and true. Let us pray.'

"And right there we had a prayer meeting in Bessie's room. People had come in until the place was full, and many were looking in from the hall. Afterwards, as I was going down the steps, several men said: 'Missus, we'll be better men for this night. The Lord spoke to some of us in that little gall's singing.'

"'I don't want her to see some things I had to see coming up these steps,' I said gently. 'Her father is a poor man; he's paid a month's rent and he's too poor to move his family away.'

"'We'll see to it she won't see any more wrong than we can help, ma'am. We'll see to it the best we can.'

"I spoke to the landlord next day and the roof was fixed.

"And now I want to tell you something wonderful: In a year the moral tone of that place was changed for the better. I dar'n't say 'Little Missionary' did it—it seems so much to say that one little lame girl could do so great a thing, but I know there was a change; and has not the Bible said, 'A little child shall lead them,' and 'a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump'? I went to her room once a week and we had a little prayer and song service, neighbors dropping in as on that first night. We had penitents and conversions in that little room. Women all around began to 'mother' Bessie, poor things, as well as they could, and the children thronged about her. She was always glad to tell the pretty Bible stories she had learned at the Home to the eager crowd clustered round her; to show them the pictures in her picture-books; to teach them the songs on her little Mont Lawn song sheet. What pretty choruses issued from that poor little room way up in the dingy tenement! I used to think a bit of heaven was up there. Don't think that that neighborhood became all it ought to be by any means; I only say that it was fifty times better than when 'Little Missionary' first went there.

"Last winter I had a message to come to her, and found the child in a high fever, and the doctor said she had pneumonia. Don't think she was uncomfortably circumstanced now; her father was getting good wages, and had taken two rooms; besides, the child was rich in friends. She was very patient during her sickness, giving as little trouble as possible, always wanting to smile and wishing she could sing. One day, as I sat by her, she whispered:

"'Please—I can't—you sing about "that beautiful place He has gone to prepare."'

"'I wonder,' she whispered again when I had finished, 'if it is like Mont Lawn.'

"When she was too weak to speak I sang it for her. One night, just as I, struggling to hold back my tears, had uttered the line, 'For of such is the kingdom of heaven,' her father said, weeping quietly:

"'O, ma'am, she's gone!'"

"A Stitch in Time Saves Nine."

A broken stitch, like the "little rift within the lute," is the beginning of trouble. "I am tired, not ill." "It will soon pass away." "I don't believe in medicine." These are the broken stitches that lead to serious illness. Nature is wise and in Hood's Sarsaparilla she has furnished the means to take up broken stitches. Why? Because it starts at the root and cleanses the blood.

Bad Blood — "For years I was troubled with my blood, my face was pale, I never felt well. Three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla made me feel better and gave me a healthy color." Mae Cross, 24 Cedar Av., South, Minneapolis, Minn.

Wonderful Remedy for Rheumatism

A physician practising in Olcott, Vt., writes: "Your Tartarlithine has proved a wonderful remedy for rheumatism. I have used a very great quantity of it in the last three or four months, and I have never seen anything like it. I had one patient who had rheumatism all his life, and had taken everything, and nothing completely stopped all the manifestations of the disease like Tartarlithine, one bottle of which completely relieved him.

I had another patient, an old man who travels much on the road peddling, who was lame with rheumatism for five years, and one bottle cured all lameness and he says he has not felt as well in five years as now. These are only the two worst cases of many that I have tried it on."

Tartarlithine is supplied in bottles containing 50 doses at $1.00 and can be obtained of all druggists or post-free by mail. Pamphlets with Testimonials sent FREE.

The Church on Dancing

A READER of this journal in Beverly, W. Va., writes: "I learn by a newspaper report that the New York Conference and the New York East Conference in recent session, were working on a plan to get the General Conference of the M. E. Church to change certain rules in discipline, so as to permit members to dance, play cards, etc. Is this a fact? Will you kindly also inform me concerning the proposition on amendment to the discipline proposed at the last General Conference, in which all members and preachers were requested to abandon their political faith in all political parties for the purpose of establishing and upbuilding temperance and morality?"

There is a good deal of misapprehension in the public mind concerning the matter referred to in the first question. The General Conference of 1872 introduced a paragraph into the book of discipline, a part of which reads as follows:

In cases of neglect of duties of any kind, ... dancing, playing at games of chance, attending theatres, horse races, circuses, dancing parties, or patronizing dancing schools, or taking such other amusements as are obviously of misleading or questionable moral tendency, or disobedience to the order and discipline of the Church—let private reproof be given, etc.

An increasing number of ministers and of the laity are reaching the conviction that this enumeration is neither sensible nor edifying and that it would be better to have that portion of paragraph 248 eliminated and allow the question of amusements to be covered by that passage in the general rules which states that "it is expected of all who continue in our societies, that they shall continue to evidence their desire of salvation by doing no harm, by avoiding evil of every kind, especially that which is most generally practiced, such as . . . . . the taking of such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus."

There is no intention on the part of the Methodist Church to recede from its position of unalterable hostility to the things specified in paragraph 248. There is not the slightest purpose of letting down the bars and therefore permitting or encouraging our people to indulge in these prohibited diversions.

In regard to the second question, no amendment has been made to the discipline requiring members and preachers to abandon their political faiths and to co-operate in the establishment and upholding of any political party committed solely to temperance and morality. The passage to which the correspondent probably refers is in the appendix of the Discipline of 1896, page 349, where it is declared that the time has come when all good citizens should unite for harmonious and aggressive action to the end that all legislation relating to this subject, whether municipal, state or national, should advance steadily and firmly toward the utter extermination of the traffic.

There is another reference (on page 348) to this effect: that the Christian's only proper attitude toward the liquor traffic is that of relentless hostility and that all Methodist Episcopal churches should promote the rescue of our country from the guilt and dishonor which has been brought upon it by a criminal complicity with the liquor traffic. This, it will be seen, is disciplinary and by no means mandatory.

Floating Box of Christian Heralds

Mr. A. M. Taylor, a reader of this journal, sends the following: Mr. E. G. Moore, postmaster at Hampden, Me., received a letter from his son, Lyndon Moore, March 24. The letter was mailed at Cape Nome, December 24, 1899. It traveled 2,614 miles by dog team to Dawson City. In the letter he mentions securing two boxes of wreckage that drifted from a steamer that was stranded somewhere to the windward. He was much pleased to find that one box contained copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which were as eagerly sought for by the boys as if they were gold nuggets. If there is any place on earth that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD does not reach, we have yet to learn it.

The Triangle: A Story for Girls. By Lena Tomlinson. This book was written by one who has dealt with girls, and who has studied and loved them. The preface says: "The characters of this book are living, for they were studied and known in the flesh. The setting of the story is also true to nature. So, while there is fancy in the book, it is not fanciful." Pp. 204. Price, $1. Publishers, A. I. Bradley & Co., Boston, Mass.

Oom Paul's People. Narrative of the British and Boer Troubles in South Africa, with a History of the Boers, the Country and its Institutions. By Howard C. Hillegas. Illustrated with eight photographs and a map of South Africa. The writer, an American, says: "In these pages, an effort has been made to describe the Boers as they impressed themselves upon my mind while I associated with them in the farm-houses, on the veldt, in the drawing-rooms, in the cities, in the chambers of the Government House, and in the Mansion of the Executive." Pp. 308. Price, $1.50. Publishers, D. Appleton & Co., Fifth Avenue, New York City.

EXTRAORDINARY BARGAINS IN PIANOS

WE have hundreds of Upright Pianos returned from renting (by persons moving) which must be disposed of at once as we cannot make room for them in our salesrooms. These pianos include Steinways, Knabes, Fischers, Sterlings and other well known makes. Many of them cannot be distinguished from new, yet all are offered at an enormous discount from prices when new. Uprights as low as $100. Very easy terms of payment to reliable persons. It would probably cost about $5 for freight to have one of these pianos shipped to you. Write at once for complete list and full particulars. You can make a great saving by securing one of these instruments. Every piano warranted exactly as represented.

MEAT OR CEREALS.

A Question of Interest to All Careful Persons.

The arguments on food are interesting. Many persons adopt a vegetarian diet on the ground that they do not like to feel that life has been taken to feed them, nor do they fancy the thought of eating dead meat.

On the other hand, too great consumption of partly cooked, starchy oats and wheat, or bread, pastry, etc., produces serious bowel troubles, because the bowel digestive organs (where starch should be digested) are overtaxed, and the food ferments, producing gas, and microbes generate in the decayed food, frequently bringing on peritonitis and appendicitis.

Starchy food is absolutely essential to the human body. Its best form is shown in the food "Grape-Nuts," where the starch is changed into grape sugar during the process of its manufacture. In this way, the required food is presented to the system in a pre-digested form and is immediately made into blood and tissue, without taxing the digestive organs.

A remarkable result in nourishment is gained; the person using Grape-Nuts gains quickly in physical and mental strength. Why in mental? Because the food contains delicate particles of Phosphate of Potash obtained from the grains. This unites with the albumen of all food, and the combination is what nature uses to rebuild worn out cells in the brain. This is a scientific fact that can be easily proven by ten days' use of Grape-Nuts. Never eat beyond three or four heaping teaspoonfuls at a meal.

A Noble Author Dead

The Duke of Argyll, Statesman, Scientist and Philosopher

IN the death of George Douglas Campbell, Duke of Argyll, and one of the leading peers of Great Britain, which occurred on April 14, there passed away one whose remarkable qualities as a statesman, scientist and philosopher made a distinct impression upon the times in which he lived. He was born in 1823, and his long career of distinction and influence showed him to have been one of the most energetic and versatile members of the British peerage. An independent Liberal in politics, he was a vigorous debater and formidable either as an ally or an opponent. He held important portfolios during several Ministries, serving under the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Palmerston and Mr. Gladstone.

It is not, however, with his political career that the world concerns itself. Long before his accession to the dukedom he had become known as a fluent, learned and powerful writer, and a public speaker as polished in style as he was rich in thought. He took an active part in the controversy over the subject of patronage in the Presbyterian church of Scotland. A pamphlet on the subject from his pen attracted wide attention. From the time of its publication to the end of his career he was an authority in ecclesiastical matters and contributed freely to all public discussions concerning them. In 1851 he was elected Chancellor of the University of St. Andrews. He showed that he had a comprehensive grasp of all such questions. He contributed freely to the press, and his letters were models of style, and evinced a remarkable mastery of minute and varied information. In geology, he was an acknowledged authority. Among his more important publications may be enumerated The Reign of Law, which has passed through many editions; Primeval Man, History and Antiquities of Iona, The Eastern Question, The Unity of Nature, An Economic History of Scotland, and the Philosophy of Belief, published so recently as 1896.

The death of the Duke makes his son (the Marquis of Lorne) his successor, and the latter's wife (the Princess Louise, fourth daughter of Queen Victoria) becomes Duchess of Argyll.

Few public men have been noted for more marked eccentricity of character than "the great Scotch Duke," as he was called. In the eyes of the simple highland population, accustomed for long generations to venerate the head of a great house or clan, "Maccallum More" (the clan's name for its chief), was greatness personified. It is related that when the news came to Argyllshire of the approaching wedding of the Marquis of Lorne and a royal princess, the clansmen declared to a man that "it's a proud woman Queen Victoria should be, having Maccallum More's son for her son-in-law." The Duke himself used to tell with special satisfaction of an adventure that befell him during a journey by rail in England. He usually traveled second-class, always dressed very plainly, and his personal appearance was not calculated to strike the beholder with awe. His fellow-traveler was the Duke of Northumberland, a peer of most autocratic manners. Just as they were starting a third man entered. He was an affable tradesman or shopkeeper, and at once launched into conversation, encouraged probably by Argyll's plain appearance. By-and-by the English nobleman reached his station, and alighted. The shopkeeper remarked to Argyll that "that was a queer fellow. Wonder who he is." "He is the Duke of Northumberland," was Argyll's quiet reply. "Ye don't mean it!" exclaimed his companion. "Well! To think that one of the highest peers in England should talk to common chaps like you and me!"

Another incident, which Argyll frequently related, was about a visit he once paid to Brentano's bookstore in New York. He inquired of one of the salesmen whether he had a copy of The Reign of Law. "Oh, yes," said the shopkeeper, "we have that and several others by the same writer." "Indeed!" was the Duke's sole reply. "Yes," innocently continued the salesman, "and he's as dry as dust—frightfully dry—but he's a great writer and a powerful man in an argument. Some of the biggest among them are afraid of him; he has such a habit of crushing an opponent down with facts and then walking over him with mailed boots."

A Church that Holds No Fairs

SOME weeks ago, the writer was very much interested in reading the account in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of the church in one of the South-Central States that does not hold fairs, festivals, etc., and I thought other readers might be interested to learn of another church that is similar in that respect. The First Presbyterian Church, at Flanders, N. J., occupies a unique place in that it is entirely free of debt, and that it holds no socials, suppers, fairs or any kind of entertainment whatsoever for the purpose of raising money for its own expenses or benevolences, either as a church or through any of its organizations. Of the latter it has a "Woman's Missionary Society," "Girls' Mission Band," and both Senior and Junior Societies of Christian Endeavor. This church was organized in 1852, and has enjoyed many seasons of spiritual refreshing. It has a membership of ninety-six. Since the beginning of the present pastorate, under the Rev. William T. Pannell, formerly pastor of the First Congregational Church at Morristown, N. J., November 1, 1898, the church has more closely followed along the line of the early church and dispensed wholly with entertainments for securing financial help.

The result has been wonderful and yet only the fulfilling of the promises of God, and there is increased spirituality. Financially the church enjoys a very encouraging prosperity. During the year that closed Apr. 15, more than $1,428 have been raised, besides about $100 for benevolences. When the Rev. Mr. Pannell went to Flanders there was a debt on the church of about $475. By the following April this had been diminished somewhat. Last summer the church was renovated and repaired and of the $275.95 needed to meet the expense for the same, $209 were raised by subscription. On February 7 there was still an indebtedness of about $433, and pastor and people became earnest in the desire to see it cancelled. On Easter morning the announcement was made at the church service that the church was entirely free of debt. The note that had represented the last of the debt now bears the following endorsement, "This note being paid, we as a church are out of debt, clear and clean in the sight of God and man, an honor to the true building up of the kingdom of our Master." It is signed by the pastor and put on file with the accounts of the treasurer. The church members paid this indebtedness with the exception of $43, and of this amount $23 was given by members of the congregation. The joys of the Easter-tide were accentuated in the hearts of the church by the knowledge that no longer debt harassed. The pretty edifice was profusely decorated with potted plants and cut flowers. —H. H.

Heathen Womanhood

Her Degradation, Her Seclusion and Her Influence for Evil—The Necessity for Her Redemption

ONE of the most interesting features of the Ecumenical Conference was the reading by Mrs. Cook, the well-known missionary, of a message to the conference from Mrs. Bishop, describing the appalling degradation of woman in pagan lands. Never was the contrast between woman's position in such countries and those in which Christ is acknowledged more strikingly exemplified than when cultured Christian women, who had lived and worked among their benighted sisters of the Orient, stood up before that great audience in Carnegie Hall voicing the wrongs of these voiceless ones and calling for their complete redemption. Mrs. Cook prefaced Mrs. Bishop's paper by calling attention to the fact that the great author and traveler had been prejudiced against foreign missions until observations made during her journeyings demonstrated their tremendous value. In the paper read, Mrs. Bishop says of the impressions produced on her by eight years of intimate contact with the peoples of Japan, Korea, China, Tibet, the Malay States, India, Persia and Turkey:

"Lying is universal, and no shame attends the discovered falsehood. There are polygamy and polyandry with their infinite degradation. There is no truth and no trust between man and man, and no man trusts any woman.

"The distinction between right and wrong is usually lost, and conscience is deposed and destroyed. The corrupt tree of the dead and degenerate faiths of Asia brings forth corupt fruit from the Black to the Yellow Sea, and from Siberian snows to the equator. The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint, and for the grievous hurt there is no balm in Gilead and no Physician there.

"Let us bear in mind that to-day, nineteen centuries after the birth of our Lord, one thousand and fifty millions of our race are unchristianized, and eight hundred millions have never even heard his name. Let us also steadily bear in mind the fact that, though during this century nearly 4,000,000 persons won by missionary effort have been baptized into the Christian Church, there are now over 100,000,000 more heathen and Moslems in the world than when the century began. We must face the truth. Much as we congratulate ourselves, missionary effort has but touched the fringe of the darkness of this world; the Io Paeans of victory are not for us to sing.

"Of the Christless population of the world over 500,000,000 are women. We are chiefly concerned with them to-night. Throughout Asia the natural distrust of women by men and of the degrading views held concerning women in seclusion behind high walls, in separate houses, known to us as the harem, the zenana and the anderun, is deplorable. I have seen much of the inmates of all, owing to the detentions in traveling which have made me frequently their unwilling guest, and have unveiled for me the mysteries of their secluded lives. Such contact has banished from my mind, so far as Asiatic countries are concerned, all belief in purity in women and innocence in childhood. We know what Christianity has done for us. We realize it more or less fully to-night as we meet to discuss the important and unfettered work of women. We know, in part, what Islamism and heathenism have done for our sisters. I have been a storm or peril-bound guest in more than fifty women's houses, including the women's tents of the large nomadic population of Persia. In all the arrangements, so far as means allow, are the same. The women's rooms are built around a yard, and have no windows to the front; a room, near the entrance, is tenanted by eunuchs, or by an old woman who acts as custodian or spy in the husband's interests. Such secluded women can never stir outside except in rigidly closed chairs by day, or in some cities on foot at night, properly attended, along streets from which men are excluded. In many countries it is a crime or a folly to teach women to read; in some, a lady loses caste by employing her fingers, even in embroidery. They know nothing. They have no ideals. Dress, personal adornment and subjects connected with their sex are their sole interests. They are regarded as possessing neither soul nor immortality; except as mothers of sons they are absolutely despised and are spoken of in China as 'the mean ones within the gate.' With dwarfed and childish ignorance is combined a precocity on a gigantic scale in the evil passions of adults—hatred, envy, jealousy, sensuality, greed and malignity. The system of polygamy, the facility for divorce and the dread of it, the fiendish hate, the vacuity and apathy, and the tortures inflicted by the ignorance of the native female doctors specially at the time of 'the great pain and peril of childbirth,' produce a condition which makes a piteous appeal to every woman here.

"In a rich man's harem there are women of all ages and colors, the favorites and other legitimate wives; concubines, who have recognized but very slender rights; discarded wives who have been favorites in their day and who have passed into practical slavery to their successors; numbers of domestics, slaves and old women; daughter-in-law and child or girl widows, whose lot is deplorable, and many others. I have seen as many as 200 in one house, a great crowd, privacy being unknown, grossly ignorant, with intolerable curiosity, forcing on a stranger abominable or frivolous questions, then relapsing into apathy, but rarely broken except by outbreaks of hate and the results of successful intrigue. It may be said that there are worse evils than apathy. There are worse evils and they prevail to a great extent in upper-class houses.

"On more than fifty occasions I have been asked by women for drugs which would kill the reigning favorite, or her boy, or make her ugly or odious. In the house of the Turkish Governor of an important vilayet where I was stormbound for a week, the favorite wife was ill, and the husband besought me to stay in her room lest some of the other women would make away with her. My presence was no restraint on the scenes of fiendishness which were enacted. Scandal, intrigue, fierce and cruel jealousies, counting jewels, painting the face, staining the hair, quarrels, eating to excess, getting rid of time by sleeping, listening to impure stories by professional reciters, and watching small dramas, usually of immoral character, played by slaves, occupy the unbounded leisure of Eastern upper-class women.

"Yet these illiterate, ignorant women, steeped in superstition, despised as they are in theory, wield an enormous influence, and that against Christianity. They bring up their children in the superstitions and customs which enslave themselves. They make marriages for their sons and rule their daughters-in-law. They have a genius for intrigue, and many a man in the confidence of a ruler or another loses his position owing to their intrigues. They conserve idolatries and keep fetich and demon worship alive in their homes. They drag the man back to heathen customs, and their influence accounts, perhaps, for the larger number of lapses from Christianity. It is impossible to raise the men of the East unless the women are raised, and real converts among Asiatic women, especially among the Chinese, make admirable Christians.

"But owing to social customs, mission work among Eastern women can only be done by women. The medical woman finds ready access into their houses; for the non-medical woman the entrance into such a mixed crowd as I have described is a matter of difficulty, and requires not only the love of our sisters for Christ's sake, but for their own, much, very much of what has been well named 'the enthusiasm of humanity.'"

The Founder of the "Shut-ins"

Mrs. Jennie M. Drinkwater Conklin, the benefactor of many invalids, passed to her home above on Saturday, April 28. Mrs. Conklin is widely known as the founder of the "Shut-in" Society, a bureau of correspondence, of spiritual and often of material help for invalids, and also as a writer for religious journals and as an author of popular books for girls, among which may be mentioned Tessa Wadsworth's Discipline, Miss Prudence and Fifteen. She was the widow of the Rev. Nathaniel Conklin, for many years pastor of the Presbyterian Church of New Vernon, N. J.

CALIFORNIA LADIES
Experience with Drink.

"While using Mocha and Java coffee, I was finally thrown into a serious case of nervous prostration, with heart trouble and dizzy headaches. My husband also had most serious stomach trouble for years. We finally gave up coffee and began the use of Postum. Both husband and myself have now been perfectly well for three years.

"Mrs C. R. Holmes of 1946 Adair St., and Mrs. Ade Leonard, 234 Twenty-seventh St., Los Angeles, both tried Postum Food Coffee but did not boil it fifteen minutes, according to directions, and therefore did not like it. I made a cup for each of them the right way and now they use it daily and like it very much.

"Mrs. Ida Sherman of 6113 Wentworth Ave., Chicago, had been quite ill for years with dyspepsia and nervousness and I urged her to leave off coffee and take Postum Food Coffee. She now writes me that she is entirely well.

"Mrs. Julia Moore of Riverside, Cal., and also Mrs. Lily Staldn of Riverside, were both ill for some years with heart trouble. I told them of my experience with coffee and induced them to drop it and take up Postum Food Coffee. Mrs. Moore was restored to health and in three months after making the change Mrs. Staldn wrote that she had been relieved more from leaving off the coffee and using Postum than she had obtained from any medicines.

"I am naturally a strong advocate of Postum." Ina Maud Magee, 122 N. Johnson St., E. Los Angeles, California.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggests sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

An offer made by one of the largest corset concerns in the United States.

The Coronet Corset Company's plant is the most improved and complete in existence. It turns out the finest and richest class of goods made in the world. sold by dealers at $1.50 to $5.00 (the latter figure when made to order). Our Department of Special Orders has operated for years in fitting special shapes at special prices for dealers under this same system of measurement. Measuring for a Corset is simple; the difficulty is to make up a corset and to mould it in its sinews and stays according to the individual measures as taken.

SEE NUMBERS IN CUT ABOVE: 1, Bust Measure; 2, Waist Measure; 3, Hip Measure; 4, Under Arm to waist line; 5, From waist line to bottom line of present corset; or higher or lower than same, if desired.

This corset will be made and forwarded to you upon the receipt of $1.00. Should you require a size in waist measure above 30, or a black lined corset, add 50 cents to your remittance. We protect you absolutely, and guarantee complete pleased satisfaction by a second fitting, if necessary.

We make this remarkable offer for a purpose—not for your dollar—we do it to bring the Flexibone right home to you in a more direct way than any ordinary advertising could do and to show you why a Flexibone at $1.50 is worth three of any ordinary $1 corset sold in stores.

It is the chance of your lifetime to get a corset that is a fitted, moulded exquisite garment—at cost to make. Only one made for any one person. Future orders and inquiries will all be referred to dealers.

Right now and direct from factory is the only way you can obtain a Flexibone Advertising Special—made and moulded to order—for $1. Address

The National Congress of Mothers

A Great Gathering in Des Moines—The Interests of Parents and Children—Progress of Mother-Work

THE fourth National Congress of Mothers will be held at Des Moines, Iowa, May 23-28. Heretofore its sessions have been in Washington, D. C., but the women of the West and Middle West have shown such enthusiastic and practical interest in the movement represented by this great organization, that their sisterhood of other sections conceded this reunion to Des Moines. As one evidence of the progression west of the Mississippi of the spirit which seeks in educational and co-operative measures the enlightenment of parenthood, the benefit of childhood and the consequent elevation of the race, it may be mentioned that in Iowa alone new Mother Clubs have been formed in over eighty counties during the past year; and the advance in other States has been proportionately rapid. The movement is not confined to cities and towns by any means. In country villages and neighborhoods all over our land, good mothers are banding themselves together and meeting quietly in each other's homes, or in their little church buildings, to talk over the problems which confront them in raising their children aright, and to help each other in various other ways. Almost every city church, mission and social settlement has its Mothers' Club or Mothers' Meeting, some many years older than the Mothers' Congress, one principal object of which is to unite them all into one great order, which shall be able to speak in the interests of childhood and future citizenship with authority in many great matters of social and educational law.

Des Moines shows no lack of appreciation of the honor conferred upon her as the place of convention. The Congress will be formally welcomed by Governor Shaw and the mayor of the city, and later the capitol building will be thrown open by the Governor and his wife for a grand reception to the delegates. The Woman's Club of Des Moines has undertaken to entertain a thousand delegates free of charge, and many handsome homes will be at the service of the visitors, including that of Mrs. Isaac Lea Hillis, the State Regent, to whose untiring efforts the growth of the order in Iowa and the selection of Des Moines for the convention is largely due. The Presidents of the State University, of the State W. C. T. U., of the Iowa Child Study Association, of the State Federation of Woman's Clubs; the Superintendent of Public Instruction, and others equally prominent are lending their energies to make this gathering one of profound interest and large and lasting influence. All associations of philanthropic, reformatory and educational character have been invited to affiliate; and church, missionary and kindergarten workers are lending it their hearty co-operation. The public schools of the State will probably be closed during Congress week, in order that teachers may take part in the conference.

Thousands of persons from Iowa alone will be in attendance, and delegates will come from the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, from the North and South, and from every State of the great Middle West, among them many notable men and women. The meetings, three sessions daily, will be held in Des Moines' beautiful new auditorium; and the various speakers on the programme are men and women of national and international note, each a specialist and an authority in his or her particular department of child training. Besides these, the dear old-fashioned mother will be in evidence to give the benefit of her own practical experience and to encourage new ideas that appeal to her; and one of the most interesting features will be reports of delegates from all the States, telling the work their clubs have accomplished during the past year. Affiliated Mothers' Clubs in Germany, France, Japan, India and other foreign countries will be heard from. In this country, fresh-air work, prison reform, improved factory regulations, enlarged school facilities and many other phases of social betterment have received decided impetus from Mothers' Clubs; public opinion in serious affairs of morals and State has been moulded, one instance of which our readers readily recall in remembering the fact that the Mothers' Congress lent its influence effectively to the movement instituted by this paper against the seating of the Mormon Congressman-elect, B. H. Roberts. We give pictures of Mrs. Theodore H. Birney, founder and President of the Congress, and of several Des Moines ladies who have been very prominent in furthering the interests of the mother-work in Iowa. Mrs. Hillis is State organizer as well as Regent. Mrs. Walker is president of the Des Moines Woman's Club and Mrs. Clapp chairman of the hospitality committee.

AN APPEAL FOR INDIA

FAR beyond the deep blue ocean
Lies a fair and sunny land,
Where starvation sits as despot,
Ruling with an iron hand.

Famished men are dying, dying;
Women weep and ask for bread;
Helpless children crying, crying,
Pleading, begging to be fed.

Listen now, and we can hear them
As their cry sweeps o'er the sea!
Calling on their gods to aid them
Low they blindly bow the knee.

Can we calmly view their anguish,
Shall we hear their calls in vain,
If we let fair India languish,
On Christ's name 'twill cast a stain.

God has given us abundance,
Shall we not our plenty share,
When we call to our remembrance,
"One another's burdens bear"?

Send them bread and send the Gospel,
Let the two go hand in hand,
Bringing joy and hope and gladness
To that famine-stricken land.

Marietta, O. MRS. L. J. SHOEMAKER.

The Abigail Kindergarten

With an income of less than $5,000 last year, the Abigail Free School and Kindergarten, 104 Sullivan street, New York, cared for an average of nearly 300 children a day. One-third of the number were given a meal a day. The kindergarten, sewing school and Sunday School have been maintained with vigor. A brief annual report notes the fact that about 200 of the poor children were received at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home for ten days each last summer. During the ten years' existence of the school thousands of children have passed through its hands. Mr. C. B. Devare is the secretary and superintendent.

How many sufferers from stomach troubles are longing praying for just such relief as has come to Mrs. Amelia Allen, of Turin, Lewis Co., N. Y. For over five years she suffered all the miseries attendant upon this disease, sought vainly in all directions for relief, employed the most skilled physicians, but they failed her, and she had despaired of help when through a friend she learned of the medicine that saved her.

Her remarkable story is here given in her own words:

"For five and a half years I was afflicted with nervous dyspepsia, was compelled to diet myself rigidly and could scarcely keep anything on my stomach. Palpitation of the heart set in and I soon became so thin and wasted that I was a mere shadow. I was treated by all the leading physicians in this section of the state, but without permanent benefit. I was so discouraged that I had no faith in any doctor or medicine.

"When a friend, Mrs. George Mott, recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, I had no idea of receiving any benefit from them. I tried them, however, and to-day I am well, have regained my weight, and am strong and vigorous. I began to see the good effects of the pills while I was taking the first box. Altogether I took them about a year and a half and was entirely relieved. I cannot say too much in praise of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

(Signed) Mrs. Amelia Allen.

Old and Young Help India

Noble Self-denying Work on All Sides to Rescue the Perishing Millions—Children in the Movement

LETTERS, expressive of sympathy for India and containing contributions to the Famine Relief Fund, are received by every mail in steadily increasing numbers. All classes and denominations are represented, showing that the broad humanity of the work is universally recognized. As in previous weeks, there is a goodly showing of young people among the contributors.

THE "HOLY BAND"

Many business firms are also represented. Mr. F. M. Prentice, of Prentice & Johnson, wholesale grocers, Auburn, N. Y., forwards $450, being the contribution of the First Presbyterian Church of that city, Rev. W. H. Hubbard, pastor. Mr. W. H. Meaker, treasurer of the Cayuga County Savings Bank of Auburn, N. Y., sends $142.47, the proceeds of a "choir fund" raised by the choir of the Central Presbyterian Church of that city, and $6 as the offering of the primary department of the Sunday School.

HE HELPED INDIA

Rev. J. F. Irwin, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Medicine Lodge, Kan., sends $80, collected for the Fund. The citizens of Rochester, Wis., through Mr. A. J. Russell, miller, send $50 as their united gift.

Five young ladies of Corydon, Ky.: Misses Gibson, Harness, Vivian, Miller and Chandler, gave prohibition recitations, a silver medal being awarded to the most successful speaker, Miss Marie Norris; and the H. S. Mandolin Club furnished the music. The entertainment netted $9.50 for the famine sufferers.

From Newgrove, Minn., Mr. Wm. Stegner writes, enclosing $108.20, the Easter offering of the young people's meeting. He explains: "We give this offering to God for starving India and we send our prayers with our gift. Use it as you think best to feed the hungry." The list of donors contains fifty-five names.

A LITTLE HELPER

Mrs. Scott M. Ladd, Sheldon, Ia., sends $52.17, raised by the good people of Boyden at a union mass meeting, at which she made an appeal for India. Mr. Alfred L. Kiest, clerk of Hope Union Church, Shermerville, Ill., sends $111.46, contributed jointly by the Sabbath School, the Junior Endeavorers and the church, whose congregation is composed of workingmen.

From Isaac Augumslaager, Savannah, N. Y., comes a contribution of two cents, "for a day's supporting of one life." The sender, who is a Hebrew, writes: "Rebecca told me to send it."

SHE SAVED HER PENNIES

The good people of Moorefield, Ont., and vicinity, send $72, through M. A. Malcolmson, secretary, with best wishes for the work.

From Neffsville, Pa., comes $50.75, the joint offering of nearly thirty persons, through Mr. J. F. Hess. This charitably disposed community, of late years has aided many good causes.

Pastor C. D. Trumbull, of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, Morning Sun, Ia., forwards $83, the united gifts of his own church ($50.20), the M. E. Church ($16.85), the M. E. Church of Marsh, Ia. ($13.95) and two residents of Morning Sun ($2).

The Twelfth St. Baptist Sunday School of Allentown, Pa., sends $50, "with our prayers that it may be the means of saving some few from terrible distress and death."

J. S. King & Co., wholesale grocers, Athens, Ga., forward $100, "given in the spirit of love for Christ" by a few friends in the store and near neighbors, largely at the suggestion of Mr. W. H. Dean.

The good people of Casselman, and South Indian, Ont., 138 in number, have collected $72.75 for the Fund.

"An Easter offering" from the generous residents of Beacom, Groveton, McKees Rocks, Coraopolis and Moon Run, Pa., ($53.75) is forwarded by Rev. D. F. Dickson, pastor of Forest Grove Church, Beacom, Pa.

Rev. J. C. Galloway, of Gastonia, N. C., sends $51.25, the collection taken at a union meeting of the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Associate Reformed Presbyterian churches of that town.

The B. Y. P. U. of Sleepyeye, Minn., took up the subject of the India famine at a recent prayer-meeting. On the next Sunday evening, twenty members, with the pastor's consent, conducted the services in church, and gave a most effective programme, closing with a short, earnest plea for India. The result was a contribution of $11.60.

Mr. James J. Eaglestone, Victoria, B. C., Canada, in a letter to the Sunday School Times, Philadelphia, relates how the little Sunday School of eighty children of St. Columba's Church gave an entertainment for the India Fund, raising $16.

Power of a Temperate Life*

How a Powerful and Insidious Enemy of Social and Individual Well-being May be Overcome

WHAT connection there is between the mind and the body has never been fully discovered, but that there is a very close and intimate connection experience clearly proves. A materialist would say that the presence of the brain explains the connection; but indulgence in liquor frequently affects a part of our nature which we do not usually associate with the brain. This is the moral, as distinct from the intellectual. A man under the influence of liquor is weaker morally than he is in his normal condition. He will do things, when he is excited by liquor, which he would not do when he is sober. Why it should be that what a man takes into his stomach should affect his moral conduct, we do not know, but experience proves that it does. Even a man who does not drink to excess is not quite the same man after indulging in intoxicants that he is before. He is apt to be garrulous, or quarrelsome, or egotistical according to the natural tone of his mind, but that he is affected is obvious to anyone who knows him in both conditions. Liquor changes the normal tone and increases the power of the lower, or animal, proclivities. It dethrones the higher powers which ought to control human nature and produces a moral anarchy in which the lower passions and impulses attain command.

The experiment on the four young men mentioned in the passage of Scripture associated with the topic, appears to have been tested by mental and physical results only. Personal appearance and mental development were the tests applied. These we can understand, because physicians have explained how the tissues of the body are affected by intoxicants and we have abundant opportunities of noticing how the mental processes are disturbed by the indulgence in liquor. Thus we realize that physically, mentally and morally the habit of indulgence produces deterioration. That fact being known, the habit becomes a mystery. Why do men acquire it? And why having acquired it and learned its injurious effects, do they continue to indulge it? Doubtless some do it for the mere gratification of the taste. Others do it for the sake of the impetus which it temporarily imparts to the spirits and the energy. A few possibly do it through hereditary taint, but these are a smaller number than is generally supposed. For one reason or another, a very large proportion of the people and especially the Anglo Saxon people do indulge in the habit and there is grave reason to fear that the number is increasing. This is a serious matter because it threatens the deterioration of the race and calls for intelligent effort to eradicate it.

One of the strongest forces that can be enlisted in the fight against this enemy is the influence of example. The power of a temperate life is more potent than is generally realized. It operates on the children, and they, after all, are the hope of the future. It is on them that the future of our race and country depends. If we could be sure that every child now in our schools was being trained up to abhor intoxicating liquor, we could afford to indulge high hope of success in this struggle against intemperance. We might or might not succeed in reforming the mature drunkard, but we would feel that the death knell of the enemy had been rung. Now there is no force that will affect the child like the force of example. If those whom he loves and reverences were to quit altogether the use of liquor, the probabilities of his growing up to sober manhood would be immensely increased. But if he can say, "My father drank his glass of wine, or my teacher, or my minister, or my employer used liquor and was not hurt by it," the child may grow up to use it, too, and his power of self-control may not be so strong as that of those whom he imitates. If he saw no example of the use of liquor but that of the drunkard, he would be little likely to follow it. The power of a temperate life operates also on the victim of drunkenness. He feels that in abstaining he takes upon himself the stigma of moral weakness. But if he becomes one of a respectable company of abstainers, abstinence is easier for him. When men of eminence and strong moral character voluntarily abstain, there is no stigma on the drunkard who does so too, and so he may be saved by the power of a temperate life.

Moody's Work Goes On

The Summer School at Northfield to Open Shortly with a Grand Spiritual Programme

WHILE the wise counsel and leadership of the late Dwight L. Moody are greatly missed, yet arrangements are being carefully and prayerfully made not only for the usual summer programme, but to carry out plans which Mr. Moody had himself made. Among these may be especially mentioned the May and September Conferences at the Bible Institute, Chicago, which will be held in addition to the regular Summer Course directed by Rev. James M. Gray, D.D., of Boston, and the Summer Session at Mt. Hermon School.

The Northfield Seminary will hold its Commencement Exercises for this year from June 9 to 14, with sermon to the graduating class by Rev. C. I. Scofield, D.D., of Northfield, and address by Rev. Wilton Merle Smith, D.D., of New York. A large number of the former students of the Seminary are expected at this time.

The series of Northfield Conferences will commence with the World's Student Conference, June 29 to July 8. Among the speakers expected at this Conference, are: Bishop J. H. Vincent, Kansas City; Dr. W. R. Richards of Plainfield, N. J.; Rev. R. A. Torrey, Chicago; President J. G. Schurman of Cornell University; Dr. C. E. Jefferson and Mr. Robt. E. Speer of New York. Mr. John R. Mott will preside. The Young Woman's Christian Association Conference assembles July 13 and continues until the 23d. Among the speakers will be: Rev. C. I. Scofield, D.D., Northfield, and Mr. Robt. E. Speer, New York. Miss Effie K. Price being the leader.

These two notable Conferences are gaining yearly a place of more highly recognized importance as factors in the development of Christian work among the students. The usual conduct of these meetings will be observed this year.

The General Conference for Christian Workers will hold its eighteenth gathering August 2 to 20. New as well as familiar faces will be seen upon its platform this year. Beside a number of speakers from our own country, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan and probably also Rev. F. B. Meyer will be present from abroad. Conferences on Young People's and Sunday School work will be an added feature of this season, and in the absence of a large C. E. Convention in this country, it is believed will meet the needs of very many young people who cannot attend the London meeting.

The special Bible lectures, which in former years have been such a great source of blessing to many in the quiet days between the Conferences, will again be given from about July 25 to August 1, and from August 20 to September 1.

Camp Northfield will again be opened from June to September at minimum expense, and offers an attractive, informal and distinctively Christian vacation-place to young men. Reduced rates on nearly all railroads will make it possible for a large number to attend these Conferences.

She Likes to Hear About Tommy

Dear Editor.—I am a little girl of eight. In my visits to Grandmamma I have become very much interested in looking over "Aunt Samantha." I always look out for Tommy's picture. Please tell her to say more about Tommy. My own papa has just come from the Philippines and has told me lots about things there and brought me many pictures. I wonder if Tommy liked the monkeys.

YOUR VACATION IN COLORADO

Burlington Route

DO you quite realize that in all the world there is no scenery more gorgeous, more majestic and awe-inspiring than that of Colorado?

Couple this with these facts—
That the climate of Colorado is simply delightful.
That the dry, pure air is wonderfully healthful and invigorating; and that the hotels are of unusual excellence.
Then consider the question of spending your vacation there this summer.

Colorado is not far away. The Burlington Route runs "one night on the road" trains from both Chicago and St. Louis to Denver, and they are luxuriously furnished. Sumptuous library smoking cars and dining cars à la carte make the trip seem very short. Then during the summer months tourist tickets are sold at greatly reduced rates, so the expense is not great.

Let me send you maps, time tables, ticket rates; and if you want to know more about the country enclose six cents in postage for our book on Colorado. It is a beautiful work, of literary excellence and profusely illustrated.

OUR FAMINE SHIP ON THE OCEAN

The "Quito," Loaded with 200,000 Bushels of Grain, Christian America's Gift to Starving India

ONCE more the readers and conductors of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have been associated in the work of a great international benevolence, which has culminated in the sending of a Famine Relief ship to the starving multitudes in a distant land. Together they sent cargoes of food to Russia, to Cuba, and to India—the last-mentioned during the severe famine of 1897; and now, at the height of the most terrible famine of modern times, they have sent the good steamship Quito, with the largest cargo ever carried by any vessel, bound on an errand of mercy. Her 5,000 tons of choice two-year-old American corn go to Bombay, where Dr. Klopsch will await the relief steamer's arrival and where, in conjunction with the Inter-denominational Missionary Committee, he will personally supervise its distribution, until the very last of the 200,000 bushels is sent out to the remotest centre of suffering.

This magnificent gift, which goes over the ocean wafted by prayer and blessing, represents the united offerings of every Christian denomination in the land—Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists, Lutherans, Reformed Church, Disciples of Christ, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Friends, Mennonites, Evangelicals and Moravians. There is probably not a church organization or society in the land which has not shared in the life-saving work. Little village communities and agricultural groups in the great corn-growing States have lovingly loaded up cars with corn and sent them on to swell the relief ship's cargo. It would not have been difficult to fill the largest steamer that ever floated, so generous was the sympathy, so noble the response. The Kansas State India Relief Committee is represented by 20,000 bushels; the Mennonites by 8,000 bushels, and the great host of good people belonging to all sects and denominations, make up the grand total of 200,000 bushels. It will afford all who have taken an active part in the benevolent enterprise additional satisfaction to know that their gift will reach Bombay at the very time when most needed, as our missionary letters assure us.

In the gathering of this great cargo it has been demonstrated that the spirit of Christian generosity is widespread in America. Railroads, business firms and corporations in many quarters have combined to make the labor easier. The Postal Telegraph Cable Co. has franked all fund messages; the Pennsylvania, New York Central, Lake Shore, Delaware, Lackawanna & Western and West Shore railroads have been most liberal in their rebates; the elevator companies have also rebated charges; the Truesdell & McCord Co., grain merchants, have given services at cost of actual outlays. Messrs. Johnson & Higgins, in insuring the cargo, contributed their commission to the Famine Fund. All hearts seemed to be generously opened, and all minds intent on forwarding the life-saving work and speeding the departure of the famine-ship.

As she lay at her dock at the West Central Pier, Brooklyn, while loading, the Quito was visited by thousands of interested persons from the city and suburbs. She is a fine-looking vessel, of iron throughout. Her commander, Capt. Baird, is a native of Scotland and a navigator of wide experience. Before any cargo was taken aboard, the vessel was inspected by Lieut.-Commander Nickels and Paymaster Jackson of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and accepted in behalf of the United States Government. Her cargo of corn was put aboard ship from the elevator and put in sacks between decks. Every available foot of cargo space is utilized.

In addition to the corn, a quantity of seeds suitable for sowing in India, were placed on board, these being the gifts of nurserymen and seedsmen in different States. The entire cargo is consigned to Dr. Klopsch, who is now in Bombay awaiting its arrival. It goes via the Suez Canal and Red Sea, and as ample precautions have been taken, both in the preparation and packing of the corn, it is confidently believed that it will arrive at its destination in prime condition.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD RELIEF SHIP "QUITO" AND HER COMMANDER

SHE IS OF 5,000 TONS BURTHEN, AND WAS CHARTERED BY OUR GOVERNMENT EXPRESSLY TO CONVEY THE CORN CONTRIBUTED BY OUR READERS TO BOMBAY

While the great army of Christian men and women who have made common cause with this journal in the work of saving life in India, have given their prayers, their gifts and their influence without even thought or desire of reward, and least of all, without seeking to win the applause of men, nevertheless it will interest them to know how those who stand high in the councils of other nations than ours regard their generous course. Our own Congress stamped the work with the hall-mark of official approbation by chartering the Quito to carry the gift of food to India, and the Governors of a score or more States are at this moment earnestly laboring in behalf of the Fund. In England, among the highest officials, the interest is hardly less keen. In the letters of introduction kindly furnished to Dr. Klopsch by Lord George Hamilton, Secretary of State for India, the writer refers in terms of the warmest approval to the benevolent mission of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its proprietor. Writing to Lord Northcote, the Governor of Bombay Presidency, he says:

"He (Dr. Klopsch) is much exercised by the misery caused by the famine, and has and is collecting large sums for its relief. He is anxious to be of real use. His zeal is that of a Christian missionary, and I am certain you will find him a man worthy of your advice and confidence."

He writes in similar terms to the Bishop

These Questions Will be Answered June 13

1. What was the shortest year ever known in the history of this country and of England?

2. A young lady asks: "How may I, as a member of the Epworth League, best prepare myself to respond when called upon to pray? What helps, if any, may I properly use?"

3. When did the custom of burying the dead with their head towards the West originate, and what was the reason for the custom?

4. Should the efforts of our missionaries be confined to giving the Gospel to the "heathen," or should the work be so far extended as to give the "heathen," in addition to the Gospel, the educational benefits of our own land?

5. Is there anything inconsistent with a Christian's membership in a secret society?

6. Admitting that it would be well to have uniform marriage and divorce laws throughout the country, by what means may we most reasonably hope to secure such laws?

7. Is it right to use intoxicants as medicine?

8. What is the Christian duty of a wife and mother as to the support of her family, when she is married to a man who is physically and mentally able to support them, but refuses to do so?

9. Who was the author of the Golden Rule and whence its name?

10. How can we make our free land laws more actively operative in reducing the pauper population of our great cities?

Questions of the Week

1. Should unconverted persons be engaged, under any circumstances, as Sunday School teachers?

Where the services of consecrated Christian people cannot be secured, the engagement of unconverted persons to teach Sunday School scholars is permissible when such persons are of good moral character and do not teach error. The great object in Sunday School work, however, should be to bring the children to Christ. It is difficult to see how teachers who have themselves never put their trust in the Saviour and become his disciples are likely to win the souls of their scholars to him. S. T. GREGG.

2. What is the greatest obstruction ever penetrated by a shell from a modern big gun, and what is the greatest distance a shot from one of these guns has been fired?

A missile from an English 110 ton gun penetrated 42 feet of steel, iron, concrete, stone and wood in combination. A German 9½ inch bore gun and an English 9 2-10 inch bore gun have each sent a shell 12½ miles.

S. KEITH.

3. How many changes were made in the revised New Testament?

Rufus Wendell, in his Diacritical Edition of the Holy Bible, says there are 792,444 words in the text of the Revised Bible. Of that number 721,672 are retained from the Version of 1611. That means that 70,772 words are introduced into the Revised that did not appear in the Authorized Version. The latter, in its turn, contains 65,508 words which do not appear in the revision. If all verbal changes and changes in punctuation are considered, the number of changes would thus be many thousands. But no important doctrines are in the least affected by the large number of verbal and other changes made by the revisers.

G. CROSS.

4. What is the origin of the word "poltroon"?

According to Trench, the word is derived from the Latin phrase, "pollice truncata," and designated a class of persons who, too cowardly to serve the nation in its wars, maimed or cut off their thumbs in order to disqualify themselves for military service. Menage suggests the Italian word, "paltra," a bed, a reference to those who took to their beds, and designed sickness with the same cowardly purpose.

C. E. VAN PELT.

5. A Christian lady wonders why, during the past ten years, she has not received answers to prayers for the necessities of life, and for money needed to purchase medicines. What reasonable reply can be given to this harassing "why"?

The fact that the lady has been spared to pray for ten years past is proof that she has had the actual necessaries of life for that period. Possibly the medicines she has been unable to purchase might not have proved so helpful as she supposes, and our Heavenly Father may have therefore withheld them. Again, she may have expected miraculous answers to her prayers, instead of looking for the responses in ways equally providential, but less miraculous. If she needs medicine and asks God for it, why not then make known her wants to some earthly friend, believing that thus God will relieve her necessities. It might be well to sum up her prayers for temporal benefits in the words "Give us this day our daily bread," and then believing that she has what God sees is necessary, strive to be content therewith. On no account should she give up her faith. "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him" (Job 13: 5, 15). L. GORDON.

6. Should a Christian trade with a grocer who keeps a liquor department in his store?

The saloons do a bad business, but evil as they are, the temptation they offer is not as insidious as that of the store which while professedly established to supply the necessaries of life, displays its tastily put-up wines and liquors. Numbers of people who would not dream of going into a saloon, have been led to use intoxicants by the tempting array exhibited at their grocer's. The young are injured by the close proximity of wines and liquors with every day edibles, and the association becomes dangerously familiar. Christians should, if possible, deal with stores that do not foster intemperance by dealing in rum.

E. L. STARK.

7. What was the first American newspaper?

In 1689 "a Newspaper Extraordinary," was published by Samuel Green. On Sept. 25, 1690, appeared the first and only number of Public Occurrences, Benjamin Harris, publisher. Both were Boston productions and both were suppressed by the authorities. A copy of Public Occurrences is kept on file in one of the public offices in London, England. On April 24, 1704, appeared the first number of the News Letter, of which John Campbell, postmaster, was the publisher. The first daily journal was the Daily Advertiser, published in Philadelphia, in 1785. The Century Dictionary claims that the oldest existing newspaper in the country is the New Hampshire Gazette, founded in 1756.

8. Is there any reason to believe that Christ suffered, at any time during his earthly career, from sickness?

That Christ was wearied we know from the inspired record of his life. There is no such record of his being sick at any time. In Matthew 8: 17, Revised Version, we read "Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses." Reference is apparently made to Isaiah 53: 4, "Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows." In verse 3, of the same chapter, we read that he was acquainted with grief. The words griefs and grief might be rendered respectively sicknesses and sickness; still, there is no assertion in these texts that Christ suffered disease of any kind, any more than the statement that he bare our sins implies that he sinned. His obedience to all law, sanitary included, undoubtedly served to keep him in health. R. N. ABBOTT.

9. What living poet in the English language is entitled to pre-eminence, on the ground of poetic diction and ideas?

Algernon Charles Swinburne, undoubtedly. The essential attribute of poetry is rhythm, and in rhythmical expression, Swinburne stands unrivaled in English literature, present or past. His lyrics rank with Shelly's for rhythm and with Keats' for diction. In ideas, Swinburne does not take so high a rank. He has written much to glorify political liberty; he has created a Greek drama that reads like a translation; and he has written dramas of English history which are as good as those of any living author.

10. Our Saviour says, in Matt. 7: 13, 14, "Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat." How can this statement be reconciled with the teaching that the world is to be brought to Christ?

In the time of Christ it was surely true that many were upon the road that leads to destruction. In our own time there are surely large numbers who know not of Christ and many others who knowing of Christ reject or ignore him, and who are therefore on the same broad road. The Scripture gives no absolute assurance that the world is to be brought to Christ in the sense of universal personal acceptance of him as the soul's Redeemer. It does say that the kingdoms of this world are to become the kingdoms of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. But he might be the King of the world and yet not be accepted by all mankind as a personal Saviour. The Revelation (20: 7) represents Satan as gathering a great host from among men, immediately after the thousand year reign of Christ upon the earth, to go up against the beloved city, and these are destroyed by fire. It is evident that while they might have given outward homage to Christ they had not given Him their hearts.

Miscellaneous Questions

R., Danville, Pa. What is the earliest and what the latest date on which Easter Sunday can occur?

Easter Sunday occurs on the Sunday following the first full moon after March 21, and may therefore occur as early as March 22 or as late as April 17.

Subscriber, California. Is mental depression caused by physical derangements likely to produce in a Christian morbid or false impressions concerning his Christian duties?

Yes; decidedly. We have known many such cases. A gloomy religion is too often the result of a bad liver. Be sure, however, that God makes due allowances for human failings under such circumstances, for "he knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are dust."

A. T. D., Butler, Neb. Does the fact that nearly one million men lost their lives or were wounded during our Civil War detract from the fame of Abraham Lincoln?

No; the sacrifice of these many lives cannot be charged against Lincoln.

Teachers and ministers in the destitute rural districts in the South, and prison wardens and convicts constantly apply to the Lend-a-Hand Book Mission for back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for distribution. All who wish to donate packages of religious papers to this cause should communicate with Sarah P. Brigham, Lend-a-Hand Society, Boston, Mass., who will reply, sending an address to which the donors may forward the papers.

Durham. Would you consider a person irreverent who in prayer addressed God as "Dear Lord"?

Not necessarily. We have heard these words uttered in prayer in the most devout and reverent manner possible. We can readily understand, however, that the too frequent use of such language, however reverently intended, might have the appearance of irreverence.

M. M. M., Trenton, N. J. What is meant by "the Keswick movement?"

It is a religious movement now a quarter century old, and was fully explained in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of November 16, 1898. Meetings are held every summer at Keswick, England, for the promulgation of the special doctrine which the originators and subsequent supporters of the movement aim to emphasize. They believe that Christians who mourn the divided allegiance of their hearts as Paul did in Romans 7, may, like the apostle, find the victory over the old nature as he did through Christ. They claim that a life of rest, of victory, of unbroken communion with God, of power, is the life that the Scripture sets before the Christian. They do not claim sinless perfection.

G. M., Paterson, N. J. I have seen a short sentence which contains all the letters of the alphabet. Can you quote it for me?

The shortest intelligible sentence which contains all the letters of the alphabet is probably the following: "J. Gray, pack with my box five dozen quills."

M. M. D., Ocean Grove, N. J. What is the belief of the Christadelphians?

The Christadelphians are a small religious sect, founded in the middle of the Nineteenth Century by John Thomas, M.D., who seceded from the Disciples of Christ. They reject the doctrine of the Trinity, believe in one supreme God, in Jesus Christ, in whom was manifest the eternal Spirit of God, and who died for the offences of sinners and rose again for their justification. They believe in baptism by immersion as essential to salvation. Satan is a personification of sin. Christ is to reign on David's throne over converted Israel and a redeemed world. They hold that there will be no resurrection of those who have never heard the Gospel, and that the wicked will be ultimately annihilated.

A reader sends this suggestion concerning the India famine relief work:

If every mother in America would send a penny for every child in her family, how much might be accomplished for the starving! This simple plan was adopted by a minister in Germany and a home for cripples and invalids was established. Might not the same plan appeal to the mothers in our own land?

A reader in Spring Brook, N. Y., sends this letter on a most timely subject:

Dear Editor:—You have probably seen a statement in the papers lately that farmers should not sow as much wheat by one-quarter or one-third in order to reduce the product, so to increase the price. I think that would be abominable; it would not benefit farmers a particle and would increase the suffering of the poor; schemers and monopolists would have the whole cornered, and we would not be so well conditioned to help in such cases as starving India.

We quite agree that such a course would be reprehensible and liable to cause much suffering. Whatever others may do, farmers should not permit themselves to be led into gambling with the necessaries of life. The country is dependent upon them and such speculation could not have other than evil results.

M. W. L. Is the use of the descriptive term "goody-goody," as applied to a certain class of people, or to a species of literature, commendable? What better word might be substituted?

Applied to literature, it is a mild form of slang. "Insipid" might be preferable. Applied to individuals, it means that their piety is of the mawkish, effusive, effeminate order that lacks practicality and backbone. It should not be confused with hypocrisy or pharisaism, however.

J. N., Kingman, Kansas. Is the word "everlasting," as used by our Saviour, considered to be endless?

The word "everlasting," as found in the teachings of Christ, is invariably "ai-o-ni-os" in the Greek. So also is the word "eternal." The literal rendering of the Greek word is "age-lasting." In connection with the word "life" it is taken by interpreters of Scripture generally to mean "everlasting," or "without end." Other interpreters hold that where found with the word "punishment," or "fire," the noun modifies the word "everlasting," and that the punishment or fire, while everlasting in its effects, because these cannot be recalled, does not eternally exist in the conscious experience of any one.

Stella, Neb. Is it a Christian act on the part of a church member to get up a party, with dancing, fancy costumes, etc., at a time when a religious revival is in progress in the church of which the person is a member?

Waiving the question of a professed Christian holding such parties, an entertainment of that character would certainly be most inopportune at such a time. It would show a contempt for religion and a poor appreciation of the proprieties.

M. K. B., Boxford, Mo. Who was Susan Warner and what books did she write other than The Wide, Wide World and Queechy?

Susan Warner was born in New York City, July 11, 1819. Under the name of Elizabeth Wetherell she published The Wide, Wide World in 1851; Queechy, in 1852; The Hills of the Shatemuc, 1856; The Old Helmet, 1863; Melbourne House, 1864; Daisy, 1868; A Story of Small Beginnings, 1872; Wych Hazel, 1876; The Kingdom of Judah, 1878; My Desire, 1879; Nobody, 1883; Daisy Plains, 1885. Her Wide, Wide World had a circulation of a quarter of a million of copies on this side of the Atlantic and was in large demand in England. She died at Highland Falls, N. Y., March 17, 1885.

H. S., Minneapolis, Minn. What is the real objection to cousins marrying?

Scripturally, there is none. There is, however, in many minds, an objection on physiological grounds, the issue of such unions frequently, it is claimed, being abnormal, either mentally or physically, the result of consanguinity.

L. D., Bay City, Oregon. What was the religion of the Arabs previous to the preaching of Mohammed?

For the most part the religion of the Arabs prior to the propaganda of Mohammed was decrepid and effete. There was little sense of loss, however, on the score of religion. Still, there were exceptions. The Hanifs, the meaning of which name is supposed to be "penitents," strove to purify themselves from sin. They rejected polytheism, acknowledged Allah and were almost fatalists in their pious resignation to his will. They believed in human responsibility and a judgment to come. They were of an ascetical trend and did little theorizing.

H. N. C., Sing Sing, N. Y. Where is the island of Patmos and what is its present name?

Patmos, or Patino, as it is now called, is an island of the Ægean Sea, about forty miles in circumference. It belongs to the group called Sporades and lies to the south of Samos. Dr. Talmage refers interestingly to it in one of his Five Hundred Sermons (Vol. IX.), recently published by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

J. M. H., Boisseram, Manitoba. A friend makes the statement that according to statistics it costs about three hundred dollars for each person converted in our churches. Is this so? He claims that the large amount of machinery in connection with the churches such as young people's societies, etc., is the cause.

Your friend is mistaken. He is presumably taking the number of a year's conversions in some denomination and dividing with the same the aggregate expenditure of the denomination. He forgets that for every convert added there are about twenty believers ministered to by the public means of grace, to say nothing of pastoral visitation. Taking new converts and old together, it does not cost a tithe of the amount mentioned per head, to dispense to them the privileges of God's house.

A PANORAMIC VIEW OF THE FINE GROUNDS AND BEAUTIFUL BUILDINGS OF THE PARIS EXPOSITION OF 1900

PARIS EXPOSITION DELIGHTS THE NATIONS

MULTITUDES OF VISITORS INSPECT A WORLD OF WONDERS—THE BEAUTIFUL BUILDINGS, THE ART PALACES AND ALEXANDER BRIDGE

UCH a number of marvels of architecture as the visitor witnesses at the Paris Exposition, were probably never before brought together. The sight as witnessed from the Pont de L'Alma is a brilliant one indeed. On the left bank of the river looking towards Notre Dame is the Street of the Nations, which presents selections of the most typical and beautiful examples of the architecture of each country. The Pavilion of Italy has by common consent been pronounced the finest of all. Germany has a striking reproduction of one of the most famous buildings in Nuremburg.

On the other side of the river the most striking buildings are the monumental conservatories, veritable palaces of crystal, belonging to the Horticultural Section. Beyond lies the marvelous Alexander III. Bridge, certainly the most beautiful of all the twenty odd bridges which span the Seine. The two sections of the Exhibition which it connects are wonders of architecture. The large and the small Palaces of Fine Arts, which flank the entrance from the Champs Elysees—buildings constructed of stone which will survive the Exhibition—are a triumph of French architectural skill. On the other side of the river the buildings of the Esplanade des Invalides are more florid in style, but are also marvelously beautiful.

Looking down stream the prospect is closed by the graceful sweep of the Trocadero. On the right bank is the "Vieux Paris" (ancient city of Paris), and on the left the Pavilions of the Tour du Monde, the panorama of the Compagnie Transatlantique, the Chinese Pavilions and other buildings of all styles of architecture. Opposite the Trocadero lies the main part of the Exhibition, which fills the immense extent of the Champ de Mars. This is closed at the far end by the facade of the Salles des Fetes, the "close" of the Exhibition.

With thoroughly republican simplicity, the two palaces of fine arts were inaugurated Tuesday afternoon, May 1. President Loubet was there, but his visit was of short duration. He was received by the commissioners of each country on the threshold of their exhibitions. Mr. Cauldwell, the director of fine arts of the general commission of the United States, and Mr. Woodward, Assistant Commissioner, received M. Loubet and those with him, and accompanied them through the five open rooms of the American art exhibition. These rooms compare favorably with those of other nationalities in point of decoration. The hangings are uniformly of a pale green, decked with embroidered palms and surmounted by a large painted frieze ornament, with laurel leaves in gilt and the coat of arms of the United States. The effect is quiet and very pretty. In the centre of each room is a round sofa seated in pale green velvet. The guardians, in their uniform of black and silver, were much admired for their fine appearance. The principal museums in the United States and many private collectors and owners have lent some valuable pictures for the Exposition.

Nothing is more noteworthy than the progress made by electricity. At the Exposition of 1889, thousands struggled to see a pear-shaped electrolier of a thousand incandescent glow lamps that the Edison Company had put up. The youngest schoolboy would hardly turn his head to see that spectacle to-day, for electricity has made giant strides since then.

Japan is making a good show. Portugal excels Spain. Greece has an artistic exposition. Belgium makes a solid but not picturesque exhibition. America's contribution is attractive and suggestive of the progress and skill of a great nation. The Exposition has cost the French government a hundred million francs. The two palaces of Fine Arts which are permanent constructions cost one-eighth of this sum. As at our memorable Chicago World's Fair, there will be many congresses during the progress of the Exposition. Over a hundred are announced to be held between the months of June and September. The list of subjects contains many that are of general interest, such as ornithology and other sciences. Then the bakers are to have a congress all to themselves, and another of the one hundred and odd is the Dried Fruit Congress, which to many minds will seem the oddest of them all.

The Diamond Case in the British pavilion has a remarkably interesting display of diamonds. There is the celebrated 971 karat Jager-Fontain diamond, belonging to Barrington & Co., of London, and offered for sale for $5,000,000. It is of a wonderful bluish tint, has the shape of an icicle, and is three inches long and two inches thick in the middle. It will be remembered that this stone was found at Kimberley in 1897 by a native, who sold it to a broker for $5,000, a carriage, two horses, a watch and chain, etc., all told $9,000. There are also on exhibition four other renowned diamonds, the Regent, valued at $2,000,000; the Kohinoor, valued at $1,500,000; the Imperial, valued at $1,000,000, and the Arloff, valued at $900,000. The British exhibit also contains the three largest lumps of gold in existence; Fred Mark's Australian 224-pound lump, Oliver Martin's Californian 181-pound lump, and Peter Flower's Californian 154 pound lump.

Splendors of Heaven

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: I. Cor. 2: 9:

Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him.

THE city of Corinth has been called "the Paris of antiquity." Indeed, for splendor the world holds no such wonder to-day. It stood on an isthmus washed by two seas, the one sea bringing the commerce of Europe, the other sea bringing the commerce of Asia. From her wharves, in the construction of which whole kingdoms had been absorbed, war-galleys with three banks of oars pushed out and confounded the navy yards of all the world. Huge-handed machinery, such as modern invention cannot equal, lifted ships from the sea on one side and transported them on trucks across the isthmus and set them down in the sea on the other side.

The revenue officers of the city went down through the olive groves that lined the beach to collect a tariff from all nations. The mirth of all people sported in her Isthmian games, and the beauty of all lands sat in her theatres, walked her porticoes, and threw itself on the altar of her stupendous dissipations. Column and statue and temple bewildered the beholder. There were white marble fountains into which, from apertures at the side, there rushed waters everywhere known for health-giving qualities. Around these basins, twisted into wreaths of stone, there were all the beauties of sculpture and architecture; while standing, as if to guard the costly display, was a statue of Hercules of burnished Corinthian brass. Vases of terra-cotta adorned the cemeteries of the dead—vases so costly that Julius Cæsar was not satisfied until he had captured them for Rome. Armed officials, the Corintharii, paced up and down to see that no statue was defaced, no pedestal overthrown, no bas-relief touched. From the edge of the city a hill arose, with its magnificent burden of columns, towers and temples (one thousand slaves waiting at one shrine), and a citadel so thoroughly impregnable that Gibraltar is a heap of sand compared with it. Amid all that strength and magnificence Corinth stood and defied the world.

Oh! it was not to rustics, who had never seen anything grand, that Paul uttered this text. They had heard the best music that had come from the best instruments in all the world; they had heard songs floating from morning porticoes and melting in evening groves; they had passed their whole lives among pictures and sculpture and architecture and Corinthian brass, which had been molded and shaped until there was no chariot wheel in which it had not sped, and no tower in which it had not glittered, and no gateway that it had not adorned. Ah, it was a bold thing for Paul to stand there amid all that, and say: "All this is nothing. These sounds that come from the temple of Neptune are not music compared with the harmonies of which I speak. These waters rushing in the basin of Pyrene are not pure; these statues of Bacchus and Mercury are not exquisite; your citadel of Acrocorinthus is not strong compared with that which I offer to the poorest slave that puts down his burden at that brazen gate. You Corinthians think this is a splendid city; you think you have heard all sweet sounds, and seen all beautiful sights; but I tell you eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."

You see my text sets forth the idea that, however exalted our ideas of heaven, they come far short of the reality. Some wise men have been calculating how many furlongs long and wide is the new Jerusalem; and they have calculated how many inhabitants there are on the earth; how long the earth will probably stand; and then they come to this estimate: that after all the nations have been gathered to heaven, there will be room for each soul—a room sixteen feet long and fifteen feet wide. It would not be large enough for you. It would not be large enough for me. I am glad to know that no human estimate is sufficient to take the dimensions. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard," nor arithmeticians calculated.

I first remark that we can get no idea of the health of heaven. When you were a child, and you went out in the morning, how you bounded along the road or street—you had never felt sorrow or sickness. Perhaps later, you felt a glow in your cheek and a spring in your step and an exuberance of spirits and a clearness of eye, that made you thank God you were permitted to live. The nerves were harp-strings and the sunlight was a doxology, and the rustling leaves were the rustling of the robes of a great crowd rising up to praise the Lord. You thought that you knew what it was to be well, but there is no perfect health on earth. The diseases of past generations came down to us. The airs that now float upon the earth are not like those which floated above Paradise. They are charged with impurities and distempers. The most elastic and robust health of earth, compared with that which those experience before whom the gates have been opened, is nothing but sickness and emaciation. Look at that soul standing before the throne. On earth she was a life-long invalid. See her step now and hear her voice now. Catch, if you can, one breath of that celestial air. Health in all the pulses—health of vision; health of spirits; immortal health. No racking cough, no sharp pleurisies, no consuming fevers, no exhausting pains, no hospitals of wounded men. Health swinging in the air; health flowing in all the streams; health blooming on the banks. No headaches, no sideaches, no backaches. That child that died in the agonies of croup, hear her voice now ringing in the anthem. That old man that went bowed down with the infirmities of age, see him walk now with the step of an immortal athlete—forever young again. That night when the needle woman fainted away in the garret, a wave of the heavenly air resuscitated her forever. For everlasting years to have neither ache, nor pain, nor weakness, nor fatigue. "Eye hath not seen it, ear hath not heard it."

I remark further, that we can, in this world, get no just idea of the splendors of heaven. John tries to describe them. He says, "the twelve gates are twelve pearls," and that "the foundations of the wall are garnished with all manner of precious stones." As we stand looking through the telescope of St. John, we see a blaze of amethyst and pearl and emerald and sardonyx and chrysoprasus and sapphire, a mountain of light, a cataract of color, a sea of glass, and a city like the sun. John bids us look again, and we see thrones; thrones of the prophets, thrones of the patriarchs, thrones of the angels, thrones of the apostles, thrones of the martyrs, throne of Jesus—throne of God. And we turn round to see the glory, and it is thrones! thrones! thrones!

John bids us look again, and see the great procession of the redeemed passing. Jesus, on a white horse, leads the march, and all the armies of heaven following on white horses. Infinite cavalcade passing, passing; empires pressing into line, ages following ages. Dispensation tramping after dispensation. Glory in the track of glory. Europe, Asia, Africa, North and South America, pressing into lines. Islands of the sea shoulder to shoulder. Generations before the flood following generations after the flood, and as Jesus rises at the head of that great host, and waves his sword in signal of victory, all crowns are lifted and all ensigns swung out and all chimes rung and all hallelujahs chanted, and some cry, "Glory to God most high!" and some, "Hosanna to the son of David!" and some, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain!"—till all exclamations of endearment and homage in the vocabulary of heaven are exhausted, and there comes up surge after surge of "Amen! Amen! and Amen!" "Eye hath not seen it, ear hath not heard it." Skim from the summer waters the brightest sparkles, and you will get no idea of the sheen of the everlasting sea. Pile up the splendors of earthly cities, and they would not make a stepping-stone by which you might mount to the city of God. Every house is a palace. Every step is a triumph. Every covering of the head a coronation. Every meal is a banquet. Every stroke from the tower is a wedding-bell. Every day is a jubilee, every hour a rapture and every moment an ecstacy. "Eye hath not seen it, ear hath not heard it."

I remark further, we can get no idea of the reunions of heaven. If you have ever been across the seas and met a friend, or even an acquaintance, in some strange land, you remember how your blood thrilled, and how glad you were to see him. What will be our joy, after we have passed the seas of death, to meet in the bright city of the Lord those from whom we have long been separated. After we have been away from our friends ten or fifteen years, and we come upon them, we see how differently they look. Their hair has turned, and wrinkles have come in their faces, and we say, "How you have changed!" But oh, when we stand before the throne, all cares gone from the face, all marks of sorrow disappeared, and feeling the joy of that blessed land, methinks we will say to each other, with an exultation we cannot now imagine, "How you have changed?"

In this world we only meet to part. It is good-by, good-by. Farewells floating in the air. We hear it at the rail-car window, and at the steamboat wharf—good-by. Children lisp it and old age answers it. Sometimes we say it in a light way—"good-by," and sometimes with anguish in which the soul breaks down. Good-by! Ah! that is the word that ends the thanksgiving banquet; that is the word that comes in to close the Christmas chant. Good-by, good-by. But not so in heaven. Welcomes in the air, welcomes at the gates, welcomes at the house of many mansions—but no good-by. That group is constantly being augmented. They are going up from our circles of earth to join it—little voices to join the anthem—little hands to take hold in the great home-circle—little feet to dance in the eternal glee—little crowns to be cast down before the feet of Jesus. Our friends are in two groups—a group this side of the river, and a group on the other side of the river. Now there goes one from this to that, and another from this to that, and soon we will all be gone over. How many of your loved ones have already entered upon that blessed place? If I should take paper and pencil, do you think I could put them all down? Ah, my friends, the waves of Jordan roar so hoarsely we cannot hear the joy on the other side when that group is augmented.

A little child's mother had died, and they comforted her. They said: "Your mother has gone to heaven—don't cry;" and the next day they went to the graveyard, and they laid the body of the mother down into the ground; and the little girl came up to the verge of the grave, and, looking down, said: "Is this heaven?" We have no idea what heaven is. It is the grave here—it is darkness here—but there is merry-making yonder. Methinks when a soul arrives, some angel takes it around to show it the wonders of that blessed place. The usher-angel says to the newly arrived: "These are the martyrs that perished at Piedmont; these were torn to pieces at the Inquisition; this is the throne of the great Jehovah; this is Jesus." "I am going to see Jesus," said a dying boy; "I am going to see Jesus." The missionary said: "You are sure you will see him?" "Oh, yes; that's what I want to go to heaven for." "But," said the missionary, "suppose Jesus should go away from heaven—what then?" "I should follow him," said the dying boy. "But if Jesus went down to hell—what then?" The dying boy thought for a moment and then said: "Where Jesus is there can be no hell!" Oh, to stand in his presence! That will be heaven! Oh, to put our hand in that hand which was wounded for us on the Cross—to go around amid the groups of the redeemed, and shake hands with the prophets and apostles and martyrs, and with our own dear, beloved ones! That will be the great reunion; we cannot imagine it now! Our loved ones seem so far away. When we are in trouble and lonesome, they don't seem to come to us. We go on to the banks of the Jordan and call across to them, but they do not seem to hear. We say, "Is it well with the child? is it well with the loved ones?" and we listen to hear if any voice come back over the waters. None, none! Unbelief says: "They are dead, and they are annihilated," but, blessed be God! we have a Bible that tells us different! We open it and we find they are neither dead nor annihilated—that they never were so much alive as now—that they are only waiting for our coming, and that we shall join them on the other side of the river. Oh, glorious reunion, we cannot grasp it now! "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."

What a place of explanation it will be! I see, every day, profound mysteries of providence. There is no question we ask oftener than Why? There are hundreds of graves in Greenwood and Laurel Hill that need to be explained. Hospitals for the blind and lame, asylums for the idiotic and insane, alms-houses for the destitute, and a world of pain and misfortune that demand more than human solution. God will clear it all up. In the light that pours from the throne, no dark mystery can live. Things now utterly inscrutable will be illumined as plainly as though the answer were written on the jasper wall, or sounded in the temple anthem. But we can get no idea of that anthem here. We appreciate the power of secular music, but do we appreciate the power of sacred song? There is nothing more inspiring to me than a whole congregation lifted on the wave of holy melody. When we sing some of those dear old psalms and tunes, they rouse all the memories of the past. Why, some of them were cradle songs in our father's house! They are all sparkling with the morning dew of a thousand Christian Sabbaths. They were sung by brothers and sisters gone now—by voices that were aged and broken in the music—voices none the less sweet because they did tremble and break.

When I hear these old songs sung, it seems as if all the old country meeting houses joined in the chorus, and city church and sailor's Bethel and Western cabins, until the whole continent lifts the Doxology. When generals come back from victorious wars, do we not cheer them and shout, "Huzza, huzza?" and when Jesus passes along in the conquest of the earth, shall we not have for him one loud, ringing cheer?

> "All hail the power of Jesus' name!
> Let angels prostrate fall,
> Bring forth the royal diadem,
> And crown him Lord of all."

But, my friends, if music on earth is so sweet what will it be in heaven! They all know the tune there. All the best singers of all the ages will join it—choirs of white-robed children, choirs of patriarchs, choirs of apostles. Harpers with their harps. Great anthems of God roll on! roll on!—other empires joining the harmony till the thrones are all full, and the nations all saved. Anthem shall touch anthem, chorus join chorus, and all the sweet sounds of earth and heaven be poured into the ear of Christ. David of the harp will be there. Gabriel of the trumpet will be there. Germany, redeemed, will pour its deep, bass voice into the song, and Africa will add to the music with her matchless voices. I wish we could anticipate that song. I wish in our closing hymn to-day we might catch an echo that slips from the gates. Who knows but that when the heavenly door opens to-day to let some soul through, there may come forth the strain of the jubilant voices until we catch it? Oh, that as the song drops down from heaven, it might meet a song coming up from earth. They rise for the Doxology, all the multitude of the blest! Let us rise with them: and so at this hour the joys of the Church on earth and the joys of the Church in heaven will mingle their chalices, and the dark apparel of our mourning will seem to whiten into the spotless raiment of the skies. God grant that through the mercy of our Lord Jesus we may all get there!

of Calcutta. To Dr. Klopsch personally he writes:

"I had no conception, till I saw you this morning, of the magnitude of the philanthropic work done by the paper. . . I can conceive of no Christian work more likely to bind the two hemispheres together in bonds of fraternal sympathy than the relief you are organizing in America to counteract the terrible effects of drought in India. . . . I am sure that in the journey you are undertaking through the famine districts you will receive every assistance you may require from the local authorities. Your work speaks for itself, and it is hardly necessary I should say a word in its favor. I wish you all success."

Hon. Joseph F. Choate, our distinguished Ambassador in England, in his letter introducing Drs. Klopsch and Talmage to the Honorable Secretary for India, referred in the kindest terms to the life-saving mission of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its army of readers, and concluded with these words:

"Any such work as theirs tends to international harmony."

These voluntary testimonies to the value of earnest Christian effort belong equally to every reader of this journal, and to all who have aided the Famine Fund, from the largest donation down to the very smallest gift. It is a precious and a blessed work, and one which has opened up new springs of good-will between two great nations.

Dr. Klopsch writes of his journey as follows:

LONDON, S. W.
27th April, 1900.

Dear Friends: We arrived at Plymouth, after a pleasant trip, on Tuesday night about nine o'clock and remained there that night. In the morning we were pleasantly surprised by finding in the papers an extensive notice of our mission. We reached London Wednesday afternoon at five o'clock, and there engaged two rooms at the Carlton, which were comfortable and in delightful contrast to our accommodation at Plymouth.

After dinner I visited Dr. Talmage at the Metropole, where I was very cordially received. Next morning we called on Ambassador Choate, which reception was a most cordial one. After that we went to the India Office, where we were very courteously received by Sir Charles Bernard, Under-Secretary for India. We spent an hour with him, and at the close Sir Charles came down with us to the very door. He informed us that he would telegraph or write stating when Lord Hamilton would see us the following day. In the evening we took dinner with Dr. and Mrs. and Miss Talmage and Miss Collyer. While at dinner a letter came from the India Office, informing us that Lord Hamilton would see us next morning at 11.15. The letter reads as follows:

"INDIA OFFICE,
26th April, 1900.

"Lord George Hamilton asks me to say he would be glad to see you here at 11.15 A.M. to-morrow, Friday morning, if you can find time to call then. Lord George is asking Dr. Talmage to come at the same time.

I am, yours faithfully,
[Signed] RICHMOND RITCHIE."

The following morning we availed ourselves of the invitation, and Dr. Talmage and I, together with Mrs. Talmage called on Sir George and had a delightful interview. He believes in the missionaries, knows they are doing good work, and is of the opinion that their co-operation can be utilized and that it would redound to the furtherance of the best interests of the cause. He expressed himself in terms of highest appreciation of what the United States have done and the promise in the future in the same direction. He was particularly impressed with the action of the United States Government in placing at our disposal a vessel for the transportation of the corn, and considered it one of the most gratifying, practical evidences of the hearty fraternal relations existing between the two countries.

What impressed me most with Lord Hamilton was the Christian tone that pervaded all that he said. He is a Christian statesman who believes in the potency of Christianity as a civilizing influence. He promised me letters to Lord Curzon, to the Bishop of Calcutta and the Governor of Bombay.

On returning to the hotel, I found an invitation from the Lord Mayor, and hastened with Dr. Talmage to the Mansion House. We were about to leave our cards, when one of the pages came down and said that the Lady Mayoress expected us upstairs to lunch. We entered the dining hall. In the centre was the table with about twenty guests. At the head of it sat the Lady Mayoress, with the Earl Verulam, then the daughter of the Mayoress, next several other gentlemen, and among them Colonel Buxall C. B. The chair of the Lord Mayor was in the centre, and Dr. Talmage was seated at its right and I on the left. About five minutes afterward, the Lord Mayor himself appeared and greeted us very cordially. He spoke a long time with us in regard to the Mansion House India Famine Fund, and regretted again and again that the amount, now £200,000 sterling, was not as large as it should have been. He asked me to give to Lord Curzon his regards and say to him that he was in fullest sympathy with the relief operations.

After the lunch, the Lady Mayoress presented us with her own and the Lord Mayor's photographs.

We leave in a few hours for Brindisi, having accomplished which, we have made one-half the journey. Then we embark for Alexandria, change ships there for Aden, and there change again for Bombay, where we expect to arrive on schedule time, May 12th.

L. KLOPSCH.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD FAMINE RELIEF STEAMSHIP "QUITO" IN PORT

A FAMINE GROUP NEAR AHMEDABAD — A DESERTED FAMINE WAIF — SUFFERERS ON THE WAY TO A RELIEF CAMP

Our Inter-denominational Missionary Committee

To whom THE CHRISTIAN HERALD cables all funds it receives for the relief of the Famine sufferers in India, and who will distribute the cargo of the relief steamship Quito, includes these representative missionaries:

REV. EDGAR M. WILSON, Presbyterian Mission, Ratnagiri
REV. G. N. THOMSSEN, Baptist Mission, Bapatla
REV. EDWIN F. FREASE, Methodist Episcopal Mission, Baroda
REV. J. H. HARPSTER, Lutheran Mission, Guntur
REV. M. D. ADAMS, Church of the Disciples Mission, Bilaspur
REV. A. B. FULLER, Alliance Mission, Girgaon
REV. E. S. HUME, Missionary of the A. B. C. F. M. at Byculla, Bombay, Secretary
BISHOP J. M. THOBURN, Chairman of the Committee, is in the United States on sick leave.

The need of help becomes more urgent every day. By the latest mail comes a letter from Miss Ella Plomer, of Ajmere, who writes:

"We were very thankful when we received word a few days ago that through the liberality of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, we could add at once a hundred famine children to those we are supporting in our Orphanage. I am very busy, but I could not let this mail go without a word of thanks to the people who have sent this money to you for us. Children are brought to us daily, and we give them our best attention, but some of them have suffered too much before we get them to recover. The others are very grateful, and are eager to show how thankful they are by helping in the work, such as drawing water, cleaning plates, etc., before they are strong enough; and we have to repress their energy. We have borrowed a thousand dollars to erect two large dormitories for their accommodation. We are looking to the Lord to send us the money to repay the loan. We are looking to him, too, for money to take in more children. There are so many perishing whom we might save if we had the means! We cannot turn them away: they have such pinched, pitiful pleading faces that we cannot bear the pain of refusing to receive them, and who knows how many of them might be saved to save others in this dark Rajputana.

"I feel assured that in some way God will provide the means. There are four months to go through yet and the suffering gets worse daily. Oh, it is pitiful to see men, women and children dying from starvation. Thirty-eight poor creatures, who could bear their agony no longer, lay down on the railroad tracks for the train to end their misery. Will you please print my letter? for perhaps some one may read it who will give us a little money. If it is ever so little we shall be grateful. And we need the prayers of God's people. We are almost worn out with our work and the awful sights we must see. We dread breaking down. If we were to be sick, who would care for these poor creatures?"

"ERE THE SHIP SAILS"

A SHIP in the harbor is waiting for freight,
On a mission of mercy to fly:
Oh, fairer than all is this ship of "Relief!"
With bread for the starving that die.
Oh, pray her "good voyage" to India's strand!
And add to her cargo some gift from thy hand!
Ere the ship sails.

Gaunt Famine and Death are wasting the East,
While thousands on thousands are dead.
Ye men of the West, where plenty abounds,
Your brothers are crying for bread.
Oh, list to their cry from the far-distant shore!
And speed your rich gifts for the vessel's good store!
Ere the ship sails.

Ah, many a ship in the harbor of "Now,"
God sendeth with purpose most true;
They come to us all, and wait, briefly wait,
For lading—the good we may do;
And angels from heaven are watching with care.
What freight for the vessel our hands may prepare;
Ere the ship sails

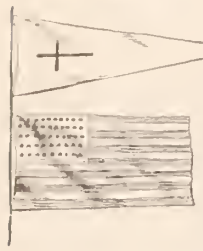
THIS IS GOD'S WORLD

PARABLES OF THE KINGDOM

BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

International Sunday School Lesson for May 27: Matt. 13: 24-33 | Golden Text, Matt. 13: 38: "The field is the world"



"CHRISTENDOM" is an abridgement of Christ's kingdom in more senses than one. Its nations, called "Christian nations," have the cross on their flags. Our own country, declared by the Supreme Court on Feb. 29, 1892, "a Christian nation," has an official pennant containing the blue cross of our heavenly redemption in a white field for national righteousness, which flies above the stars and stripes on Sabbath mornings on our ships of war, proclaiming, as the nation's ideal at least, the subordination of the nation to Christ as its King, proclaiming that nothing can properly have the protection of our flag that is inconsistent with the cross of a Christian civilization. Are Christian nations, with all their faults, the kingdom of tares and wheat? The Church is certainly not the whole kingdom, though it is a part of it and the chief visible agency in extending it, for Christ said that the kingdom's "field is the world." Christ calls it "his field." With all its faults, "this is God's world," and is to be God's kingdom. Already Christian nations, that is, nations whose laws and institutions are in some measure based on the teachings of Christ, govern more than half the world, and it seems to be the promise of history no less than prophecy that they will in a few years directly or indirectly control the whole earth. Commerce and conscience alike will insist that inhuman governments, like that of the Turk, and inefficient governments, like that of China, shall give place to civilized, that is, Christian government. "Christendom" is to cover the earth, but is it truly Christ's kingdom? Yes truly, but not fully. Christian nations still send to the heathen missionaries in the cabin, with rum, opium, and guns in the hold. The Church and the saloon are equally legal under Christian governments, and by consent of the Church itself. But Christendom is yet the kingdom in development. Its very defects correspond to Christ's prophetic picture of a field in which sheep and goats, tares and wheat, bad fish and good, are found side by side. It is nevertheless Christ's field, and shall at last be purged and purified.

The perfected kingdom is a Christianized world. The "world" in geographical extent with its populations; the "world" in the sense of "worldly affairs," such as business, politics, and pleasure, is to be Christianized. The law of Christ shall be made really, though in this age not fully, dominant everywhere, and over all affairs, in measurable fulfilment of Christ's prayer, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done, as in heaven so on earth." The kingdom of heaven is but an abridgement of that prayer, and "our citizenship is in heaven," and "the holy city let down from God out of heaven," are but concrete embodiments of the same prayer, which is itself both a prophecy and promise of its own fulfilment, for surely Christ could not have taught us to pray for what was not to be.

Christ explained this kingdom in seven parables, of which the parable of the sower was introductory, and the other six constitute three pairs.

At the world's conference of missions in New York, these parables of the kingdom were read one morning by Dr. Leonard, missionary secretary, with a vast map of the world at his back, colored to show not its countries but the religious conditions of its peoples — by far the larger part in pagan darkness; the Mohammedans slightly less dark; the Roman and Greek churches lighter still, and Protestants brightest of all.

The Field, Humanity In all the parables, "the field is the world," that is, the world of man, the race, humanity. In its four kinds of hearts, in the first parable, Christ, by his own ministry and that of his helpers, sows the living seed of the Word of God, which grows up in the second parable into "living epistles," "the children of the kingdom."

Some years ago an old man died at the age of 116. When he was about sixteen he heard a sermon that he never forgot. He did not think of it much at the time, and grew up without the fear of God and lived a sinful life. But seventy-four years afterwards, when he was ninety years old, something brought to his mind the sermon that he had heard in his youth. It was fresh in his memory still, and he gave his heart to God, and for the twenty-six years more that he lived he was an earnest Christian. The field is again the world, that is, humanity—in the parable of the hid treasure. Others may be chiefly interested in the world's mineral and agricultural wealth. Christ sees sinful men as earth's greatest treasure, rough ore that others despise, but undeveloped crown jewels to him. Christ saw from heaven the Christianized humanity which is to be and which is his kingdom, and gave all he had —the red coin of his own heart—to secure it and bring it to light. The twin parable of the pearl found by searching, seems to picture those who less promptly discover the preciousness of humanity, but having found it, follow Christ in giving all they have in life, if not in death, to Christianize it. No one can even develop the noblest individuality, who does not develop the sociality of the Christian circles of love to the full.

"AND HE TAUGHT THE PEOPLE OUT OF THE SHIP"

Turning now to the lesson verses, we see:

I. The kingdom's growth:
1. Good and evil grow together, 22, 24-30.
2. The growth will show itself visibly, 22, 31, 32.
3. But its spring of power is invisible influence, v. 33.

II. The kingdom purified at last, 22, 39-43, 47-50.

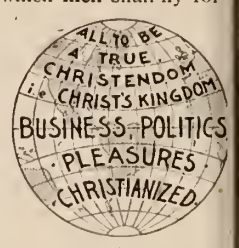
Who are the Wheat? 1. Wheat and tares mingled. We are sometimes told that the parable of the sheep and the goats does not correctly represent the situation; that the line of division between the good and the evil passes not between men, but right through them. But we submit that this is itself not accurate definition. There is, indeed, good and evil in the best of men, and mixed motives in every noblest act. This is the Bible doctrine of the two forces in conflict in every man (Rom. 7: 19f), now revived by the psychologists in their learned discussions of "split personality"—the higher and the lower — the Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde that by turns dominate the acts of men and multitudes. But there are some men in whom, through the grace of Christ, the good habitually dominates the evil — these are the "sheep," the "wheat"; and there are others in whom evil is habitually dominant—these are the "goats," the "tares." In heathen nations there are a few blades of genuine wheat, such as Socrates and Confucius and Buddha. But in such nations tares greatly predominate. Even in Christian nations, only a minority even profess religion—one-third of the population in our own country—and only a minority of these who make up the Church can be counted true wheat. When Gideon made a test he found only one in a hundred "No. 1, hard." It is doubtful if the proportion of full-headed, full-hearted wheat is any greater to-day. A count of attendance at Boston churches a few years since, showed a tally much less than the church membership, when it ought to have been three times that, at the very least, for that allows only four members and their families. And, going to meetings, after all, is only going to meals. A man in Maine said: "It is working between meals that is killing me." The church people are not dying that way; witness the tares to be considered with its companion parable of the net, let us look at the twin parables of growth—the mustard seed parable, especially needed by us; the parable of the leaven, pre-eminently by the Jews of Christ's time. They expected a kingdom wholly outward—a refuge for their oppressed people from Rome. In the parable of the mustard seed Jesus promises that, though the beginnings of the kingdom which they see in his lowly life are small, they will at last grow into visible institutions to which men shall fly for refuge. But in the parable of the leaven he taught them what they needed first and most — to learn that the kingdom was to begin in invisible influences; in personal convictions, which at last would come out in social Christian institutions, as shown in the mustard tree.



Many in our day need to be reminded that we belong to the period of developed Christianity, when all who are oppressed by masters or rulers or habits may find refuge in full-grown Christian institutions. At the World's Missionary Conference a missionary secretary declared, in substance, that the aim of missionaries is not to change institutions, but individual hearts. It would have been more accurate to say that in a new country its first aim is to make Christ known to individual souls, but that its ultimate aim is to save not the sinner only, but the city; to readjust not only one's personal relation to God, but also his social relations to his fellows. The parable of the leaven pictures the primal aim of Christ; the parable of the mustard tree of refuge his ultimate aim. Those who plead that Christ did not deal with social problems forget that he lived in the era of the mustard seed. We live when the ideas he planted have grown into republics in which the Christians are no longer slaves under a despotism, but the rulers of republics and parliaments. The apostles could do nothing to determine whether men should be enslaved; but we live when Christian nations, by treaty, can suppress traffic in slaves, opium and liquor everywhere, as they have already agreed to do in the Congo Free State. This power, being in Christian governments, is really controlled by Christian voters, who should celebrate the opening of the twentieth century by bringing to full fruitage this golden tree of threefold emancipation. Meantime we must practice the parable of the leaven by heart-to-heart influences.

Unconscious Influences In Bickersteth's poem, "Yesterday, To-day and Forever," the entrance of a soul into heaven is described. After greetings and gratulations received from father, mother, sister, children, and those who had been led to Christ by his words—for he had been a preacher of the Gospel—a multitude gathered about him; they were a part of the unsuspected treasure which heaven contains. They, too, called him "father," and declared they had been brought there by the influence which he had unconsciously exerted over them by his faithful life.

One who is herself wont to say that McDonald's books came into her life "like an influence," and, later, that Moody's Christian personality as a fellow-worker was a transforming leaven, came herself, even by a single sentence, in the same transforming way, into a young Indian's life. "You had better use your education for the uplifting of your race" was the leaven-like sentence which succeeded in lifting this Indian, who was a college graduate, from the slough into which he had fallen, content to sit in a tent and weave baskets to sell. The Indian was aroused, left his baskets, entered a seminary to study for the ministry, and became an eloquent preacher and lecturer. He was wont to say: "It is a long way from the wigwam to the Chautauqua platform, but it was that sentence which started me out to bridge the chasm." Human words are often such a transforming leaven, but a mightier leaven is the divine Word.

WHEAT AND TARES

A Jewish rabbi had been preaching six years, and had never seen a New Testament. Providentially, a copy came into his possession. He determined to read it. He said: "As I read it enthralled me, and when I had concluded it I said: 'The book is from God.'" He then determined to read it again, comparing it with the Old Testament prophecies. His testimony then was: "The New Testament is the key that unlocks the Old Testament." And he became a Christian—a Christian Jew, and it is now his delight to preach the Saviour, whom he before denied.

THE CIRCLES OF LOVE

Christ Believed in the Devil His enemy. Why are these tares of evil in the world, in Christendom, in the Church? "The devil has done it," Christ says. That is pretty good authority for believing in the Spirit of Evil, the father of bad hearts. As God's Word grows up into living Christians, so the devil's words in foul literature produce foul men and women. The Bible clearly teaches that there are bad angels, with a mighty chief of wide influence. Which leads to another harder question: Why doesn't God kill the devil? We do not know; but we do know that, if evil were impossible, good would be equally impossible. But for freedom to go wrong, there would be no more virtue in going right in the case of a man than in the case of a machine. The field can not protect itself, but the heart can keep the devil from sowing his seed there. Jesus said to Peter: "Satan hath desired to have thee that he may sift thee as wheat [sifting all the wheat out]; but I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not."

Let both grow together. This does not mean that a Christian nation should not punish bad men. Nor can it mean that there should be no church discipline, for Christ himself told just how unfaithful brothers should be dealt with (Matt. 18: 15-18). It means that we must not expect to eliminate evil completely in this world or age.

Leaving the climax of the tragedy of the tally of real workers at prayer-meeting or teachers' meeting.

The Sultan's Debt

WILL it be necessary to send a United States squadron to the Bosphorus to collect the indemnity, due from the Sultan of Turkey, for the damage done to the property of American missionaries during the Armenian troubles? The question is causing anxious thought, and strong pressure is being exerted on the President and Cabinet to induce them to take that course. As explained in this journal on May 2, the Sultan has verbally admitted the justice of the claim, but with the evasive diplomacy characteristic of his government, has failed to pay it. A formal and peremptory demand for payment has been made by our minister, Mr. Straus, and, as no satisfaction was given, he quitted Constantinople; and it is authoritatively stated that he will not return until payment is made. His absence does not appear to trouble the Sultan, who is used to diplomatic snubs and is an adept in the art of resisting pressure from foreign governments. He understands clearly that the mutual jealousies of European powers prevent any one of them attacking him, and by playing one against another, he has succeeded in evading his obligations. He does not understand, however, that the United States are not influenced by the considerations that weigh with other nations and that it is not safe to trifle with our demands. The American public has already lost patience with him, and if the American Government should lose patience, too, Abdul Hamid might suffer humiliation. Happily, however, the President and his advisers are not likely to resort to force so long as there is any hope of securing satisfaction without it. The people who are urging extreme measures do not realize how serious a war with Turkey might prove. Although the poverty of the Turkish government is well known, it maintains an army capable, as was proved in the recent war with Greece, of a vigorous defence. It is also stated on good authority that Russia has promised to help the Sultan if he is attacked by the United States. The Bosphorus, to which it is suggested that our fleet be sent, is strongly fortified and could not be reduced without heavy loss. Besides this, the American Mission Boards have valuable property in the Turkish dominions, which would surely be destroyed on the outbreak of hostilities. It would appear, therefore, that something much more serious than an unpaid debt of $100,000 would be needed to justify us in entering on a conflict with Turkey. The apostle's advice in such cases is worthy of attention:

Why do ye not rather take wrong? Why do ye not rather suffer yourselves to be defrauded? (1 Cor. 6: 7).

An Alien Suitor

An action was brought recently in the United States Circuit Court in Boston, to which a remarkable defence was made. The suit was based on the Massachusetts law which makes an employer liable for the death of an employee, when negligence can be shown on the part of the employer. In this instance an Italian laborer had been killed and his widow succeeded in proving that it proper care had been taken in the construction and management of the works her husband would not have lost his life. The defence was that as she was a non-resident alien she had no right to sue under the statute. The judge over-ruled the plea. He said there was nothing in the law to show that there was any intention to restrict its benefits to citizens of the United States, and moreover that to admit such a plea would be to offer a direct encouragement to employers to employ aliens in order that they might escape responsibility for negligence. It is astonishing that any American citizen should have made such a plea, and it is very gratifying that the judge should have so summarily rejected it. Even the ancient Jews, who were necessarily the most exclusive of peoples, were forbidden to entertain such pleas.

Thou shalt not pervert the judgment of the stranger, nor of the fatherless; nor take a widow's raiment to pledge (Deut. 24: 17).

An Exchange of Babies

A curious blunder on the part of the officials of a hospital in Philadelphia has caused trouble in two families. Two babies were received at the hospital from the Temporary Home. They were ill with measles and were placed in the same ward. On their recovery both families were notified to take them away. One of the babies was motherless, but its grandfather, a sturdy Scotchman, promptly called at the hospital and took one of the children away. His wife had some doubt about its being their grandson, but the grandfather was sure and so was the child's father when he returned from his work and it was placed in his arms. They kept the child for a week, the grandmother's doubts increasing as she found herself unable to understand anything the child said. One day a neighbor, who happened to be in the house, heard the child talk and said he was talking German. He proved the truth of his assertion by giving the child what he asked for. Then the grandfather took the baby back to the hospital and complained of the mistake. A German mother was there complaining that she had received a baby that was not hers. The child did not understand German, and though it resembled her child, she was sure it did not belong to her. An exchange of babies was speedily made and both families were satisfied. The babies must have borne some resemblance to one another, otherwise it would not have needed a week to detect the mistake. Perhaps if both had spoken English a longer time might have been needed. It is often difficult to decide whether a person belongs to Christ's family, but in that case it is usually not the speech but the disposition and conduct that reveal imposture.

They come unto thee as the people cometh, and they sit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them: for with their mouth they show much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness (Ezek. 33: 31).

Braving Malaria

Two physicians are about to test in their own persons a theory they have adopted as to the origin of malaria. They will take up their residence on June 1 in the neighborhood of Cervellata, on the Roman Campagna, which has the reputation of being one of the deadliest places on the face of the earth. They are convinced that the disease which attacks persons living there is not due to the exhalations from the soil, as is generally supposed, but to the bites of a peculiarly venomous mosquito which has its habitat on the Campagna. The experimenters will live in a wooden building with double casements covered with zinc netting, which will also be placed under the eaves and on the chimney. During the day, when the chances of being bitten by the special species of malarial mosquito is very small, the men will work out of doors. They will retire early in the evening. If malaria does not develop after they have been living in this careful manner during the worst of the season, from June to October, in a spot where the worst form of malaria is prevalent, they will consider that it will absolutely demonstrate the truth of their theory. If they are mistaken, they will probably lose their lives; but if they are right, their experiment will be a great gain to science and will help physicians to cure the malaria which has proved so fatal to the people of those regions. Men, who will put their lives in peril that they may be the means of saving the lives of others, deserve the highest honor; but when men expose themselves to the moral miasma of the resorts of sinful men and women, merely to gratify their curiosity, they deserve the ruin that usually follows the hazardous experiment.

Enter not into the path of the wicked and go not in the way of evil men. Avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it and pass away (Prov. 4: 14).

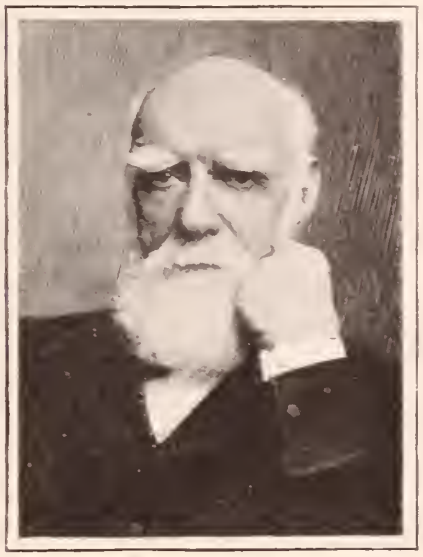
Canada's Munificent Citizen

A press dispatch from Montreal reports a remarkable act of munificence on the part of Lord Strathcona. He has raised a regiment of cavalry for service in South Africa, has defrayed the cost of their uniform and accoutrements, has paid the cost of transportation, and will maintain them while they are in the service. It is stated that the regiment is the best equipped that has been sent from Canada. Lord Strathcona's agents having spared neither money nor effort in providing everything that could add to the comfort and efficiency of the regiment. It is composed chiefly of Western men, many of them members of the mounted police. Some of the men traveled over a thousand miles to enlist. They will receive more than twice the army rate of pay, the whole cost being defrayed by Lord Strathcona. The total will be considerably over one million dollars, and if the war is prolonged it may reach two millions. There can be no question about the patriotism of a man who makes so magnificent a gift to his Queen.



LORD STRATHCONA

One may wish that the King of kings had many subjects able and willing to render such service to him. There are many people who would gladly go out as missionaries to extend the kingdom of the Prince of Peace if there were men like Lord Strathcona who would defray the cost of placing them in the field.

Worthy is the Lamb to receive power and riches and wisdom and strength and honor and glory and blessing (Rev. 5: 12).

BRIEF NOTES

Rev. F. B. Meyer is quoted as saying that the only atheists he met in India were men who had studied in European colleges.

According to the law as passed by Congress and signed by the President, the name of the island is "Porto Rico" and not "Puerto Rico."

Rev. Thomas Allen, one of the fraternal delegates to the Methodist Episcopal General Conference, has been elected President of the Wesleyan Conference.

The Cuban census shows a population of 1,572,797, of whom 443,420 can read and write; fifty per cent. are native whites and thirty-two per cent. negroes. Havana's population is 235,981.

Rev. C. M. Sheldon has accepted invitations from Scotland to make a preaching tour in that country this summer. His book, In His Steps, has been widely read by the Scotch people.

The New York Herald publishes the statement that a child has been born in Liverpool, England, with horns and club feet. Superstitious people believe that the child will prove to be Antichrist.

The Baroness Burdett-Coutts recently celebrated her eighty-fifth birthday by making large gifts to various philanthropic institutions. These gifts raise the total of her benefactions to five million dollars.

A series of special services, conducted by the Rev. M. S. Anderson, formerly of Syracuse, N. Y., will be held at the Door of Hope Gospel Mission, 805 Third Ave., New York, from May 10 to May 30,—Wednesday, Friday and Sunday, at 4 P.M., and every night at 8 P.M.

The Marquis de Gallifet, the French Secretary of War, has issued an order forbidding the sale of liquor in every military barracks throughout France and the colonies. The Marquis is a veteran general and has had abundant opportunities of knowing the effect of liquor-drinking on soldiers.

All inquiries about the last work of the late Bishop Newman, Conversations with Christ, should be addressed to Mrs. J. F. Newman, 150 Fifth Ave., New York. It is issued by Messrs. Eaton & Mains, and the proceeds of its sale are devoted to the support of the work long cherished by Bishop Newman, of aiding young men who are preparing for the ministry.

The new President of the English Baptist Union is Rev. Wm. Cuff, pastor of the Shoreditch Tabernacle. Mr. Cuff is one of the students of the Pastor's College, which was established by the late Pastor C. H. Spurgeon. He bears a strong resemblance in the style of his preaching to Mr. Spurgeon, and is a hard-working pastor in one of the very poorest districts of London.

Around the World with Josiah Allen's Wife

SAMANTHA IN CEYLON

THE TALIPOT PALM

ONE odd thing here in Ceylon is that foxes have wings and can fly. Josiah wanted to get one the worse way: he said that he would willin'ly carry it home in his arms for the sake of havin' it fly round over Jonesville, and sez he, "They are so smart, Samantha, they will git drunk jest as naterally as men do, they would feel to home in America." And they say they do steal palm wine out of bowls set to ketch it by the natives and are found under the trees too drunk to git home, not havin' wives or childer willin' to lead 'em home, I spoze, or accomidatin' policemen.

But I sez, "Don't you try to git the animals in America to drinkin', Josiah Allen." Sez I, "I should be mortified to death to see the old mair or Snip staggerin' round as men do, lookin' maudlin and silly; I should despise the idee of lowerin' the animals down to that state."

"Well, well, I don't spoze I can git one of these foxes anyway, though I might," sez he dreamily, "git one real drunk and carry it." But I guess he'll gin it up.

The jungles all round us wuz, I spoze, filled with wild animals. Elephants, tigers and serpents, big and little, besides monkeys and more harmless ones. The snake charmers did dretful strange things with 'em, but I didn't look on. I always said that if snakes would let me alone, I would let them alone. But they brought all sorts of things to sell: embroideries of all kinds, carved ivory, tortoise shell and all kinds of jewels. Paris and London gits some of their finest jewels here.

At the Shrine of the Tooth

Men and wimmen are all bejeweled from head to foot, children up to ten years of age are almost always naked, but wearin' bracelets, anklets and silver belts round their little brown bodies, sometimes with bells attached. Some of the poorer natives chew beetle nuts which make their teeth look some like an old tobacco chewer's. They eat in common out of a large bowl and I spoze they don't use napkins or finger bowls. But unlike the poor in our frozen winter cities, as Arvilly said, there is little danger of their starving; warm they will be from year's end to year's end, and the bread tree and cocoanut palm supply food, and the traveler's palm supplies a cool, delicious drink. There is one palm tree here—the talipot—that blooms when about forty years old with a loud noise and immegiately dies. Arvilly said that that made her think of some political candidates.

Dorothy and Robert Strong and Miss Meechim wanted to go to Kandy, the capital of Ceylon, only seventy milds away, to see the tooth of Boodha. Miss Meechim said she wanted to weep over it. She is kinder romantic in spots, and Josiah hearn her and said, soty vosey, to me, "You won't ketch me weepin' over any tooth unless it is achin' like the old Harry."

But I kinder wanted to see the tooth. I had hearn Thomas J. read a good deal about Prince Siddartha, Lord Buddha, and how he wuz "right gentle, though so wise, princely of mean, yet softly mannered, modest, deferent and tender hearted, though of fearless blood," and how he renounced throne and wealth and love for his people, to "seek deliverance and the unknown light."

I had always pictured him as looking more beautiful than any other mortal man, but of this more anon.

Josiah and Arvilly concluded to go too; it wuz only a four hours' ride. We passed coffee plantations, immense gardens and forests full of ebony trees, the strange banion tree that seems to walk off all round itself and plant its great feet solidly in the earth, and then step off agin', makin' a hull forest of itself, and satin wood trees, and India rubber, bamboo, balsam, bread fruit, pepper and cinchony or quinine bushes, tea and rice plantations. Our road led up the mountain side and anon the city of Kandy could be seen sot down in a sort of a valley on the mountain. We had our dinner at the Queen's Hotel, and from there sallied out to see the sights. Not fur from the hotel wuz a artificial lake three milds round, built by some king. His very name is forgotten, whilst the water of this little lake he dug out splashes up on the shore jest as fresh as ever. All round the lake is a beautiful driveway, where all sorts of vehicles wuz seen. Big barouches full of English people, down to a little two-wheeled cart drawed by one ox. Crowds of people, jewels, bright color, anon a poor woman carrying her baby astride her hip, men, wimmen, children, a brilliant, movin' panorama.

The tooth of Buddha is kep' in a temple called Maligawa, or Temple of the Tooth, and I laid out to have a considerable number of emotions as I stood before it. But imagine a tooth bigger than a hull tooth brush! What kind of a mouth must Lord Buddha have had if that wuz a sample of his teeth? Why, his mouth, at the least calculation, must have been as big as a ten-quart pan! Where wuz the beauty and charm of that countenance—that mouth that had spoke such wise words?

I don't believe that it wuz his tooth. I hain't no idee it wuz. No human bein' ever had a mouth big enough to hold thirty odd monsters like that, let alone this noble prince, "with godlike face and eyes enwrapped, lost in care for them he knew not, save as fellow lives." There is a mistake somewhere. There wuz lots of natives round worshipin' it. But I felt that if Prince Siddartha could speak out of Nirvana he would say:

"HE WUZ TIED INTO AN ARM-CHAIR AND SWUNG OFF BY ROPES"

"Don't worship that tooth, Josiah Allen's wife: it hain't mine nor never wuz; but worship the principles of love and compassion and self-sacrifice I tried to teach to my people." And almost instinctively I sez: "I will, Prince Siddartha, I will."

And Josiah sez: "What say, Samantha?" And I sez:

"Let's go out, Josiah, and see the sacred tree. Bo, that they worship."

"I'll go," sez Josiah; "but you won't git me to worship no tree, I can tell you that. I've cleared off too many acres and chopped and sawed too much cord wood to worship a tree."

"Did I ask you to, Josiah?" sez I. "It would break my heart to see you bend your knee to any idol. But this is the oldest tree in the world; it is over two thousand years old."

"Wall, it ort to be cut down, Samantha, if it is that age; it is seasoned and would make crackin' good lumber."

Oh how oncongenial Josiah Allen is by spells; he seemed to be quite a distance off from me as he made them remarks. But Robert Strong and Dorothy shared my feelin's of reverence for a tree whose mighty branches might have shaded the the head of our Lord and whose leaves might have rustled with the wind that swept the brow of Napoleon and Cæsar and Pharo for all I knew. There wuz some natives burnin' camphor flowers before it and some on 'em had hung up little lamps in its branches. They say that one hundred thousand pilgrims visit it each year. Well, we driv round some, seein' all the strange, picturesque sights; past tea plantations and a tea factory, the botanical gardens where we driv milds through its beautiful tree shaded avenoos; there are twenty-five thousand kinds of plants here in this garden; some say it is the finest collection in the world. And we driv past some of the native dwellings, and some beautiful villas where Europeans live durin' the warm season, past the library, a beautiful building standing on pillars on the shores of the lake, and by the Governor's palace, handsome enough for any king and queen, and we got back to Colombo middlin' late and tired out. But as tired as Josiah wuz he talked considerable to me about "Bud," as familiar as if he wuz well acquainted with him, but I sez, "You mean B-u-d-d-h, Josiah." But I thought to myself as the Chinese have five thousand different names for him one more wouldn't neither make nor break him.

Beautiful Madras

Well, the next dav we embarked for Calcutta. Our steamer stopped two milds off from Madras. The wind was so high we couldn't get any nearer. None of our party went ashore but Robert Strong. He wuz tied into an arm-chair and swung off by ropes down into a little boat that wuz dashin' up and down fur below.

I wouldn't done it fur a dollar bill. The surf boats are deep, made of bark and bamboo, shaped some like our Indian canoes. But no matter how much the winds blew or the boats rocked, lots of native peddlers come aboard to sell jewelry, fans, dress stuffs; and snake charmers come, and fakirs, doin' their strange tricks, that I d'no how they do, nor Josiah don't.

Madras has more than half a million inhabitants, and it looked well from the steamer: handsome villas, beautiful tropical trees, and hull forests of cactus ablaze with their gorgeous blossoms. It bein' Sunday whilst on our way from Madras to Calcutta the captain read service, and afterwards made his Sunday inspection of the crew. The sailors and cooks wuz Hindus, the stewards English and Scotch. The crew had on short white trousers, long white jackets and white caps, all on 'em wuz barefooted.

We sailed acrost the Bay of Bengal, where I spoze Bengal tigers wuz hidin' in the adjacent jungles, though we didn't meet any and didn't want to. And so on to the Hoogly river, one of the mouths of the Ganges, and on to Calcutta.

Calcutta is over four thousands milds from Hongkong. And oh, my heart! how fur! how fur from Jonesville. Most fourteen thousands milds from our own vine and apple trees and the children. It made my head turn round so that I tried to furgit it.

As we approached Calcutta we seemed to be travelin' through big gardens more beautiful than our own country can boast of; rich, strange, tropical trees and shrubs and flowers grew luxuriant around the pleasant villas. The English district with its white two-story houses made me think some of an American village. We went to the Great Eastern hotel, right opposite the gardens of the Viceroy's palace.

We had pleasant rooms that would have been pretty hot, but great fans are swung up in our room and the hired help swing 'em by a rope that goes out into the hall. It beats all how much help there is here, the halls seemed full on 'em, but what would our hired help say if we made 'em dress like these Hindus? They wear short pantaloons that don't come down to their knees and then they wind a long strip of white cloth round their thighs and fasten it round their waist, leavin' their right shoulder and arm bare naked. An American family of four livin' in Calcutta have thirty servants, ten of 'em pullin' at these punkeys or fans. They don't eat in the house of their employer; but in a cabin outside.

Like "The Garden of Eden"

There is a long, beautiful street called The Strand, shaded by banyan and palm trees; on one side on't is the park so lovely that it is called the Garden of Eden, full of beautiful trees, shrubs and flowers, pagodas, little temples and shrines. Josiah and I and Tommy went there in the evenin' and hearn beautiful music. Josiah wanted to ride in a palanquin. It is a long black box and looks some like a hearse. I hated to see him git in, it made me forebode. But he enjoyed his ride and afterwards I sot off in one, Josiah in one also nigh by with Tommy. One side of it comes off so you can git in and set on a high cushion and read or knit. I took my knittin' and most knit one of Josiah's heels whilst I rid by palaces and elephants and camels and fakirs and palm trees. Oh, Jonesville yarn! you never expected to be knit amid scens like this. I can knit and admire scenery first rate. And my blue and white yarn seemed to connect me with Jonesville in some occult way, and then I knew Josiah would need his socks before we got home.

Seein' that the other ladies did so I had throwed my braize veil gracefully over my head instead of my bunnet. The natives are as fond of jewels here as they are in Ceylon. Women with not a rag on down to their waists will have four or five chains on, and bangles on their naked arms. They spend all their earnin's on these ornaments and wear 'em day and night. Well, seein' they don't have any other clothes hardly, mebby it is best for 'em to keep holt on 'em.

We went by some wimmen preparin' manure for fuel; it wuz made into lumps and dried. The wimmem wuz workin' away all covered with chains and bangles and rings; Josiah looked on 'em engaged in that menial and onwelcome occupation, and sez he:

"To see wimmen to work in the barnyard, Samantha, has put a new idee into my head."

I never asked him what it wuz, but spozed it had reference to Philury and mebby me, but I shall never go into that work, never.

One day we went to the American mission school and see the native children settin' flat on the floor. Josiah wuz awful worked up to see 'em settin' down in such a oncomfortable posture, and he said to me that if he had some tools and lumber he would make 'em some seats. But that is their way of settin' to study their lessons.

WORSHIPERS IN THE "TEMPLE OF THE TOOTH"

Among 'em wuz a little girl with a red spot on her forward, indicatin' that she wuz married, but don't spoze that she had gone to keepin' house yet. Girls are married sometimes at six or seven, but their husbands don't claim 'em till they're ten or twelve. Good land! they're nothin' but babies then; I used to hold Tirzah Ann on my lap at that age. Widders never marry again, and are doomed to a wretched life of degradation and slavery; I guess that is the reason why some on 'em had ruther be burnt up with their relics than to live on to suffer so. How much they need the religion of love and mercy our Saviour come to teach! Our missionaries are doin' a blessed work, literally loosin' the chains of the captives, and settin' at liberty them that are bound.

One evenin' we met a bridal procession, the groom was ridin' in a peacock-shaped gilt chariot drawed by four horses, accompanied by a band of music; a big crowd of friends follered him, and coolies bearing torches; it seemed as if he wanted to show himself off all he could. When they got to the house of the bride, they took her in a closed palanquin and meached away to the house of the groom. As in some other countries, females play a minor part in the tune of life; wimmen and children can't eat at the table with their husband and father, and he sets to the table and she sets down on the floor.

Miss Meechim exclaimed loudly about the awful position of wimmen here, but Arvilly told her that "though wimmen at home had crep' up a little so she could set to the table and pour the tea, yet at banquets of honor she wuz never seen and at the political table, where men proudly sot and partook, wimmen still sot on the floor and couldn't git a bite."

Miss Meechim didn't dain a reply, but turned her talk onto the dretful idee of widders bein' burnt with their dead husbands. The English won't allow it where they can help it, but it is still practised in way back regions, and Arvilly said that she believed that some American widders, who had had their property took from them by the family of the deceased and had their unborn children willed away from 'em by law, suffered enough sight more than they would if they had burnt themselves up with their relics: to say nothin' of widders bein' burnt up twice in America, first through their own firey agony, and then seein' their children set fire to by whiskey dealt to 'em by the will of the rulers of the land.

Arvilly always would have the last word. Miss Meechim kinder snorted and tosted her head and held in.

I spoze it wuz partly on Robert Strong's account, he bein' high connected and rich, that we wuz all invited to a garden party gin by Mr. and Miss Curzon, she that wuz Miss Leiter, who used to be one of our neighbors, as you may say, out in Chicago, U. S. And then I spoze that it wuz partly on my account they'd hearn of me, without any doubt, and craved a augience. Josiah thought that it wuz on his account that we wuz invited; he thinks he is a ornament to any festive throng.

But 'tennyrate invited we wuz, and go we did, the hull caboodle on us, all but Tommy, who stayed to home with the good English maid that Miss Meechim had hired to take Aronette's place, but never, never to fill it.

Mourning for Aronette

Oh, Aronette! sweet girl! where are you? Where are you? So my heart called out time and time agin'; sometimes in the dead of night on my wakeful pillow, and anon when I wuz lookin' for her in places that I didn't want to find her. So did Dorothy's heart call out to her. I knew she wuz lookin' for her always, seekin' her with sad eyes full of tears, looking, longing for the playmate of her childhood, the loving, gentle helper and companion of her youth.

Miss Meechim didn't speak of her so often as she thought of her I believe, but she grew thin after her loss, and when grief for a person ploughs away your flesh you can call yourself a mourner. She lost five pounds and a half in less than a month; next to Dorothy she loved her.

Arvilly openly and often bewailed the loss of the one she loved next to Waitstill Webb; I wuzn't anywhere in Arvilly's affections to what she wuz, though she sets store by me, and Tommy cried himself to sleep many a night talking about her, and wonnerin' where she wuz, and if somebody wuz abusin' her, or if she wuz to the bottom of the ocean. Why, he would rack my mind and pierce my heart so I would have to give him candy to get his mind off; I used pounds in that way, though I knew it wuz hurtful, but didn't know what to do.

We often thought and spoke of poor Lucia, too, and that poor broken-hearted father who wuz searching through the world for her and would never stop his mournful search till he found her, or till death found him, but our hearts didn't ache for her as they did for the loss of our own.

Martha wuz a kind, good girl, but she wuzn't Aronette, our dear one, our lost one. She wuz jest a helper, doin' her work and earnin' her wages, that wuz all, but she was good natured and offered to look after Tommy, and we all went to the Viceroy's reception and garden party and had a real good time. I had hearn that one of the widder Albert's boys wuz to be there and that had made me more anxious than ever to go.

Under the Evening Lamp

By Margaret E. Sangster

IN THE SUNRISE KINGDOM

WE have our little fathers and mothers here in America: children who begin very early in life the task and toil of caring for their small baby brothers and sisters. In Japan, the older child carries the baby on his back, and the burden must sometimes be a heavy one and interfere with the caretaker's freedom, but complaints are not heard, for the Japanese are patient and amiable, even in nursery and schoolroom days. Our threefold picture shows us in scene first the children, with the babies peeping over the shoulders of their nurses, and one happy little creature in a sort of bamboo cage—which is rather a good idea for a wee laddie just at the investigating and exploring age. The second scene to the right, is an illustration of a game under the cherry trees—not unlike our familiar blind man's buff—and the picture to the left, shows a hotel, and on the entrance of a guest, the entire household, servants and retinue are giving an Oriental welcome, prostrating themselves in reverent salutation at his appearance.

SCENES AMONG THE PICTURESQUE PEOPLE OF THE SUNRISE KINGDOM

An Excellent Style

No one at the Ecumenical Council who heard Miss Snigh, the Hindu lady who is professor of English literature at Lucknow College, India, failed to be surprised at the amazing facility in the use of the English tongue, and her beautiful selection of the word to fit her thought. We learn that Miss Snigh's practice has been to read over and over some of the great books, masterpieces of English, in poetry, history and ethics, and thus she has formed her singularly happy and direct style. One may almost always know from the choice of phrases and expressions in ordinary conversation, whether or not people keep good company in their books. And in writing, this is still more evident. The possessor of an excellent style is the reader of excellent books, and insensibly derives from good authors their way of putting things, as well as their opinions, facts and impressions.

The Superfluous Pussy

I can remember when humane persons, otherwise gentle and amiable, thought it no cruelty to lose a cat which it inconvenienced them to keep. Poor pussy would be captured and tied up in a bag, and after dark, by winding ways, would be carried a long distance from home and dropped, a forlorn little stranger among strangers. As a cat's local attachments are singularly strong, this procedure was very cruel. The cat often came back, sometimes after days of travel and effort; came back lean, scrawny and pitiful, an object for compassion. To desert a cat—of all creatures one of the most home-loving—and to leave its food and shelter to the chances of its making friends, is now acknowledged to be a very heartless deed, and few people do it. If pussy must be left or be disposed of, put her to sleep in a box with a sponge full of chloroform. If she can be kept in life and health in a good home among kind caretakers, that is better; but do not abandon her to starve or send her forth to vagrancy. "Nobody's cat" is a poor, helpless being, indescribably sad to a cat lover. The cast-off animal, as well as the cast-off human being, is a reflection on humanity.

When We Hear Preaching

We do not go to church to be amused, nor to be entertained, nor to be enlivened with eloquent stories, nor pleased with poetic fancies. Primarily, we go to church to worship God. The sermon of our minister is part of the worship. It is designed for our instruction, and it should open to us some new glimpse of divine truth. Often our mental attitude is so antagonistic, or so impatient, or dull, or we are so preoccupied that our souls are like houses with doors locked and shutters barred. We are much too apt to blame the minister when we hear a sermon which does not interest us. In nine out of ten cases, the fault is in ourselves. Numbers of people never in their lives learned how to listen. They have no power of consecutive thought. They do not pay attention to a preacher, but allow their minds to wonder far afield. Only by being attentive and reverent can we receive good from a sermon. If we pray for our minister we shall be apt to derive benefit from his teachings, not otherwise to be expected.

The Foreign Missionary

The other evening I was privileged to be one of a company where among the guests were many missionaries. Men and women who had worked for Christ in Turkey, in Armenia, in India, in China, in Corea, in Hawaii, in Japan, in Syria, in the great realm of Australia were in that group. It seemed to me a hallowed group and I felt as if Jesus Christ were present there with his own dear disciples. More than one of those simple, earnest and brave missionaries had faced death, in famine, in plague, in fever, and in massacre, and had not been afraid; had battled for Christ in the darkness, and had won souls for him. Quiet, simple, and childlike were their manners, but their faces shone with the radiance of the inner light, the light of the indwelling Spirit. Most of them were soon going back to their posts of duty. They came to the great Ecumenical...

Good Words

They are so easy to give—yet how many hunger and thirst in vain for them! We peck at this little fault, that little fault in our friend, letting millions of little virtues go by without recognition. Be not sparing in the cordial of kind thought and speech; encourage virtues; feed not failings with censure and reproach.

A SONG FOR THE HOMELAND

A SONG for the homeland, its valleys a hills,
Its lakes lying blue, and its silvery rills;
A song for its fields and their harvest of go
A song for its mines with their wealth untold;
The homeland, the dear land, the land of t free—
O beautiful Mother, our hearts cling to thee

A song for the Church, with its call un prayer,
For the comfort and healing and joy we ha there.
A song for the school, with the flag on its ro
For the lessons it teaches for manhood proof.
A song for true brotherhood, sturdy and fr
O homeland, dear homeland, a chorus for the

A song for our Sabbath, that dawns with peace,
From greed and from bondage a day release;
A song for our Bibles, wide open and fair,
For our Sunday Schools dear and the ban gathered there;
For the men and the women whose service free,
O homeland, fair homeland, a chorus to thee

And, oh, may our homeland be cleansed fr all stain,
And pure as the fathers endowed to remain
Its banner of stars be flung out to the bree
Its fearless ships sail on the path of the sea
God bless it!—the dear land, the home of t free;
O beautiful Mother, our hearts cling to thee

Stupid Children

I do not like the adjective, and I thi it is usually misapplied. Children are so times slow, but they are seldom stup If they are, it is almost always beca they have been terrorized by severe a stern treatment, or foolishly forced precocity in the infantile period by v and silly parents. A little brain urg unduly in its first three years may receive impressions quickly nor easily tain them at ten. The kindergarten i great boon to little children, insur them natural development. No li child is ridiculed or scolded or blam for a mistake by a wise kindergarter Mothers are beginning to appreciate value of kindergarten knowledge on th own part, and they are often the bet for taking a regular series of lessons kindergarten lore.

Many Helpers for Starving India

THE interest which children are showing in the blessed work of relieving famine-stricken India is one which would deeply touch the starving people could they realize its significance. Little hands holding out food in Christ's name to the hungry and the dying of a far-away pagan land! Surely that is a beautiful testimony to the spirit of helpfulness and love which abides in the religion of Jesus. The following are illustrations of the character of many letters received at this office:

BESSIE WHITESELL

VERNA COMBS

Hugo Paul Wise, Middle Branch, O., writes:

I will send you $5.00 for the starving children in far-off India. I pity them so much. My papa has taken THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for years. I read it and was so troubled over the pictures of those poor, starving children that I have worked very hard to earn money to send to them. I am eight years old, and I will tell you how I earned some of my money: I sold dandelion, horse-radish and bantam eggs; and I carried messages, and I saved all my earnings. Papa says he will also enclose $5.00, so I hope we may at least save a few people from starving.

A lady of Hoosick Falls, N. Y., sends $4, saying:

This amount was solicited and collected for the starving people of India by Lynn McEachron, because he wished to do something practically helpful for these suffering people. His effort has been gladly given for the cause.

A wee maid, Verna L. Combs, writes with her own hand:

I am six years old. I saw the pictures of the starving children. I wanted to earn some money myself to send them. My mamma made me some candy and popcorn. I sold it in town for $1.47. Will you please send this to them to buy something to eat, and oblige a little girl.

From the Pacific Coast, the large sum of $12.11 has come from a very little woman, named Bessie S. Whitesell, who, not content with doing well, wants to do better, and asks us to send her a mite-box.

HUGO P. WISE

Another letter from California contains $4.55; and Mrs. E. D. Capwell tells how it was raised:

Florence, Blanche and Howard, our three little children, after seeing the pictures in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, got their banks, and with their little hearts full of pity, gave all the pennies they had been saving up for a long time. Florence, the oldest, just nine, took the paper to school and collected a little more. Their papa and I helped them with a contribution and so they had a total of $4.55, which they send, grieving that they have not more.

LYNN McEACHRON

The Citizens' Indian Relief Committee of Charlottesville, Va., through Mr. J. M. Robertson, sends $162.62, collected largely through the efforts of Chairman G. W. Oliver and the local paper, The Progress.

From Dr. D. B. Bobb, and Messrs. E. S. Aluman and Walker Templeton, an executive committee of citizens of Dakota, Ill., comes $142, the gift of the good people of that place, which they desire shall be "used to purchase corn for the vessel now being loaded."

A Sunday School's Gift

HANCOCK, MASS.

Dear Brother: I presented the appeal for India to my church and Sunday School on Palm Sunday. A committee of Sunday School children collected $25.85, which our treasurer forwards to-day. God bless the givers and the gifts, as well as the chief factor—THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its staff.

REV. W. F. ZELL, First Baptist Church.

Nebraska's Noble Gift

Surely God will bless the ever-generous West with a new blessing for the noble way in which it comes to the help of the starving. Its fields should teem more and more every year with grain ready for bountiful harvest. Here is a brief, hurried letter, eloquent of noble endeavor:

BRETHREN: Enclosed find draft for $2,800 which is a part of money I am collecting under the direction of Rev. Dr. R. G. Hobbs for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Ship. You may expect more soon. I will get you several thousand dollars more I think. Will send names later. (REV.) G. L. HOSFORD, University Place, Neb.

The little sons of Rev. Oren F. Chesebro, Stackville, Neb., remember the starving. Their father sends $2.50, saying:

Dear Editor: Our two boys send from their penny banks the greater part of this free-will offering.

A Birthday Thank-Offering

KUSHEQUA, PA.

Dear Sir:—This is my birthday—the first after two dangerous surgical operations, in consequence of which I am still lying in my bed in the hospital. Just before I was taken ill, I started out to get subscriptions for the famine sufferers, and now for a thank-offering for my recovery, I send one-half of a birthday present which I received, to you, to be used in buying part of the shipload of grain for the India sufferers. I send the other half to a missionary under whose preaching I joined the church.

AGNES C——.

TWO LITTLE GIVERS

The "Alabaster Box"

D. S. R., ——, Pa. The enclosed banker's draft represents the result of self-denial known only to God and myself. Neither my family nor my friends know anything of it and I do not wish them to know. I wanted to do something to please my dear Lord, something for his sake—just an alabaster box of ointment, so I have done this at personal cost. May the lives it may save be dedicated to our Lord and Saviour.

Their Town Will Help

A contribution of $31.85, sent in by Mrs. H. D. Whitefield, Wilkinsburg, Pa., represents, she says, the "community of our church. We are now planning for our entire town to help."

A Newspaper's Aid

The Wilkes-Barre Record is helping nobly. Manager J. R. Boyd sends $210 for India, contributed through that paper. The Record has helped us in good works before.

Lake Crystal's Offering

Lake Crystal's name will be written high in the book of Christian deeds. Etta Woleben, of that place, writes:

The churches of our little city (Lake Crystal, Minn.) appointed a committee to canvass for the suffering people of India, and as a result I send you $104.15. The Young People's Societies of our churches started the movement, and the pastors of all churches co-operated heartily.

Rheumatism and Gout

A prominent physician writes:

DEAR SIRS;—Replying to yours on the use of TARTARLITHINE as a remedy in the treatment of gout, I will say that I have used it in the treatment of about a dozen cases with results that are a little less than wonderful. The characteristic feature of its action is the rapidity with which patients improve under its use. An improvement is noticeable within 24 hours. One of the most striking cases was that of a physician suffering from gout, muscular rheumatism and frequent bilious headaches. I prescribed Tartarlithine, and in one week there was absolute disappearance of all of the uric acid manifestations. The nervous irritability disappeared, and he stated that he had done the best week's work which he had accomplished in years.

Tartarlithine is supplied in bottles containing 50 doses at $1.00 and can be obtained of all druggists or post-free by mail. Pamphlets with Testimonials sent FREE.

Uplifting Fallen Women

A Great Industrial Florence Crittenton School to be Started—Practical Work for Erring Girls

ON THE MISSION STEPS

A great Industrial School at which reclaimed women may fit themselves for callings, by which they may earn an honest living, is soon to be built. The ground upon which the institution is to be erected has already been donated by Mr. Charles N. Crittenton, the Christian philanthropist who has done so much for the redemption of fallen womanhood. The Industrial School will stand on a lot, 300 x 400, overlooking the Hudson River. It is to be operated in connection with the "Mother Mission," as 21–23 Bleecker Street, New York, is called, in consequence of its having been the first created of the chain of Homes now bearing the same name. The new building will be large and commodious; and here erring girls, who have shown a sincere desire to reform, will be instructed in sewing, dress-making, millinery, laundry work, cooking and other manual arts. The "Mother Mission" is to be retained as a receiving home, where cases will be investigated and put on probation, as it were, before admission to the benefits of the school; it will also be used as a training school for missionaries. The work at the "Mother Mission" has long since outgrown present accommodations, and Mr. Crittenton's new gift is most timely. Every woman applying at the Mission is provided with food, help and advice.

Mrs. Barrett, General Superintendent of the National Florence Crittenton Mission, in a recent visit to this office, said of the need and progress of the national rescue work: "Many more girls apply at all the homes than we have room for. Few institutions will receive the erring girl about to become a mother, after she has sunk to the slums and Chinatown; yet, as a matter of fact, there is often more hope for these wretched ones than for those with whom sin has not dealt so harshly. It is our rule that mothers care for their children, for we think that nothing else will so make a girl realize the responsibility she has assumed: love and service to her child wakes something better in her, and it is easier to turn her heart to her Saviour than it would be if she were allowed to transfer her burden to others. Hundreds of girls, who would otherwise be a menace to society, have graduated from Florence Crittenton Homes into domestic positions where they are earning honest livelihoods. Sometimes, a reformed girl throws herself heart and soul into the work of reclaiming others, who are as she was, in which case she makes one of the most effective of missionaries." Mrs. Barrett spoke with peculiar thankfulness of one instance, where a girl of extraordinary mental qualifications, has become so useful as to be in demand in missions, East and West; her great gifts, which had made her all the more dangerous as a servant of sin, now consecrated to the uplifting of fallen humanity. One of our pictures illustrates a not altogether uncommon sight in this rescue work—a girl prostrate on the Mission steps, weak from suffering, lack of food, drink, or all combined. In the present instance, Mrs. Barrett returning near midnight from an errand of mercy, almost stumbled over a poor creature unconscious on the Mission steps, whither she had dragged herself instead of to the river. It is not always the "woman who is a sinner" thus seeking refuge, but often the tried and destitute girl fleeing temptation.

To-day, there are about forty-five Florence Crittenton Homes, scattered from Massachusetts to California, North Dakota to Texas, besides hundreds of Florence Crittenton Rescue Circles doing a like work, but unable to support a home. On a leaflet issued by the national organization giving names of cities where homes are located, appears this sentence: "Any one desiring a girl looked up in any of these cities, will, upon corresponding with the home in that city, be furnished all assistance possible, and the girl, if found, will be given shelter." This brief legend has brought inquiries from all parts of the country concerning missing girls, the number showing how many homes carry a sorrow needing just the aid the Florence Crittenton Missions give. The estimated number of girls in houses of sin in America is 300,000; their average life five years. The National Florence Crittenton Mission is chartered by special act of the United States Government to work among this army of perishing girls, and it is the only national organization of its kind in the world. Its work proves that over sixty per cent. of these women can be reclaimed. In the forty-five homes now existing there are between 3,000 and 4,000 girls and over 600 children. A call has been issued for a $500,000 endowment fund, made up of contributions large or small to perpetuate this Christlike work for womanhood, childhood and humanity. "And this call," says Mrs. Barrett, "was only issued after Mr. Crittenton had so far exhausted his own fortune that he could not entirely insure its own continuance himself." All communications concerning this work should be addressed to Mrs. Kate Waller Barrett, National Florence Crittenton Mission, Washington, D. C.

A Blessed Bit of Real Religion*

ON a little farm situated in a narrow valley among the foot-hills, resided a farmer with his wife and daughter. He was of Puritan descent, above the average in intelligence, read the county paper, and felt a sort of pride in boasting that he had not crossed the threshold of the old meeting-house for more than twenty years. He was past fifty and not physically strong. One day, returning from his field, he fell from his wagon and was injured. The village doctor was quickly summoned. He notified the minister, and the two together went immediately to the poor man's assistance.

When informed that it would be several weeks before he could do much work, he began to worry about his unharvested crops. He was too poor to hire. His wife was too feeble to do much; and the daughter would be able to do very little alone.

Mr. Sayley, the minister, on hearing these remarks and seeing the troubled look on the man's face, stepped up to the bedside, and, taking him by the hand, said, "Do not worry, my good friend, I will see you out of this trouble."

The man's eyes flew open, and he stared at the young minister with a puzzled expression on his face, and asked, "How will you do it?"

"I and a few Endeavorers will gather in your crops."

"You will!" he exclaimed.

"Yes, I usually do what I promise, with God's help."

"Well, I have heard of the Endeavorers, but did not know before that they did such things. Are you one of them?"

"I am."

"Then you are a minister and an Endeavorer too? Is that it?"

"That is just it; and we are all Christ's humble servants."

"Well, it beats all! But say, young man, how am I to pay you? I am poor."

"We Endeavorers will look to Christ for pay in this case. All we now ask of you is that you obey the doctor's orders and get well."

After a moment's thoughtful silence, in which he evidently tried to grasp the meaning of the minister's words, he looked up and remarked, "Say, young man, I like that kind of religion."

"O! we are commanded, you know, to bear one another's burdens."

"That's it! That's it!" was the only response the sick man made to this last remark. It was enough, however, to show that his heart and mind responded to the truth and soul of practical Christianity.

Tip Solves the Food Problem†

"TIP," whispered his little sister, as they followed Mrs. Curtiss downstairs, "does yer really think we're going to get breakfast?"

"Dunno," said Tip; "some sorter, maybe. Can't be much, yer know, after last night."

But the milk pitcher might never have been empty, it looked so full; and there stood a fresh loaf, round and brown, just waiting to be cut in slices; with a great dish of smoking hominy. The two waifs asked no more questions, and made no remarks. And again the minister and his good helpers watched this meeting of demand and supply, with feelings that rather hindered their own breakfast. But Tip ciphered his way to one conclusion:

"Tell yer what, Lippet," he whispered, as they left the table, "'taint no sort o' wonder there's so little t' eat in town; folks out here in the kentry eats so much."

Then another thought got astir.

"Does yer eat all the time here anyway?" he said, turning round to the minister. "Or is yer makin' company o' us?"

"Oh, yes, we eat breakfast, dinner and supper every day all the year round," said Mr. Best. Tip looked at him.

"We doesn't in town," he said. "'Bout onct is all we gets time for, gen'ly; an' we calls it jest which, accordin'."

"According to what?"

"Why, t' when we finds it," said Tip. "It don't stand round waitin' fer yer as it does up here. Yer's got t' hunt; right sharp, too, sometimes."

Books Received

A Story of the Past. By Mrs. S. S. Bridges. This booklet contains more gloom and darkness to the square inch than it would be generally conceived possible to put in print. Pp. 20. Publishers, Gazette Book and Job Print, New Albany, Miss.

Chart of Christ's Journeyings. Prepared by C. E. Arnold, A.M. Four small maps and a harmonized table present in the smallest compass possible a sketch of Christ's life and ministry; of value to Sunday School teachers and Bible students generally. Publishers, John D. Wattles & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

A Kent Squire. Being a Record of Gwynnett, Esquire, of Thornbaugh. By Frederick W. Hayes, with sixteen full-page illustrations by the author. Here we have a racy and entertaining story, with a strong historical flavor that adds much to its interest. Pp. 527. Publishers, The F. M. Lupton Publishing Company, New York.

Bulbs and Blossoms. By Amy Le Feuvre, author of Probable Sons and Teddy's Button, etc. This brief sketch has an irresistible charm about it. It deals with Easter lilies, and is full of their redolence and of comfort to those who mourn the death of dear ones. The characters are simple and wonderfully attractive. Pp. 50. Price, 50 cents. Publishers, Fleming H. Revell Co., New York.

Addresses on Foreign Missions. Delivered before the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. By Richard S. Storrs, D.D., LL.D. Dr. Storrs has often been called, and with much reason, the prince of pulpit orators in America. His thoughts never breathe with more vigorous life, nor his words burn with more vehement glow than when he speaks of missionary work, and the pages of this work are specimens of his most moving eloquence. Pp. 187. Published by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Boston.

Doings in Derryville. By Lewis V. Price. This is a wholesome story of Christian Endeavor that has the charm of fiction and the ring of fact. The reading of it will be likely to bring about its reproduction in many directions. Pp. 212. Publishers, United Society of Christian Endeavor, Boston, Mass.

Fresh Air. By Anna B. Warner, author of A Nest of Stories. O'NEILL'S

The Three Greatest Bicycle Bargains in the City of New York

$15.75, $19.75, $24.75

THEY came from three of the most reliable bicycle concerns in this country, and are without doubt the best values on the market to-day. They are handsomely finished, light running, strictly up-to-date, and, above all,

THEY ARE SAFE WHEELS TO RIDE

We guarantee each one for the calendar year of 1900. A few particulars:

The "Hampden Bicycle" at $15.75. These wheels will be sold by other concerns this season under their original names at $40.00, and are fully guaranteed. The fittings cones, cups, etc., are made from Thompson's selected steel, carefully tempered, full flush-joint frame, rat-trap or rubber pedals, automatic padded saddle, first-class adjustable handle-bars, and guaranteed tires. Two colors to choose from, black and maroon.

Men's Wheels—20, 22, and 24 Inch Frames.
Women's Wheels—20 and 22 Inch Frames.

The O'Neill $19.75 Bicycles embrace all the new mechanical ideas for this season, and are fully guaranteed for the entire year. They are made by one of the best concerns in this country, and under their own name sell for $50.00 each. The fittings are strictly first class, and they have guaranteed tires, full nickel fork with square double crown. Finish, black and maroon.

The O'Neill $24.75 Bicycles are the equal of any bicycle ever made. They are highly finished, have fine bearings, and the frame is made of Shelby's seamless tubing, having full flush joints. Internal fasteners, Baldwin detachable chains, and full nickel fork with triple crown.

Men's Wheels—in 20, 22, and 24 Inch Frames.
Women's Wheels—in 21 and 23 Inch Frames.

REGISTERED TRADE MARK.

SKIRT BINDINGS

The S. H. & M. trade-mark on the back or label of skirt bindings means the highest quality that is made or can be made.

The S. H. & M. Bias Velveteen Skirt Bindings give the edge of the skirt that correct, velvet finish which all women desire, and fit better and wear longer than any other bindings made.

The S. H. & M. Brush Edge Bindings are far neater and more attractive in appearance and wear longer than any other bindings of the kind.

These bindings are distinctive, elegant and perfect. They fit the curves of the skirt exactly and never cause it to wrinkle or curl up.

They are just the bindings you ought to have for every skirt.

You can buy bindings for less money, but they will never please you so fully.

Bindings that wear out and have to be replaced are a very expensive economy.

The cost of the bindings themselves amounts to little compared with the cost of putting them on, and when you take into consideration the time it takes to put on bindings and to replace them when they are worn out, you will see that the best bindings are in the end by far the cheapest.

Look for the S. H. & M. trade-mark on the back or on the label of the bindings you buy and insist on finding it there.

All good dry goods stores handle the S. H. & M. Bindings.

Gluten and Starch

The two chief constituents of wheat are gluten and starch. The nutritive value of wheat lies in the gluten, starch being of small food value.

Cream of Wheat is made of wheat grown in the northwest, which is very largely gluten. It has most of the starch washed out in process of preparation and is distinctly muscle-building food.

We issue a series of very beautiful gravures, without advertising marks of any kind, any one of which you can have by purchasing two packages of Cream of Wheat. Your grocer has them.

THE MATANZAS MISSION

A BIBLE READING IN THE NEW CHAPEL OF THE MATANZAS MISSION

REV. J. V. COVA'S work in Matanzas continues to prosper. Our readers will recall the fact that it was established amid great opposition from the local priesthood; and that not one paper in the place would announce the meetings; the key of the first house rented for a chapel was withheld from him by the owner as soon as she discovered that he wanted to use it as a place of Protestant worship, and another house was secured as a makeshift.

The work now has found a commodious new home, which consists of a large hall with a seating capacity of about two hundred and fifty. Here a free day mission school is conducted with some seventy-five children and young women in attendance; they are taught reading, writing, arithmetic, grammar, geography, drawing, the English language and the Bible. There is also a large Young People's Society, organized for Bible study and missionary training work. The Sunday School has an average attendance of between seventy-five and one hundred children. Mr. Cova preaches at two other places, using, according to his audience, English or Spanish. "The meetings at these places and at the hall are crowded," he writes; "and the Lord's work is growing wonderfully in this beautiful city, next to Havana the largest on the island."

The Ship of Life and Love

THE wondrous love of Jesus
Is still abroad on earth,
And Asia's starving millions
Shall prove its living worth—
For that alone constraineth
The gift of precious grains
From harvests of Columbia
To India's droughty plains.

CHORUS:
God speed the ship—the Ship of Life and Love—
O'er friendly seas with friendly winds above,
God's grain to bear to distant Hindustan—
A token of God's love in Man for man!

From far across the oceans
We've heard the cry of need,
And none with Christian nation
In vain for food can plead;
So gladly from our plenty,
As God gave us, we give
In His Name to our brothers,
That famished folk may live.

O God of Winds and Oceans,
Give them command, we pray,
To aid her Christly mission
And speed her on her way!
Oh, bless both gift and givers,
And let on distant shore
Be heard the sound of praises
For bounty from thy store!

Spiders' Silk at the Exposition

"THE spider taketh hold with her hands and is in king's palaces," said Solomon. In the present age it would seem that the spider will be set to work weaving furnishings for men's palaces instead of for herself. From Lahore comes the statement that among the odd attractions of the Paris Exposition will be a handsome set of draperies manufactured in Madagascar, from the silk of the halabe—an enormous spider found in great quantities in the island. This spider silk of the most extraordinarily brilliant golden color, is much finer than that of the silk-worm and of remarkable strength. It has long been a problem with economists how to obtain from the spider for textile uses the wonderful silk of which she weaves her web; and at different times devices more or less successful have been announced.

A missionary, named Camboue, is said to be the first to conceive that the Madagascar halabes might be made weavers for men; and he carried his experiments to the point of successful demonstration, although on a very limited scale. Similar experiments taken up more recently by M. Nogue, head of the Antanarivo Technical School, have resulted in an apparatus which accomplishes the desired result on a more extensive plan. The apparatus consists of a set of small stocks, which holds the spider in the position in which she naturally takes to spinning. As she begins a thread, it is caught from her spinnerets by a small roller which withdraws it gently; and Madame Spider, doubtless under the impression that she is making a very fine house, keeps very busy until her reserve supply of silk, from three to four hundred yards, is exhausted; upon which she is released and abundantly supplied with the food she likes best until she is ready for the loom again, which is usually after an interval of ten days. One of M. Nogue's delicate little machines operates twelve spiders at a time.

We are glad to know that you have done not a little to help care for orphans in other places in Turkey and also in other lands. We have many children in the wards of this city (more girls than boys), aside from our Sassounian branch orphanage in Moush, fifteen hours distant. TWO NEW YORKERS.

One Gives the Other a Handy Lift

Mr. E. C. Hazard, one of the oldest and best-known wholesale grocers in New York has for many years given his attention to the preparation of fine food delicacies. He has a farm and experiment station down on Staten Island, where the famous Shrewsbury Ketchup, Burnt Onion Sauce, Shrewsbury Mushrooms and other delicacies are prepared in a most skillful manner.

One evening last autumn while on his way home, Mr. H. sat with one of the officials of the N. J. C. railroad, who seemed to be living with one foot in the grave,—stomach so badly disordered that nothing would digest. It seemed only a question of a few weeks, almost, when death would come.

"Mr. Hazard insisted upon taking the gentleman to his house and giving him a package of Grape-Nuts breakfast food which is manufactured by the Postum Cereal Co., at the pure food factories at Battle Creek, Mich., a food which Mr. Hazard has been using at his own table for a long time, greatly to his benefit.

"He told the gentleman that he could get well in a few weeks by the use of perfectly prepared food of this sort, and would never forget the day when he first tried Grape-Nuts. The prediction came true; the official is now only alive to-day, but is in better health than he has experienced for many years, all of which he attributes to the use of Grape-Nuts and from the advice of Mr. Hazard."

There are two reasons for this; in the first place, Grape-Nuts are made from certain selected portions of wheat and barley that contain phosphate of potash and albumen which nature uses in the human system to make up the gray matter in the brain and nerve centers throughout the body.

The nervous system directly controls the digestive machinery and the brain controls the working and money making power. Mr. Hazard knows this, from his knowledge of foods and from his own experience with Grape-Nuts. Therefore when he took the railway official in charge, he knew exactly what he was doing, and the result proved the correctness of his knowledge.

AT A SEWING SOCIETY.

"Our Sewing Society meets every week to ew and we always have lunch. Just as sure s I take a cup of coffee I act so silly and say uch absurd things it seems as though I were ntoxicated. I feel so ashamed of myself, but annot help it. My heart will go like a trip-ammer and I am invariably kept awake half f that night. So I thought I would take my ostum Food Coffee the next time, and you should have heard the names they called me—old maid,' 'crank,' etc. But before the lunch was through, Postum had more than one con-ert, and those who tried it were delighted. They had heard of it, but had no idea it was so good.

"I have given a great deal of Postum away o friends, just to convince them how good it s, and they invariably adopt it. There are so many people who cannot drink coffee without t distressing them, and Postum Food Coffee seems to be exactly the thing. Postum and I have been old friends for years. I began the use of it when it was first introduced four or ive years ago. At first I thought I could not se it, for the way I made it it was so flat and asteless; but when I found out that it simply equired long boiling, the old trouble disap-eared, and we always have an elegant cup of coffee when we make Postum right." OUR · HYMN · LAUREATE · AT · EIGHTY

THE eightieth birthday of Fanny Crosby, the blind hymn-writer, was recently celebrated at the offices of her publishers, the Biglow & Main Co., in New York City, where many who hold the aged poetess in affectionate regard gathered around her with congratulations and good wishes. Among these was her friend Mr. Ira D. Sankey, who has found in her hymns the inspiration for many of his best compositions and who has sung them throughout the English-speaking world. Another friend and composer present, who has set her beautiful words to popular music was Mr. Hubert P. Main, a member of her publishing firm between whom and the blind poetess exists a bond of long and kindly interest. A delightful luncheon was served on this anniversary occasion, after which "Fanny"—as her friends familiarly call her—was the recipient of a handsome eight-day clock, presented in behalf of those present with the hope that its musical tones might always remind her of the affection of the givers. The venerable little lady was greatly touched by this and other expressions of good will, for which she rendered thanks in her usual simple, graceful fashion. Before the gathering dispersed all united in singing her hymn, "Blest be the Tie that Binds."

FANNY CROSBY

Few people of her age are so bright, cheery and active as this little blind woman, whose songs have made so many people happier, truer and better. If the value of a poet's work be rated by the good it accomplishes, then, indeed, Fanny Crosby deserves a bay wreath and title of wider significance than that with which she was invested last summer, when the Tully Lake Chautauqua paid her the graceful tribute of crowning her their "Poet Laureate." Her songs have softened many hard hearts, comforted many sad ones, and inspired thousands of struggling souls with fresh hope and faith.

The writer recently called upon Miss Crosby and found her sitting in a sunshiny room in a big arm chair, a large white bedspread upon which she was busily knitting massed in a heap on her lap.

Her kindly, cheery little face grew cheerier still when told that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD had sent to inquire after her health and to give her greetings. "Oh, I like that paper!" she exclaimed in her impulsive, child-like manner, which is yet full of dignity. "I like its editors and its readers. I have reason to. For one thing, you know, the Bowery Mission has always been dear to my heart. For fourteen years I have never missed an anniversary there. I worked there with Mr. Ruliffson, the founder. After he died, and it looked like the mission would close for lack of help, I shouted for joy when I heard Dr. Klopsch had taken it up."

In regard to the industry she was plying, she said, laughing merrily: "I might get into mischief if I didn't have something in my hands. I have knitted as presents for my friends seven bedspreads in the last few years—some of a more elaborate pattern than this—with deep lace borders. Oh, I knit many gifts. I don't have to count my stitches as seeing people do; I feel the pattern. I could teach your poor seeing people many things! If you go into a dark room, you may stumble against things and hurt yourself, when I would not. I can 'sense' it when I am approaching a solid body: the air between me and the object becomes compressed. I can do many things; I can make up a bed as well as any housewife. My grandmother made me make beds for three days before I got one to suit her.

"I have never seen since I was six days old. My blindness is one of the dear Lord's dealings with me. If you can find a happier mortal in this world than I, bring him or her along—I want to shake hands with that mortal. I haven't gone through life, though, on a bed of roses. I couldn't write and talk to people as I do unless I had suffered."

Miss Crosby is called upon to talk at many churches, missions and Y. M. C. A. meetings in New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts and Connecticut; and responds cheerfully whenever she is able. She has been generous of her strength and her means. "If I had kept everything I have made," she says, "I would have a good deal of property now: but praise the Lord! I didn't do it. I've been with my present publishers thirty-six years; they pay me a regular salary. I hear that there is a report abroad that I am in need. Correct that impression for me. I am not rich, indeed, but the Lord has not let his servant want.

"I write all my hymns at night when everything is quiet. Mrs. Curtis, who acts as my secretary, was my dear mother's friend. She and I have been together for twenty-three years. God has been good to me in all my joys and sorrows. My hymn, 'All the Way my Saviour Leads Me,' tells the story."

Brought back to life.

This was virtually the case with Mrs. Nellie Cameron, of Lockport, N. Y. She was the victim of a severe case of stomach trouble and was slowly starving to death. She could derive no nourishment from her food, as the stomach was too weak to retain it long enough to digest it. She wasted to a mere shadow, doctors failed to help her and she lost all hope of recovery, until finally on the advice of a friend she began to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and to them she owes her life. Here is her own story:

"In the fall of 1898 I was in a deplorable condition. I had stomach trouble in the very worst form. Nothing at all would stay on my stomach, and I had to almost starve myself. My side pained me constantly. The lack of nourishment caused me to lose flesh rapidly; I dropped from 138 to 97 pounds, growing weaker all the time. There was not the slightest color in my face. I was simply a shadow of my former self. Able physicians treated me, but failed absolutely. I was a complete wreck when a friend told me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. One box greatly improved my condition; it was astonishing how quickly they built me up. I believe Dr. William's Pink Pills for Pale People saved my life. I was enabled to sleep, and in the morning I felt refreshed and rested. My stomach was strengthened, what I ate benefited me, my weight increased, and I soon regained all that I had lost. I am now well and strong. I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

Nellie Cameron.

Have Patience*

God's Patience and Forbearance with His Children a Pattern for Them in Their Family and Social Conduct

AMONG the most difficult of the duties required of the Christian is the one that Christ enjoins in the Parable of the Unmerciful Servant. Set in the light which Christ sheds upon it, the duty is clearly reasonable. As Shakespeare says: "We do pray for mercy; and that same prayer doth teach us all to render the deeds of mercy." But, taking into account our position before God, and remembering all that we have received and hope to receive from him, the duty is still a hard one. For it is no mere verbal forgiveness that is demanded, no mere renunciation of our strict rights, but a heartfelt pardon. This is a sore trial of human nature, an altitude of magnanimity that cannot be attained without divine help. And there is no restriction as to the nature and extent of the offence which is to be forgiven. In some instances, it seems to be unpardonable, as when it is unprovoked, or when it is often repeated, or when it is aggravated by the uniform kindness with which the offender has been previously treated, or when the offender was under peculiar obligations of relationship, or social connection, which demanded his good behavior. Yet all these considerations are covered by the parable. The mercy and forgiveness we hope to receive at the hands of God are for offences heinous on these very accounts.

It must not, however, be supposed that this duty requires of us conduct that could come only from an emasculated spirit. There are offences which we ought to resent, either because of our duty to society or because of our duty to the offender. Christ himself showed indignation at the conduct of the scribes, the lawyers and the Pharisees. The "Woe unto you" that he uttered had in it none of the weak insensibility and indifference to wrong-doing that some people regard as the teaching of the parable. It is right to denounce the sale of liquor, the offering and the taking of bribes, the malfeasance of officeholders, the greed and rapacity of employers who wrong their employees, the defrauders of the widow and the orphan. There is no need to forgive such men, and Christ does not require us to do so. Nor are we required to forgive when the offender would be encouraged by forgiveness to repeat his offence, and so would be confirmed in evil courses. As when a child does wrong, our concern for his future welfare demands that he be taught the wickedness of what he has done; and a criminal should be imprisoned to impress him with the majesty of the law and lead him to reform; so there are private and personal offences which call for resentment. But there ought to be in no case personal vindictiveness, nor a spirit of revenge. The punishment ought always to be exemplary and remedial.

The real teaching of the parable is that of being of a forgiving spirit. As we go to God conscious of wrong-doing and pleading for pardon, we must have in our hearts toward others the magnanimity that we hope he will show toward us. A minister coming down to breakfast noticed that the girl who waited at table had been weeping, and when she went back to the kitchen he asked his wife what was wrong with Mary. "I have had to tell her," said the wife, "that she must leave. I cannot bear with her clumsiness and carelessness any longer. She breaks the cups and she never has the meals on time. I have forgiven her again and again, but I am tired of it now and she must go." The minister was silent for a few minutes and then said thoughtfully: "I hope my Master will never get tired of my wrong-doing. I have given him cause; that is sure. But he bears with me. What wonderful patience he has! It would be a dreadful thing if he turned me out of his service." Nothing more was said, but Mary was not discharged. We ought to make more allowance for the frailties of others. We rejoice in the thought that "God knoweth our frame and remembereth that we are dust." But when some brother utters an angry or impatient word, how quickly the retort springs to our lips! How readily we give up attempts to reclaim a wrong-doer! How actively we take up the pursuit of a brother who has fallen and is to be driven out of the church and society! God does not deal so with us. We make promises to him which we fail to keep; we pledge ourselves to do this, to refrain from doing that, and we find our nature too weak to fulfil our pledge. We ask God to forgive, and we hope he does. Yet how severe we are when others come to us asking for forbearance and forgiveness!

Japanese Buddhists Studying Christianity

From Chicago comes the report that two Buddhist priests, E. Ikeyama and Dr. J. Chikadzumi, of Tokio, have come to this country to study the religious and social institutions of America, both Christian and Jewish. It is also said that they are here as official delegates of the leaders of the Buddhist faith in Japan, who are seeking to make a thorough investigation of the religion of the Occidentals, which is threatening the hold of their own religion on the people of the Sunrise Kingdom. They wish to determine the source of its marvelous energy, and to examine into its methods. This action is interpreted as evidence of a spirit of alarm among the adherents of Buddhism. Whatever be its motive, the result must be good for themselves and their progressive country, which has shown itself so ready to adopt in Occidental civilization everything which appeals to it as better than its own. The religion of Jehovah and Jesus cannot be investigated without approving itself to the candid mind as the world's most excellent possession; it is the pearl of great price which the Orient gave to the Occident, and which the Occident gives back to the Orient. That Eastern pilgrims come asking for it is a blessed sign. Truly, the nation which can and does feed the starving millions of the Orient is commending itself to the Oriental intellect, and drawing to itself the Oriental heart.

Revival Work in De Witt, Ill.

A correspondent writes of good work done in the formation and maintaining of a Young Men's Christian Union in De Witt, Ill. The union was the outcome of revival services held eighteen months ago, by the Rev. Mr. Harry, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church there. Many young men were converted, and as members of the union they became aggressive workers for Christ. One feature of their work was a series of evangelistic meetings in the city park, under the immediate supervision of Rev. Messrs. Harry and King. As many as 1,200 persons sometimes attended the services, and many souls were saved. Emulating the young men, a number of young women have formed the Young Women's Christian Union for active Christian effort.

WORK AND PRAY

WORK for the Master—there's much to do,
For the harvest's great and the laborers few—
The day is far spent; the night is nigh;
Oh! work for the Master till we die.

Live for the Master in all we do,
Be honest and steadfast, brave and true,
Let our lights shine, that all may know
That Christ is our Master here below.

Die for the Master and fear not death,
For "I will be with you then," he saith;
Then why should we dread his summons home?
Answer them gladly, "O Lord, I come."

Watch ye and pray, for the end draws near;
If ye are faithful there's naught to fear.
Death is his servant—whom all obey,
From king to pauper—without delay.

Christ is coming! He bringeth peace;
All wars and sorrows and tears shall cease.
Oh! gladly let us welcome him now
With hymns of praise, and before him bow.

Oh! happy meeting! Glorious day
When the Master wipes all tears away,
When we are freed from our load of sin,
And the Master calls his servants in.

List to the words from his lips which fall,
"Welcome my faithfulness one and all,"
"Ye've served me truly—ye shall be blest,"
"Enter into the joy of my rest."

Ring bells of peace—ye joy bells ring—
The Master is coming, our Lord and King;
Sound the glad tidings o'er land and sea,
Jesus hath conquered and all are free.

Artistic Monuments in White Bronze COST NO MORE THAN PLAIN ONES

Marble is entirely out of date. Granite soon gets moss-grown, discolored requires constant expense and care, and eventually crumbles back to Mother Earth. Besides it is very expensive.

White Bronze is strictly everlasting. It cannot crumble with the action of frost. Moss-growth is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Then why not investigate it? It has been adopted for nearly one hundred public monuments. We have designs from $4.00 to $4,000.00. Write at once for free designs and information. It puts you under no obligations. We deal direct and deliver everywhere. Over $28,000 worth of work sold to Christian Herald readers in the last few years.

HEART DISEASE.

Some Facts Regarding the Rapid Increase of Heart Troubles.

Heart trouble, at least among the Americans, is certainly increasing, and while this may be largely due to the excitement and worry of American business life, it is more often the result of weak stomachs, of poor digestion.

Real organic disease is incurable; but not one case in a hundred of heart trouble is organic.

The close relation between heart trouble and poor digestion is because both organs are controlled by the same great nerves—the Sympathetic and the Pneumogastric.

In another way also the heart is affected by the form of poor digestion, which causes gas and fermentation from half digested food. There is a feeling of oppression and heaviness in the chest caused by pressure of the distended stomach on the heart and lungs, interfering with their action; hence arises palpitation and short breath.

Poor digestion also poisons the blood, making it thin and watery, which irritates and weakens the heart.

The most sensible treatment for heart trouble is to improve the digestion and to insure the prompt assimilation of food.

This can be done by the regular use after meals of some safe, pleasant and effective digestive preparation, like Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, which may be found at drug stores, and which contain valuable, harmless digestive elements in a pleasant, convenient form.

It is safe to say that the regular, persistent use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at meal time will cure any form of stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach.

Rum the Foe of Missions

Gospel Workers Tell of the Battle Between the Bible and the Bottle

IF the liquor question came late in the programme of the Ecumenical Missionary Conference, it was at least treated vigorously. It was the second subject for Monday evening's consideration. That old temperance war horse, Rev. Theo. L. Cuyler, opened the discussion. He charged America and England with going out to the heathen nations with a Bible in one hand and a bottle in the other. His statement that our flag, "our Old Glory we call it," floats in Manila over four hundred drinking dens, was met with cries of "Shame." The doctor, roused by the cry, responded with tremendous energy, "Yes, shame, shame! Oh! i it must hang above those hells, hang it at half mast; the flag that we love better than anything except our Bibles."

The Rev. Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby, President of Livingstone Medical College, charged the United States with having taken the grave responsibility of holding out against prohibition in the South Sea Islands. "To you who are American citizens be a share of that responsibility laid," said the speaker. "I appeal to you to form here a committee, such as we have in England, Germany, France and other nations, for the inauguration of a general international movement to deal with the liquor question." The statement that a meeting would be held next day at the Church Mission House to consider the formation of such a committee met with approval. Still more gratifying was the assurance of Dr. Battersby that the restrictions upon the liquor traffic among savage races are constantly being drawn closer, and that the outlook in this regard is brighter.

A paper was submitted by the aged missionary of the New Hebrides, the Rev. Dr. John G. Paton. The infirmities of age prevented the author from reading it himself, but it was well read by the Rev. Dr. McEwen, and Dr. Paton's venerable presence served to add force to every sentence.

"A rifle is a dangerous thing in the hands of an irresponsible cannibal at all times," he wrote, "and more so when his reason is dethroned by drink. There are still 40,000 or 60,000 cannibals in the New Hebrides group. Great Britain has prohibited all her traders on those islands from trading in rum, ammunition, brandy, opium and dynamite. Surely Christian America should do the same, and prevent the many murders by firearms and intoxicants.

"Surely there are Congressmen who will take up this subject and plead with Congress to pass an act to save such ruin by the trade of traders in America against these defenseless islanders, who are not under the protection of any civilized nation, but are at the mercy of all lawless traders, kidnappers, and slavers who visit or settle on those islands of the New Hebrides."

"To help the President and Congress to get such an act passed, we earnestly plead for the united help and influence of every American Christian and society able to use any influence, and so free themselves before God from any further responsibility for such crimes and murders which hinder the work of Christianity and civilization among the island cannibals."

It is certain that could the Conference have given the necessary legislation, it would have done so promptly. That one result of the discussion may be increased interest, and ultimately Congressional action, is devoutly to be desired. In this battle of the bottle against the Bible, it cannot be conceived for a moment that the Bible can be beaten.

A Great Gathering At the Sailing of "The Christian Herald's" India Relief Steamship "Quito" from New York

SELDOM has New York witnessed an assemblage so picturesque and enthusiastic as that which crowded the decks of the India Famine steamship Quito, and the dock at which she lay on the afternoon of Thursday, May 10. It was an occasion to be long remembered. Bright, sunny weather, with a breeze which set all the flags a-snapping, made the occasion all the more delightful.

For nearly an hour in advance of the time set for holding the farewell services, crowds flocked to Pier No. 1, North River, the spacious entrance to which was beautifully decorated with American flags and bunting, while across the entire front was the legend painted on canvas:

CHRISTIAN AMERICA'S GIFT TO STARVING INDIA

From topmast to deck the fine vessel was dressed with the flags of all nations, her commander, Captain Baird, having run up THE CHRISTIAN HERALD flag and streamer on the foremast, right below the "Stars and Stripes." Two gangways from the ship's side to the dock were crowded with people who had come to the services, many of them from a considerable distance. Soon the main deck of the vessel was packed, while the poop, the upper-deck and even the open promenade above, were equally crowded.

As four o'clock drew near, the crowd on the poop made way for the speakers who were to address the multitude from that exalted position. They faced a representative gathering. Among those in the audience were many well-known individuals who have been actively interested in the India Relief Work conducted by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. On the speakers' stand were the Countess von Schimmelmann, Mrs. Sarah J. Bird, Mrs. Louis Klopsch, Mrs. Irwin, Rev. A. C. Dixon of Brooklyn, Rev. M. E. Harlan of Brooklyn, Commander Booth-Tucker of the Salvation Army, Rev. Mr. Neeld, a veteran missionary of Bareilly, India, Rev. S. T. Willis, D.D., New York, Rev. Richard Winsor, a missionary from India

DIVINE SERVICE ON THE DECK OF THE FAMINE STEAMSHIP "QUITO" IN NEW YORK HARBOR

GREAT Ruler of the sea and land,
Who holdest in Thy mighty hand
The waters of the foaming deep,
We pray Thee of Thy love to keep
This ship on Mercy's mission bent,
To feed Thy starving creatures sent.

Thou who hast heard the piercing cry
Of those who, slain of hunger, die;
Thou who hast seen their awful stress;
Bid Thou both wind and wave progress
This vessel, with her golden freight
For which our famished brothers wait.

(who with his wife accompanies the Quito to Bombay), and Rev. R. G. Hobbs of Springfield, Ill., who accompanied THE CHRISTIAN HERALD famine ship City of Everett to India in 1897. On the deck and immediately under the poop, were Prof. Ali, the cornetist, Supt. Hallimond with his quartette from the Bowery Mission and Prof. Victor Benke at the organ. These led the musical part of the services, the entire audience joining in the singing.

The Programme

At 4.10 P.M. the farewell services began, Rev. Mr. Hobbs presiding. Following was the programme:

Opening Hymn—"All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name." Rev. Mr. Harlan led the audience in The Lord's Prayer.
Introductory Remarks—Rev. Mr. Hobbs.
Address—Rev. S. T. Willis, D.D.
National Hymn—"My Country, 'Tis of Thee."
Address—Countess Schimelmann.
Address—Commander Booth-Tucker.
Address—Rev. Richard Winsor.
Address—Rev. A. C. Dixon, D.D.
Prayer for blessing on ship and cargo—Rev. Mr. Neeld.
Missionary Hymn—"Till We Meet Again."

Never did a programme prove more interesting throughout nor an audience more enthusiastically responsive. It seemed as if the hearts of all present were bound up in the great mission of mercy which they had thus met to consecrate. Not the least enjoyable was the musical part of the exercises, in which all joined with hearty good-will, the united volume of cornet, organ and vocal music making a great swell of harmony that could be heard far away in the city's streets and by the crews of other craft that lay along shore.

Rev. Mr. Hobbs' Remarks

Rev. Mr. Hobbs read several letters of regret, including the following:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON,
May 9, 1900.

Dear Sir:

I very much regret that the pressure of my public duties and engagements will prevent me from being present at the ceremonies attending the departure from New York of the India famine relief ship, Quito, Thursday, the 10th instant, to which you have so cordially invited me. It would have given me peculiar pleasure to be with you on this occasion. The success of this work is eminently gratifying to me, as it must be not only to those immediately engaged, but to the country at large, and I trust the ceremonies may be completely successful.

Very sincerely yours,
WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

Secretary Long, of the Navy Department, in his letter of regret, wrote:

Please accept, however, my thanks for your courtesy in writing me, and my best wishes for a safe voyage for the ship on her mission of mercy.

Hon. John Hay, Secretary of State, wrote:

I should be very glad if it were possible to be present at the departure of the vessel which has been freighted by our philanthropic citizens, through the agency of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, to relieve the terrible calamity which is now devastating India, and to testify to the interest I have taken in the work you have so nobly done; but I greatly regret that engagements from which I cannot free myself detain me here this week.

Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, Governor of New York, also sent a note, in which he conveyed the "heartiest acknowledgments on behalf of the people of this State of the splendid work you have done."

Mr. Hobbs briefly explained the purpose of the meeting. He said: "Some years ago, when famine was afflicting Russia, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD put a shipment of flour on board the Conemaugh, for the relief of the starving people. A few weeks afterward, it sent the steamer Leo, laden with flour, as a second gift to the afflicted subjects of the Czar. In 1897, it freighted the steamer City of Everett with corn for the famine-stricken people of India. It was my privilege to go on that ship, and I witnessed the profound gratitude with which the gift of corn was received by the starving people, and I heard their expressions of thanks to the people who had taken compassion upon them. You will be glad to know that in this greater famine, a still greater benefaction is going to the sufferers. Under your feet, stowed away in the hold of the Quito, is a cargo of corn twice the size of the one sent out to India just four years ago. I can see in imagination the wasted hands of the emaciated people held out to receive it.

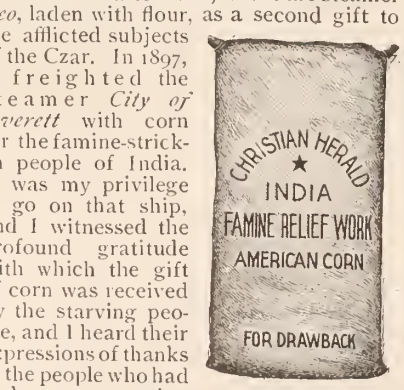
"You need to think of the figures to appreciate the full significance of the gift. The cost of putting this corn in the hands of the starving people of India, including the magnificent gift of the United States Government of the $40,000 for the charter of the vessel, will be one cent and a-fifth a pound. Now grain is selling in India at three and three and a-half cents a pound; so you see THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is acting wisely in sending corn, because it nearly trebles the value of the gift. But this is not all. Besides this gift, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has already cabled over fifty thousand dollars in cash to India, and it is going to send more money; for there will be no slackening in its efforts until a harvest relieves the need of the people. And remember this: Every cent of the money and every grain of the corn goes into the hands of our missionaries for distribution, and is apportioned by the Inter-denominational Committee — the only Inter-denominational Committee in India —which did such splendid work in the famine four years ago. These missionaries are, I firmly believe, the best men on God's earth to-day. They know the needs of the people, and they will take care that this relief will reach the worst sufferers. This ship goes out of the harbor to that far-off land in the name of that God who made of one blood all the nations of the world: in the name of that Christ who died, that all men might be drawn into the bonds of a common brotherhood."



A MINIATURE CORN SACK

Address of Rev. S. T. Willis

Rev. S. T. Willis, pastor of the Church of the Disciples, New York City, said:

"It seems to me there is no picture so beautiful as that on which we are now permitted to look, if we remember its significance. Twenty-five millions of people are holding out their hands and asking for help from the Christian world. This is the answer to their cry. It embodies the teaching of our Lord better than any creed. In the great day of final account, the test will be: What was your answer to such appeals as this of that starving nation. You remember how our Lord identifies himself with his suffering people, 'Inasmuch as ye did it unto them, ye did it unto me.' How the great heart of Christ must sympathize with the people of India! And how glad he is to see the churches of every name and creed uniting in this work of feeding the hungry. No disputing about difference of doctrine, but joining hands in the kind of service that he loved. This is the answer to that pathetic prayer that he offered almost under the shadow of the Cross: 'That they all may be one.' This is missionary work. What would missionary effort amount to in India now, if we who have sent them the Gospel failed in their hour of misery to send them bread? 'What doeth it profit, my brethren, if a man be destitute of daily food, and you say unto them: Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled, notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body?' This is the practical Christianity. God will bless this offering. I say God bless THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. God bless the Christian people of America who have united to send this ship on her errand of mercy. God speed her on her way to those hungry people who are crying for food! This gift will emphasize the Gospel that our missionaries are preaching. Those people will see that Christianity is a friend, and does not only teach, but holds out a hand of help to them in their need. It will represent to them the love of God, shed abroad in the hearts of redeemed men and women."

Countess Schimelmann's Remarks

The brief address of the Countess Schimelmann, the titled evangelist and philanthropist, was particularly interesting, as giving a foreign view-point of American charity. She said:

I am not an American, so I rather feel as if I had no right to stand here and share with you in the honors of sending off your great corn-ship to the starving people of a distant land. Still, I am within my rights to stand here and pray that God will bless your land and to rejoice with you in the Christ spirit that prompts your magnificent gift. Your great land is never greater than when engaged in such works as you are doing now. In America's Christian generosity consists America's true greatness. America will bring souls to Christ with this corn. I heard the other day a friend, who has lived in India, tell how thousands over there are saying: "There is no use in praying to our gods; they will not help us. Let us pray to the God of the Christians." God bless America!

A Voice from the Famine Field

Rev. Dr. Winsor, the India missionary who goes with the corn-ship, spoke eloquently of terrible experiences during famines which he had witnessed in a thirty years' residence in India. Among other things, he said:

The first famine horrors which we saw were those of 1876; and we have just passed through those of 1896-7. In the district where I lived, the people, men, women and children, gathered about our house (just as they always come to the Christian missionary in their times of famine and distress), holding out their hands and begging for gram—for something to keep them alive. We had little food ourselves; and we had not a cent with which to purchase. In our helplessness, the situation was so harrowing that we began to consider if we could longer endure to stay among them, these people whom we loved, and to whom we had preached Christ, watching their starvation, hearing their pitiful pleadings for a little bread, a little corn just enough of anything to keep breath in their bodies—and all the while unable to answer. We about made up our minds that we could not. Just at this moment, from our own land over the water, came good news. We got a cablegram of money from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. None of you can ever know the joy that message brought. None of you can measure the blessedness of the relief administered. This first instalment was followed by others; and with the donations we received instructions that we were not to apply funds to any undertaking, however worthy, except that for which it was sent: famine relief for starving Hindus. We were not even to build churches or Sunday Schools with it; we were to feed the hungry. If we put Hindus to work, paying them with food, it must be on work for Hindus. Knowing the need of a better water supply there, we called the people together and told them how it would be to their interest to construct a reservoir which might provide water for them in time of drought; and we engaged hundreds of them in the construction of one, which, when we left, was supplying people miles away with water. That reservoir is one of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S monuments in India.

The Value of the Corn

It is impossible with words to draw a true picture of the people when the corn comes to them. In 1896-7, when we got the corn, they gathered about us in hundreds and thousands watching us with wistful, terrible eagerness as we opened the sacks and spread the corn out. A skeleton family—father, mother and three or four children—would stand in line holding out their hands or the cloth composing their garments, if they had the latter. It often happened, however, that in a family of seven or more persons, there would not be enough cloth to hold a quart of corn—so poor, so destitute are this people; so we had to keep bolts of cloth and tear off strips to give them; to such a family as I have described, we would give the father a quart, the mother a quart and each child a pint of corn. It was heart-breaking to see how, if a single grain of corn fell while you were making apportionments, the children would scramble for it as if it were a piece of gold.

You have heard some rumors stating that they do not want corn in India. I have lived there, and I am speaking of what I have seen, and I have heard heathen Hindus send this message to Christian natives in America: "Do tell them to come back and bring us some corn." I have heard them say of America again and again to American missionaries: "If you had not given us corn, if you had not given us work, if you had not given us money, we would have died." These people are living monuments of what American Christianity did for them during that trying time. In letters received this week, I had messages of gratitude from women and children whose lives have been saved through your generosity. The cry of the women and children of starving India is a message to the motherhood of America. If you could only see the children with their little wasted hands outstretched to take this grain as it is given out to them, you would go down on your knees and thank God for every grain you send. If you could only know what you are accomplishing for the souls of these people through their bodies, all the voices of America would be uplifted in one prayer of praise. There were thousands of people in my district whom I never knew until that time of their trial, and our help opened to us their hearts and homes that had before been closed against the Christian.

A PORTION OF THE CROWD AT THE FAREWELL SERVICE

Rev. Dr. Dixon's Greeting

The next speaker was the Rev. Dr. A. C. Dixon, of Brooklyn, who said in part:

This ship is the floating edition of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The edition on land carries the Gospel truth to hungry souls; the edition on water is carrying the Gospel bread to hungry bodies, and both editions are Christian heralds. Love to God and service to man cannot be divorced. Jesus Christ came to proclaim the doctrine of love that knows neither Greek nor Roman, Jew nor Gentile, bond nor free; his heart was big enough to take in all humanity. We are sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be. As sons of God we are pressing forward to a glorious future; as sons of man we are having to do with the making of a glorious now. Our mission is to get people into heaven if we can; but we must try to get heaven into them first. Our opportunity in India is to reach the soul through ministry to the body. I remember the story of an army chaplain who went to the cot of a wounded soldier and asked the privilege of reading the Bible to him. The soldier said: "I am very cold; I wish you would get me a blanket." The chaplain hustled around, got a blanket, and when he had wrapped the soldier up in its warm folds, the latter said: "I am very feverish and thirsty; I wish you would get me some water." The chaplain held a cooling draught to the parched lips. "Now," said the boy, "if the book you want to read to me makes a man as good and kind as you are, I am ready to listen." It is hard to teach religion in the abstract, to make people understand it as a theory when they are ready enough to accept it in demonstration. Deeds must interpret Christianity to the heathen. The Christianity that "passes by on the other side" is not convincing, but the ministry of the good Samaritan is, and the privilege of filling to-day the office of the good Samaritan is national in its scope; and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is the translator of the parable. In feeding the starving people we are doing battle for the Lord in a way that will conquer. Our ship of conquest is not armed with guns of iron and steel and brass and copper, but with bags and barrels of corn. We are going to batter down the walls of heathendom with the gospel of bread.

Com. Booth-Tucker Speaks

Commander Booth-Tucker's address was singularly impressive, not only because of its characteristic eloquence, but as coming from the man who is the head of the Salvation Army in America, and, though not a Hindu, a native of India. In part he said:

I look upon this corn-ship with peculiar interest, having been born in India, having spent something like twenty years of my life there, knowing it from the peaks of the Himalayas down to the coasts of Gaul and Bombay. I have known, not only from the view-point of a missionary, but from the view-point of an humble native, wearing the garb of the Hindu, and begging my bread from door to door in better times than India is now having. I have received great kindness from the people there; I have known them intimately; I have been in India during a famine.

The Salvation Army owes a special debt to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and in the famine district it has some 12,000 soldiers for its friends. It has nobly assisted us in distributing the relief that was necessary. We have stood shoulder to shoulder with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD more than once, and God has helped us both. We are only a poor organization, but we are glad to do what we are able; and we have sent out of our poverty something like $20,000 to India through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Money and grain sent will go further in India than in any other country of the world. They reckon there three cents a day will feed a man, a cent and a half a child. The Hindu of India don't come asking great things; they ask but the barest possible means of existence until the next harvest can be gathered. When a great vessel like this comes riding into port with a great cargo of corn straight from Christian America, she will be one of the best and mightiest missionaries you have ever sent to that country. Its mission will be noised abroad from one end of India to the other. The editors of Mohammedan papers, usually ignoring or opposing Christian missions and missionaries, will not ignore this mission ship. They will be ready to swallow the Quito at one gulp; they will publish columns about her; and from the bottom of their hearts they will send back "Thank you!" not merely to America, but to the God of the New World. Hundreds and thousands who have hitherto rejected Christ will ask: "What is there in this people's religion that will make them go out of their way and spend themselves thus for us?"

I should like to add my tribute to that which Dr. Hobbs has paid the missionaries who will receive this cargo, and to assure the givers that it will be safe in their hands, will be as wisely as faithfully distributed.

One regret only I have now; that is that we have not with us in this moment that far-reaching mind that lies behind this effort, that splendid personality which buries itself in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and seeks, as it were, to conceal its own identity—Dr. Louis Klopsch. I feel him to be one of the greatest of men. Such a man is an ornament to his country and to humanity. But I know that he is there on the field, facing the dangers of the plague; he is there watching for this vessel, making ready to receive her, to guard against any delaying in the transmission of this gift to hungry mouths. God's blessing be showered on his head. God bless him! And God bless THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers!

Blessing the Famine Ship and Cargo

After the last hymn had been sung, and the venerable missionary, Rev. F. L. Neeld, amid a reverent bowing and uncovering of heads, had invoked the Divine blessing on the vessel, her cargo, her captain and her crew, the people were still loth to go. Many of those present had a personal share in the cargo of the relief ship, and they lovingly inspected every part of the great vessel, which was about to carry their consecrated gifts to the suffering people of India. Finally, after many handshakings and leave-takings of Missionary Winsor and his wife, the last of the visitors went ashore, and the vessel was ready for her long ocean journey. As she weighed anchor and cast loose from her moorings, there was a general waving of handkerchiefs by those on the pier, to which the Quito replied with a vociferous salute from her steam whistle. Slowly the noble ship swung around, and soon she was in midstream, her bow pointed seaward. As she steamed down the river, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD flag—that same flag which has now floated above three famine ships voyaging oversea—was clearly visible from the shore, its blue cross on a white ground emblematic of its Christlike mission of bread and blessing. The Quito will be reported by cable at the Azores, Gibraltar, Port Said and Aden during her voyage, and it will thus be learned how she and her precious cargo are progressing. Dr. Klopsch arrived in Bombay May 12, after a pleasant voyage.

The Quito will reach Bombay about June 20, when the entire cargo will be discharged. Dr. Klopsch and the members of the Inter-denominational Committee are meanwhile making all necessary arrangements for the distribution, including rail transportation to the remotest centres of suffering.

Full accounts of their labors, and of the relief work accomplished by the missionaries by means of the corn cargo, will be forwarded for publication in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, for the information of all who have aided in this most deserving cause.

Acknowledgments

In addition to the acknowledgments of valuable services rendered to the Famine Relief work, published in last week's issue, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD desires to thank all other friends who have, in various ways, contributed to the success of this great charitable enterprise. Special acknowledgment is due to the United Fruit Company for the use of pier; to Messrs. Trecarten & Turner, stevedores; to Mr. F. Stahlberg, surveyor of the Board of Underwriters; to the J. P. Truesdell & McCord Company, who furnished grain,

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD RELIEF FLAG

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT.

Employers and Employees

A SERMON BY REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., ON THE TEXTS:

Galatians 5: 15:
But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another.

Philippians 2: 4:
Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others.

ABOUT every six months there is a great labor agitation. There are violent questions now in discussion between employers and employees. The present "strikes" will go into the past. Of course, the damage done cannot immediately be repaired. Wages will not be so high as they were. Spasmodically they may be higher, but they will drop lower. Strikes, whether right or wrong, always injure laborers as well as capitalists. You will see this in the starvation of next winter. Boycotting and violence and murder never pay. They are different stages of anarchy. God never blessed murder. The worst use you can put a man to is to kill him. Blow up to-morrow all the country seats on the banks of the Hudson and the Rhine, and all the fine houses on Madison Square, and Brooklyn Heights, and Rittenhouse Square, and Beacon Street, and all the bricks and timber and stones will just fall back on the bare hands of American and European labor.

In this country the torch put to the factories that have discharged hands for good or bad reason; obstructions on the rail-tracks, in front of midnight express trains, because the offenders do not like the president of the company; strikes on shipboard the hour they were going to sail, or in printing offices the hour the paper was to go to press, or in the mines the day the coal was to be delivered, or on house scaffoldings so the builder fails in keeping his contract—all these are only a hard blow on the head of American labor, and cripple its arms, and lame its feet, and pierce its heart. Traps sprung suddenly upon employers and violence never took one knot out of the knuckles of toil, or put one farthing of wages into a callous palm. Barbarism will never cure the wrongs of civilization. Mark that!

But gradually the damages done the laborer by the strikes will be repaired, and some important things ought now to be said. The whole tendency of our times, as you have noticed, is to make the chasm between employer and employee wider and wider. In olden time the head man of the factory, the master builder, the capitalist, the head man of the firm, worked side by side with their employees, working sometimes at the same bench, dining at the same table; and there are those here who can remember the time when the clerks of large commercial establishments were accustomed to board with the head men of the firm.

All that is changed, and the tendency is to make the distance between employer and employee wider and wider. The tendency is to make the employee feel that he is wronged by the success of the capitalist, and to make the capitalist feel: "Now, my laborers are only beasts of burden; I must give so much money for so much drudgery, just so many pieces of silver for so many beads of sweat." In other words, the bridge of sympathy is broken down at both ends. That feeling was well described by Thomas Carlyle when he said: "Plugson, of St. Dolly Undershot, buccaneer-like, says to his men: 'Noble spinners, this is the hundredth thousand we have gained, wherein I mean to dwell and plant my vineyards. The hundred thousand pound is mine, the daily wage was yours. Adieu, noble spinners; drink my health with this groat each, which I give you over and above.'" Now, what we want is to rebuild that bridge of sympathy, and I put the trowel to one of the abutments to-day, and I preach more especially to employers as such, although what I have to say will be appropriate to both employers and employees.

The behavior of a multitude of laborers toward their employers during the last three months may have induced some employers to neglect the real Christian duties that they owe to those whom they employ. Therefore, I want to say to you whom I confront face to face, and those to whom these words may come, that all shipowners, all capitalists, all commercial firms, all master builders, all housewives, are bound to be interested in the entire welfare of their subordinates. Years ago some one gave three prescriptions for becoming a millionaire: "First, spend your life in getting and keeping the earnings of other people; secondly, have no anxiety about the worriments, the losses, the disappointments of others; thirdly, do not mind the fact that your vast wealth implies the poverty of a great many people." Now, there is not a man here who would consent to go into life with those three principles to earn a fortune. It is your desire to do your whole duty to the men and women in your service.

First of all then, pay as large wages as are reasonable and as your business will afford. Not necessarily what others pay, certainly not what your hired help say you must pay, for that is tyranny on the part of labor unbearable. The right of a laborer to tell his employer what he must pay implies the right of an employer to compel a man into a service whether he will or not, and either of those ideas is despicable. When any employer allows a laborer to say what he must do or have his business ruined, and the employer submits to it, he does every business man in the United States a wrong, and yields to the principle which, carried out, would dissolve society. Look over your affairs, and put yourselves in imagination in your laborer's place, and then pay him what before God and your own conscience you think you ought to pay him.

"God bless yous," are well in their place, but they do not buy coal, nor pay house rent, nor get shoes for the children. At the same time you, the employer, ought to remember through what straits and strains you got the fortune by which you built your store or run the factory. You are to remember that you take all the risks and the employee takes none, or scarcely any. You are to remember that there may be reverses in fortune, and that some new style of machinery may make your machinery valueless, or some new style of tariff set your business back hopelessly and forever. You must take all that into consideration, and then pay what is reasonable.

Do not be too ready to cut down wages. As far as possible, pay all, and pay promptly. There is a great deal of Bible teaching on this subject. Malachi: "I will be a swift witness against all sorcerers, and against all adulterers, and against those who oppose the hireling in his wages." Leviticus: "Thou shalt not keep the wages of the hireling all night unto the morning." Colossians: "Masters, give unto your servants that which is just and equal; knowing that ye, also, have a Master in heaven." So you see it is not a question between you and your employee, so much as it is a question between you and God.

Do not say to your employees: "Now, if you don't like this place get another," when you know they cannot get another. As far as possible once a year visit at their homes your clerks and your workmen. That is the only way you can become acquainted with their wants. You will by such process find out that there is a blind parent or a sick sister being supported. You will find some of your young men in rooms without any fire in winter, and in summer sweltering in ill-ventilated apartments. You will find how much depends on the wages you pay or withhold.

Moreover, it is your duty as employer, as far as possible, to mould the welfare of the employee. You ought to advise him about investments, about life insurance, about savings banks. You ought to give him the benefit of your experience. There are hundreds and thousands of employers, I am glad to say, who are settling in the very best possible way the destiny of their employees; such men as Marshall, of Leeds; Lister, of Bradford; Akroyd, of Halifax; and men so near at home it might offend their modesty if I mentioned their names. These men have built reading-rooms, libraries, concert halls, afforded croquet lawns, cricket grounds, gymnasiums, choral societies for their employees, and they have not merely paid the wages on Saturday night, but through the contentment and the thrift and the good morals of their employees, they are paying wages from generation to generation forever.

Again, I counsel all employers to look well after the physical health of their subordinates. Do not put on them any unnecessary fatigue. I never could understand why the drivers on our city cars must stand all day when they might just as well sit down and drive. It seems to me most unrighteous that so many of the female clerks in our stores should be compelled to stand all day, and through those hours when there are but few or no customers. These people have aches and annoyances and weariness enough without putting upon them additional fatigue.

Then, I would have you carry out this sanitary idea, and put into as few hours as possible the work of the day. It seems to me all the merchants in all departments ought, by simultaneous movement, to come out in behalf of the early closing theory. These young men ought to have an opportunity of going to the Mercantile Library, to the reading-rooms, to the concert hall, to the gymnasium, to the church. They have nerves, they have brains, they have intellectual aspirations, they have immortal spirits. If they can do a good round day's work in the eight or ten hours, you have no right to keep them harnessed for seventeen.

But, above all, I charge you, O employers! that you look after the moral and spiritual welfare of your employees. First, know where they spend their evenings. That decides everything. You do not want around your money drawer a young man who went last night to see "Jack Sheppard!" A man that comes into the store in the morning ghastly with midnight revelry is not the man for your store. The young man who spends his evening in the society of refined women, or in musical or artistic circles, or in literary improvement, is the young man for your store.

Do not say of these young men: "If they do their work in the business hours, that is all I have to ask." God has made you that man's guardian. I want you to understand that many of these young men are orphans, or worse than orphans, flung out into society to struggle for themselves. A young man is pitched into the middle of the Atlantic Ocean, and a plank is pitched after him, and then he is told to take that and swim ashore. Treat that young man as you would like to have your son treated if you were dead. Do not tread on him. Do not swear at him. Do not send him on a useless errand. Say "Good-morning" and "Good night" and "Good-by." You are deciding that man's destiny for two worlds.

One of my earliest remembrances is of old Arthur Tappan. There were many differences of opinion about his politics, but no one who ever knew Arthur Tappan, and knew him well, doubted his being an earnest Christian. In his store in New York he had a room where every morning he called his employees together, and he prayed with them, read the Scriptures to them, sang with them, and then they entered on the duties of the day. On Monday morning the exercises differed, and he gathered the young men together and asked them where they had attended church, what had been their Sabbath experiences, and what had been the sermon.

That is Christian character demonstrated. There are others in this country and in other lands on a smaller scale doing their best for their employees. They have not forgotten their own early struggles. They remember how they were discouraged, how hungry they were, and how cold and how tired they were, and though they may be sixty or seventy years of age, they know just how a boy feels between ten and twenty, and how a young man feels between twenty and thirty. They have not forgotten it. Those wealthy employers were not originally let down out of heaven with pulleys of silk in a wicker basket, satin-lined, fanned by cherubic wings. They started in roughest cradle, on whose rocker misfortune put her violent foot, and tipped them into the cold world. Those old men are sympathetic with boys.

But you are not only to be kind to those who are under you—Christianly kind—but you are also to see that your boss workman, and your head clerks, and your agents, and your overseers in stores are kind to those under them. Sometimes a man will get a little brief authority in a store or in a factory, and while they are very courteous to you, the capitalist, or to you, the head man of the firm, they are most brutal in their treatment of those under them. God only knows what some of the lads suffer in the cellars and in the lofts of some of our great establishments. They have no one to appeal to. The time will come when their arm will be strong, and they can defend themselves, but not now. Alas! for some of the cash boys and the messenger boys and the boys that sweep the store. Alas! for some of them. Now, you capitalist, you, the head man of the firm, must look, supervise, see those all around you, investigate all beneath you.

And, then, I charge you not to put unnecessary temptation in the way of your young men. Do not keep large sums of money lying around unguarded. Know how much money there is in the till. Do not have the account books loosely kept. There are temptations inevitable to young men, and enough of them, without your putting any unnecessary temptations in their way. Men in Wall Street, having thirty years of reputation for honesty, have dropped into Sing Sing and perdition, and you must be careful how you try a lad of fifteen. And if he do wrong, do not pounce on him like a hyena. If he prove himself unworthy of your confidence, do not call in the police, but take him home. Tell why you dismissed him to those who will give him another chance. Many a young man has done wrong once who will never do wrong again. Ah! my friends, I think we can afford to give everybody another chance, when God knows we should all have been in perdition if he had not given us ten thousand chances.

Then, if in moving around your factory, or mill, or barn, or store you are inexorable with young men, God will remember it. Some day the wheel of fortune will turn, and you will be a pauper, and your daughter will go to the work-house, and your son will die on the scaffold. If in moving among your young men you see one with an ominous pallor of cheek, or you hear him coughing behind the counter, say to him; "Stay home a day or two and rest, or go out and breathe the breath of the hills." If his mother die, do not demand that on the day after the funeral he be in the store. Give him, at least, a week to get over that which he will never get over.

Employers, urge upon your employees, above all, a religious life. So far from that, how is it, young men? Instead of being cheered on the road to heaven, some of you are caricatured, and it is a hard thing for you to keep your Christian integrity in that store or factory where there are many hostile to religion. Go to heaven yourself, O employer! Take all your people with you. Soon you will be through buying and selling, and through with manufacturing and building, and God will ask you: "Where are all those people over whom you had so great influence? Are they here? Will they be here?" O ship-owners! into what harbor will your crew sail? Oh, you merchant grocers! are those young men that under your care are providing food for the bodies and families of men, to go starved forever? O, you manufacturers, with so many wheels flying, and so many bands pulling, and so many new patterns turned out, and so many goods shipped, are the spinners, are the carmen, are the draymen, are the salesmen, are the watchers of your establishments working out everything but their own salvation? Can it be that, having those people under your care five, ten, twenty years, you have made no everlasting impression for good on their immortal souls? God turn us all back from such selfishness, and teach us to live for others and not for ourselves.

OUR CLAIM AGAINST THE SULTAN

For the Destruction of tne American Mission Buildings in Harpoot and Marash during the Armenian Massacres in 1896

DIPLOMATIC negotiations make slow progress toward a settlement of the claim made by the American government against Turkey, for the losses sustained by the American Missions during the riots and massacres of 1896. Many of the readers of this journal will recall the terrible time of Armenia's sorest persecution, when her defenceless Christian peasantry fell by thousands under the murderous attack of the semi-savage Kurds and the equal bloodthirsty Turkish soldiery. When the slaughter was at its height, the missionaries of the American Board, at some twenty or more stations throughout Armenia—now geographically known as Anatolia—were in constant peril. They did not liesitate to jeopardize their own lives to save the helpless Armenians who sought a refuge in the mission buildings. In all history, there is no more heroic story than that of the brave, consecrated men and women who often stood between the Armenians and their would-be murderers. What Grace Kimball and her missionary associates did at Van, and what Corinna Shattuck accomplished at Oorfa, will not be forgotten by those who cherish the record of Christian courage and confidence in Divine protection.

But although the fanatical Moslem bands who were drenching the plains and valleys of Asia Minor with blood hesitated to attack the missionaries or those within the mission compounds, fearing the consequences, or possibly being instructed to avoid the missionaries altogether, such instructions, if ever given, proved futile; for the mobs attacked the missions and invaded them in pursuit of the fleeing Armenians, whom the missionaries were powerless to protect. At Marash, the handsome American college was attacked and left practically a ruin, the buildings and contents being almost demolished. At Harpoot, the eight buildings which constitute the mission group were partially destroyed, the furniture, books and apparatus, and the private belongings of the missionaries, teachers and students being wantonly burned or demolished, and the occupants of all the buildings driven out and compelled to seek shelter where they might. Constant peril and great hardships were the lot of the missionaries at these two places, and indeed all through Anatolia. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD published full details of the outrage shortly after their occurrence. It is on account of the damage to the missionary property at Marash and Harpoot that our government has made a demand on Turkey for an indemnity of $90,000.

It is interesting to note the ingenuity with which Turkey strives to evade the payment of this just claim. The Sultan's government contends: (1) That it is not responsible for events beyond its control, after it had taken reasonable precautions to protect the property; and (2) that it should not be asked to pay the claim, since its payment would involve a settlement of claims by other governments which are awaiting action on the American claim as a precedent. The Porte has also hinted, indirectly, that if payment is pressed, and especially if any naval demonstration is made by the United States, or if a Turkish port should be seized for its revenues, the Sultan might be tempted to arouse the Mohammedan world against any nation so disposed to act. A more practical, yet hardly more honorable, Turkish suggestion was to the effect that the Porte could engage an American builder to construct a warship for its navy, and that it would be an easy matter to add $100,000 to the price, which Turkey would willingly pay. The builder, in turn, paying that amount in excess over to our government. It is hardly necessary to state that this suggestion, whether official or not, has not been entertained for a moment by the American government, which insists that the debt be paid in an open and honorable manner.

Such, at latest accounts, was the situation regarding the American claim against the Sultan. That the latter is by no means easy regarding it may be inferred from the fact that he has granted a long deferred privilege to Roberts College, the great American educational institution near Constantinople. An imperial irade has been issued, giving the college the right to erect additional buildings and to extend its general educational plan.

Roberts College is named after its founder, Christopher R. Roberts, a wealthy New York merchant, who visited Turkey during the Crimean War, and was then impressed with the need of institutions for higher education in the Sultan's dominions. He invited Dr. Cyrus Hamlin to aid him in founding a college in the East. In 1863, the college was opened in a rented building on the banks of the Bosphorus, Mr. Roberts supplying all the necessary funds. Up to the time of his death, in 1878, this generous benefactor gave altogether nearly half a million dollars toward the project, besides bequeathing a fifth of his large estate for its permanent support. He was a man of abounding faith, and carried out successfully plans which others would have given up in despair, the project being constantly beset by political and religious obstacles raised by the Turkish government and people.

In 1864, Roberts College was chartered under the laws of the State of New York, and five years later, in 1869, the Sultan issued an irade granting to the college all the privileges and advantages enjoyed by educational institutions in Turkey. Immediately afterward, the corner stone of the new college buildings was laid on the heights of Roumeii Hissar, the first building erected being now known as Hamlin Hall.

The vice-president of the faculty of the college, Albert E. Long, D.D., is the popular professor of natural sciences. His heart is wrapped up in the education of the bright-eyed boys, who regard him with respect and love. Here you may listen, with strange fellow-students from Jerusalem and Cairo, to President Washburn's lectures on psychology, or to his latest views on political economy. In another room you may listen to an interesting lecture by Alexander van Millingen on history. The student in science would be delighted at the equipment he finds in the hands of William T. Ormiston in the chemical laboratory. He is professor of geology and mineralogy.

Since its opening, 6,312 students have been enrolled. About 250 students are now in attendance. It is interesting to see how cosmopolitan a class room becomes when there are in it, as in this one, Armenians, Bulgarians, Greeks, Turks, Israelites and Egyptians. A new building is being erected for the accommodation of the preparatory department.

INTERNATIONAL LESSON FOR JUNE 3: Matthew 9: 35 to 10: 8
Golden Text, Matt. 10: 29: "It is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father that speaketh in you"

VISITING in Jerusalem, we entered a mission to the Jews, and were disappointed to find so few present. The count proved to be twelve, whereupon we remembered with encouragement that twelve earnest Jews had turned the world upside down. Our great denominations, which are turning to fasting and prayer over recent decline in growth, may profitably look back to the time when the statistics of the church were all in one word, "twelve." Jesus standing out of doors in the midst of that church of twelve, without architecture or ritual, exclaimed: "In this place is One greater than the Temple." The Temple, then counted "the leading church in town," was in reality only the tomb of a dead faith. The greatness of a church should be measured not by the size or elegance of its temple, nor by the numbers and standing of its members, but by its fellowship with Christ. The original Church was simply "the company of Jesus." Many who are feeling that church machinery has become too elaborate will find their yearnings for the simplicity of the New Testament voiced in the following recent poem of Hon. John D. Long, Secretary of the Navy:

JAMES II.

I would, dear Jesus, I could break
The hedge that creeds and hearsay make:
And like thy first disciples, be
In person led and taught by thee.

I read thy words, so strong, so sweet;
I seek the footprints of thy feet;
But men so mystify the trace,
I long to see thee face to face.

Wouldst thou not let me at thy side,
In thee, in thee so sure, confide?
Like John, upon thy breast recline
And feel thy heart make mine divine.

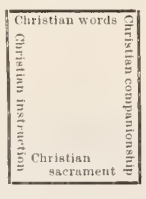
The Good Shepherd Needs Helpers

As sheep not having a shepherd. "Jesus went about teaching, preaching, healing"—his work as a "Good Shepherd"—but he saw in every direction multitudes more than he could personally teach and heal, "distressed and scattered as sheep not having a shepherd," and "he was moved with compassion for them." Disease and ignorance and sin all called forth his pity. Christ will not do all the shepherding himself. Nor will he call on angels to do it. Men must build a sheepfold—the Church. Here are its four walls:

BARTHOLOMEW



Church membership does not save us by any magic, but it makes it harder to do wrong and easier to do right through the influence of Christian vows, Christian companionship, Christian instruction and Christian sacraments, which last remind us at once of solemn vows and great truths.

Under-Shepherds Chosen

Pray the Lord that he send laborers. Jesus had spoken of the multitudes, not only as sheep, but also as a harvest. In either figure we are to pray that the Lord will "send" helpers, and then let us help to answer our own prayers by going when and where God sends us. The word "apostles" means those "sent." The divine sending is best pictured in Isaiah 6, where the prophet pictures himself in young manhood before the throne of God, hearing divine voices that praise God, and others that cry to men, "Whom shall I send and who will go for us?" to which this young prophet, whose lips have been purged and fired by the live coal from the altar, replies: "Here am I; send me." He who really believes God has sent him is a resistless man. The colored preacher who quoted it, "Here am I; send him," was unconsciously true to life, if not to Scripture. "Send somebody else" was the cry even of Moses at first (Exodus 3), and has been the cry of many to the last. We are not only sent, but may help God also in the sending of others.

MATTHEW

He called to him his twelve disciples. The name "disciples" means learners, and is applied to all who came to Christ to learn of him. Seventy of these were later sent out two and two to preach. The largest number of "disciples" ever mentioned was the "five hundred brethren" that met him after the resurrection. Counting the women, he had probably not more than a thousand followers when he ascended, as the result of three matchless years of ministry. The twelve apostles were an inner circle of ministers, of whom three—Peter, James and John—formed the innermost cabinet of Christ.

Memory Helps for Children and Others

Would you like to hear about how I taught the names of the apostles and the facts concerning them to my Sunday School scholars? First, I tested them by asking them to name them. They readily mentioned Peter and John, James, Matthew and Judas. Then they hesitated, and named Mark and Luke, and said they did not know the others. They were much surprised when I told them that Mark and Luke were not apostles. They said they thought they must be, because they had written a part of the Bible. They were still more surprised, when I told them that only five of the apostles were writers of the Bible. At this juncture I unwrapped a box I had brought with me, and from it I took two small figures attired in Oriental garments. I stood them side by side on a table at the extreme right, and said: "These will represent the two brothers, Peter and Andrew." Then I took two more figures out of the box, saying: "Here are two more brothers, James and John." I stood them side by side at a remove from the two first placed. I said: "You see we have two sets of brothers. Now I will tell you of three others who were brothers." I took three figures from the box and stood them on the left side of the table. "These will represent James the less, and Jude or Thaddeus and Simon." Over and over again we repeated the names of the three sets of brothers. Taking another figure out of the box and placing it in the middle of the table, I said: "This will represent Matthew. He had no brother among the apostles. I will place a small table in front of him with some rolls of paper lying on it and some bits of money, because Matthew was a tax-collector when Jesus called him to be an apostle. I will throw a small net over Peter, Andrew, James and John, for they were fishermen. James the less, and Jude and Simon were probably cousins of Jesus, but we do not know their occupation. James and John were also cousins of Jesus, making five cousins in all." Then I took three figures, one by one, and stood them behind the others, apart from each other. "These had no brothers among the apostles. Their names are Philip, Bartholomew or Nathaniel and Thomas." Over and over again we repeated these names. "There remains but one to be placed," said I, taking the last figure out of the box. "I will place him among the others, with his face turned aside. You can tell his name, I am sure." "Judas." After this I let them come one by one and name the whole company. Then, I said: "There is still something in my box for you to see. I have little books representing books of the Bible. I would like you to tell me to which of the apostles I shall give them as Bible writers." They could not tell me, so I placed two books in the hands of Peter, and opened my Bible to the parts which he wrote, first and second Epistles of Peter. Then turning to the Gospel of Mark, I said: "It is thought that Mark was Peter's secretary and that the Gospel of Mark is really Peter's Gospel." Then I placed five books in the hands of John and we opened our Bibles to the parts which he wrote, namely: the Gospel according to John; first, second, third Epistles of John and Revelation. "There is a book in the Bible called 'James,' but let us not make the mistake of thinking that either one of the apostles named James wrote it. It was written by another James—not an apostle—James, the brother of Jesus. Here is another book to be placed. I will give it to Matthew." And we opened our Bibles to the Gospel according to Matthew. "Here is another book; I will give it to Jude, for he wrote a book of the Bible—a very small one—one chapter of only twenty five verses. Now I have more books left for another apostle. You name over the apostles one by one, and let me tell you which one wrote these books." "No, no," I kept saying as they were named. "You have not found him? Well, I will have to take one away, and put in his place the apostle who was chosen by Jesus after he had gone back to heaven." Then I placed a figure representing Paul in the place where Judas had stood, and we opened our Bibles to the books which Paul had written. I feel very sure that my scholars will never forget the facts they have thus learned about the apostles.

Christ Needs All Sorts of Talents

How unlike each other were these apostles, though every one was, in his way, seeking to be like Christ—to obey his word, "Follow me!" What a variety of talents, used in what a variety of ways! Less than half wrote for publication. Some of them were not even great preachers. James served God in an early death; John, in a century of life. Matthew, the tax-collector, consecrated his business methods, which helped him to make a gospel of reckoning. Zelotes, his opposite, who despised Jews that would accept an office from Roman oppressors, worked with Matthew to convert them. And Peter—at one moment injudiciously brave, at the next a rank coward—God could use him, too, even after he had relapsed into profanity and reformed. The story of the apostles is the parable of the talents in real life, only that "James the less," the man of one talent, did not "bury it," but made the most of it. There seems to be no reason why any one, whatever his sin, whatever his talent, should disregard the call, "Follow me."

PHILIP

Every kind of Christian worker seems to be represented among the apostles: The impetuous worker, Peter; the doubting but loyal worker, Thomas; the devoted, loving worker, John; the practical worker, James; the sincere Bible worker, Nathaniel; the recruiting workers, Andrew and Philip; the methodical worker, Matthew; the patriotic worker, Simon, the zealot; the prophet-like worker, Jude; the obscure worker, James the less; the inconstant, covetous worker, Judas.

Dr. Joseph Cook says of the strange choice of Judas: "Christ probably chose him that if malice itself could find ought against him it might have free scope and full swing. We do need Judas to learn what aspect the Saviour manifested to a subtle, captious and treacherous witness, and thus to have his testimony, alongside with that of God and the holy angels, to the truth of his claims, the purity of his life."

OUR ENDEAVOR PILGRIMS IN PALESTINE

EN ROUTE TO RAMLEH
REVS. E. H. HARSHAW, T. L. SMITH, C. S. MASON

LOCOMOTION IN THE ORIENT
CONDUCTOR F. C. OTTMAN

A WAYSIDE INN
BETWEEN JAFFA AND JERUSALEM

AT nine o'clock on Thursday, March 8th, we landed at Jaffa, and so first set foot in Palestine. Jaffa is the ancient Joppa, and is only thirty-five miles from Jerusalem. Here dwelt Simon the tanner, and here Peter had his vision on the housetop, and met the messengers from Cornelius. Here Jonah took ship for Tarshish. Here we were shown "the tomb of Dorcas," after which we took carriage, drawn by horses three abreast, en route for Jerusalem, via Ramleh, over the Plain of Sharon, on the side of the valley of Ajalon, where Joshua (chapter 10) halted the sun and moon.

Ramleh is a town of 3,000 population, inhabited by Arabian sheiks, a deceitful set. We remained over night at Reinhardt's Hotel. From the Tower of Ramleh, we obtained a fine view: the Mediterranean Sea, Lydia or Lud, olive plantations, the Blue Mountains of the Judean range, the fertile fields, and, below, a Mohammedan graveyard, with numerous Mohammedans, some worshiping, some lounging, some playing. Coming down from the top of the Tower, we found that the beggars had followed us even there, and, with unceasing cries, they asked for "baksheesh." We left Ramleh Friday morning, and started on our journey by carriage. We passed Mount Gisert of the Crusaders, and many other towns as we went up, up over the stony hills until, after eight hours' ride, the Holy City met our view. Prominent amid the features of the scene is the church of seven domes on Mount of Olives. Tears would come as we viewed dear old Jerusalem, the place of His trial, crucifixion, burial, resurrection, ascension. Quickly settled at Grand New Hotel, we went at once to Gethsemane, the olive press, and returned with hearts full of praise for him who loved us.

The Ascent of Olivet

On our journey up the hill of Ascension, the Mount of Olives, we were followed by a poor leper woman, who piteously cried "Lepra. Lepra." Oh, that Jesus might come quickly, and, as of old, touch with healing power!

We stopped often to look at the sacred city, built upon the ruins of the past, which are buried one hundred and thirty feet or more. We cared little for the Russian mosque; the Pater Noster Church; the Church of the Ascension, and the varied scenery, for we were seeking the olive groves; and under the sheltering branches of one of the trees facing the Dead Sea we lifted our hearts in prayer to him who has ascended on high, and now intercedes for the saints. With unquestioning faith we believe it, and in spite of the storm, for it was raining, we continued our notes of praise. Each of the party led in prayer and we felt the glow of divine fellowship. Because we had fellowship with God the Father, and God the Son, by his divine spirit, we had fellowship one with another.

TENTING IN PALESTINE

The scene is photographed upon our memory, but we did want a picture to send THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, but the storm prevented. In descending to the valley we passed the lepers, who sit near the entrance of the Garden of Gethsemane, close to the spot which is marked as the place where Judas betrayed his Master. In the rain the lepers sit, moaning, crying for a gift. Beyond is the place of Gehenna, the place of burning garbage. Near by is the Hill of Evil Counsel and the Field of Blood. What a picture! We passed on down into the valley, over the place of the Brook, and ascended the Via Dolorosa to our temporary home near Mt. Zion and the Jaffa Gate. Arrived there, a number of the pilgrims gathered in a cosy room to study the parables which Jesus spake at Jerusalem. This was the profitable close of a memorable day.

Next day was rainy, and a rainy day in Jerusalem is not inviting. The muddy, dirty streets we found to be slimy and slippery. It seemed cold as Greenland's icy mountains after the weather in Egypt. It was a day for note-taking, study and correspondence, but some in their feverish excitement go through the vile streets to visit the Turkish mosque, the Haram-esh-sherif, Mosque of Omar, or the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. Your correspondent spent a pleasant time in company with the Hon. Selah Merrill, U. S. Consul, who took great pains in showing the curiosities and articles of virtu, which he has gathered for the Museum of Palestine. Our American Consul is courteous, thoroughly posted and a ripe scholar, and although very busy finds time to help the benighted pilgrims, much to the comfort of the latter.

The "Green Hill Far Away"

Subsequently we visited the place of Pilate's judgment hall, and saw the arch Ecce Homo, or arch of Pilate, marking the spot where the Roman governor is said to have uttered the words recorded in John 19: 5–6. "Behold the man . . . I find no fault in him." We were told that Mount Moriah, Solomon's Quarries and Ecce Homo, have never been questioned as to their being the true sites. We beheld them again and again, then looked away to the "green hill far away

Outside a city wall,
Where the dear Lord was crucified
Who died to save us all."

Divided into three parties, the pilgrims "did" the city, the Nile exiles, Revs. Dr. Chapman, Shaw and others, who were stuck on the sand there, having arrived. The latter were in pretty good shape, considering the heat which they had experienced—one hundred in the shade. Rev. Dr. Shaw's little "donk" threw him off, but the good doctor was soon on top again. These little donkeys have very little respect for clergymen.

A PRAYER SERVICE ON OLIVET

On Saturday afternoon we made a trial of our saddle horses, for the "long tour." Some of the riders were more tired than the horses. It was a great sight to see the horsemen and women riding up, over the new road to Olivet, made for the German Emperor. A second prayer service was held on the Mount of Olives, where Christ answered the prayer of his disciples, "Lord, teach us how to pray." On Sunday the 1900 pilgrimage party divided up into little groups. Revs. Dr. Chapman, Hopwood, Ottman, and others took carriages to Mount Olivet, where they held special service. Another group, including Revs. Messrs. Harshaw, Countermine, Smith and Mason, held services on Calvary, outside the city's gate. The group of ladies and gentlemen read in turn Luke 1: 5; Luke 2: 21–29; 46: 52; John 2: 13–17, and other passages relating to Christ's visits to Jerusalem. Revs. C. S. Mason and J. D. Countermine led in prayer. Just at the brow of the hill, to the south, was another group headed by Don O. Shelton, and there, overlooking the garden tomb was a group from the North of Ireland, headed by Rev. J. Harrison, a great admirer of Moody. At Christ's Church was another group of worshipers, while some went out as far as Bethany to worship.

At 3:30 p. m., Rev. T. L. Smith spoke at the Alliance meeting. Some of our party attended the Sunday School for the Arabians.

At 6 o'clock the parlor of the Grand New Hotel was full, waiting for the Rev. Dr. Chapman, who gave an inspiring talk upon the text, "Jesus went unto the Mount of Olives."

He spoke of Christ's love for Mt. Olivet, the place of prayer; the place where he taught his disciples how to pray: the place where his heart yearned over Jerusalem, was beautifully portrayed. Revs. Drs. Hopwood, Countermine and Young, led in fervent prayer. It was a season of contemplation, the fountains of our hearts were broken up and eyes were moist with tears. The divine One was sensibly present. Thus closed our Sabbath day in Jerusalem.

King Abgarus and the Christ

INTEREST has been aroused by the publication of a cable dispatch from Ephesus reporting the discovery there of an inscription on a palace portal of the contents of two letters, and purporting to be addressed to Abgarus, King of Edessa, to Christ, and the other to be Christ's reply to Abgarus. In the one, Abgarus relates that he has heard of Christ and his wonderful cures and asks the Saviour to come and heal him of his diseases. The response commends the faith of Abgarus, who, though not having seen, believes, says that the writer (Christ) must accomplish his mission in his own country and then return to him that sent him, but that after that he will send one of his disciples to Abgarus to heal him and give life to him and all with him. The dispatch has yet to be confirmed and surprise is expressed that the inscription, if genuine, should be found at Ephesus, which is many miles from Edessa. The daily papers have not been slow to so exploit the matter as to impress the ordinary reader with the idea that the correspondence is an entirely new discovery. This is far from being the case. Its existence has long been known to Bible scholars. The Council of Rome, held A. D. 494, declared the supposed letter of Christ apocryphal, although in the Greek church many continued to believe in its authenticity. That Edessa and its king early yielded to Christianity seems to be an established historical fact, and this and other facts could easily have been used to give color to any number of legends concerning the Christ.

It is to the historian Eusebius that we are indebted apparently for the statement that Christ himself wrote the letter to King Abgarus. Addai, who, according to Eusebius, was one of the seventy disciples sent forth by Christ, is reported to have recorded that Christ received the letter and gave a verbal reply, every word being written down, not by Christ, but by the noble messenger sent by the king. The story of this mission and the reply, verbal or otherwise, are regarded by almost all Bible scholars as purely legendary.

Even should the cabled report of the existence of the inscriptions at Ephesus be confirmed, the authenticity of any communication between Christ and King Abgarus would not be proved. In the early centuries legends were plentifully manufactured and the inscription might have been either an artful scheme intended to confirm the legend or the work of one deluded into the belief that it was true.

These Questions Will be Answered June 20

1. Is there any reason to believe that the spirits of our departed loved ones are with us, and if so, do they have any influence over us?

2. What is the origin of the barber's pole and of its decoration in red, white and blue?

3. When were playing cards invented?

4. In Genesis 22: 1, we read: "God did tempt Abraham." In James 1: 13, we read: "Neither tempteth he (God) any man." How may we reconcile these seemingly contradictory passages?

5. What is the meaning of the expression "the law of sin and death," in Romans 8: 2?

6. What was the cause of the Crimean war and under whose generalship was it conducted?

7. What is the origin of our secret fraternities and which of those now in existence has the oldest record?

8. How many different kinds of laughter are mentioned or illustrated in the Bible?

9. What is the general view among Bible scholars as to the authorship of the Epistle to the Hebrews?

10. There is a story told of some emperor or monarch, who asked his chaplain to give him in one word an argument for the Christian religion. "The Jews," responded the chaplain. Who was the questioner in this instance?

Questions of the Week

1. What is the peace, and what the war footing of Germany, Russia, France, Austria, Great Britain and Italy, and what the respective number of big guns which each country owns?

Captain W. R. Hamilton, of the United States Army, has recently given the following statistics: Peace footing, Germany, 687,383 officers and men, 132,500 horses, 2,864 guns; Russia, 949,188 officers and men, 188,300 horses, 2,648 guns; France, 573,160 officers and men, 124,612 horses, 3,188 guns; Austria, 269,708 officers and men, 67,000 horses, 1,672 guns; Great Britain, 217,007 officers and men, 29,000 horses, 720 guns; Italy, 212,752 officers and men, 62,700 horses, 1,268 guns. War footing, Germany, 66,558 officers, 5,738,793 men, 202,860 horses, 4,888 guns; Russia, 65,990 officers, 5,143,574 men, 313,111 horses, 6,124 guns; France, 60,958 officers, 4,933,190 men, 198,418 horses, 5,008 guns; Austria, 57,952 officers, 1,667,450 men, 82,892 horses, 2,872 guns; Great Britain, 686,795 officers and men, 53,000 horses, 1,132 guns; Italy, 55,442 officers, 2,047,536 men, 55,820 horses, 2,012 guns. In the war footing statistics, the term men includes the non-commissioned officers. The totals under a peace footing are as follows: 2,909,198 men, 605,112 horses, and 12,360 guns. The war total of men and officers is 20,524,244, certainly an appalling aggregate. S. V. LEECH.

2. What are the essentials to success in business life?

The essentials to success in America are energy, thoroughness, courage and perseverance. Energy indicates intense earnestness, without which success is unattainable. "He did it with all his heart and prospered," was said of Hezekiah, who found favor of the Lord. Thoroughness indicates well-doing and completeness. Emerson says: "If a man write a better book, preach a better sermon or make a better mouse-trap than his neighbor, though he build his house in the woods, the world will make a beaten path to his door." One must have courage also, for a person fearful of defeat is already half-defeated, and fear is no element of success: "Courage is victory, timidity is defeat." Unless one have perseverance also, all the other essentials prove unavailing. The one who never gives up or becomes discouraged, wins success at last. Seeming impossibilities give way before energy and perseverance. "The nerve that never relapses, the eye that never blenches, the thought that never wanders—these are the masters of victory," and victory over all obstacles is success.

C. R. KIMBALL.

3. What is the most valuable diamond in the world?

Patient research is likely to make this question all the more puzzling. If the diamond belonging to the crown of Portugal is genuine, it is the most valuable in the world, being worth, according to some estimates, $28,000,000. The one belonging to the Sultan of Matan, Borneo, weighs 367 carats, and is worth $3,500,000; if the Portuguese diamond is counted out, this ranks first. The Orloff diamond, belonging to the crown of Russia, ranks next, with the celebrated Pitt, originally sold by Mr. Pitt to the Duke of Orleans, and the Kohinoor in the crown of Great Britain, as close seconds.

4. What actual loss did Esau sustain by the trick which his brother Jacob played on him in securing the birthright blessing from Isaac?

The loss of the privileges which belonged to the first-born son; the special consecration to God (Ex. 22: 29); the honor of standing next in authority to the parents (Gen. 49: 3); the double portion of the inheritance (Deut. 21: 17); the succession in the government of the family or kingdom (II. Chron. 21: 3); and, in Esau's case, the spiritual privilege of being the progenitor of the promised Messiah (Gen. 25: 33; Heb. 12: 16, 17). G. E. KRAUTH.

5. Given an income of fifteen hundred dollars a year, what disposition should be made of the same by a family of four persons, father, mother, son and daughter, the children being under ten years of age?

Set aside faithfully one tenth ($150) as the Lord's, to be used for religious and benevolent purposes. Twenty per cent. ($300) is as much as one should pay for rent, fuel and lighting, and less if possible. $500 should feed the family well if not luxuriously. $200 will clothe them fittingly. $75 will be needed for vacation purposes, what is saved from board at home during vacation being added to the amount. $100 should be put by to be drawn on only in case of sickness or emergency. $50. will be well expended on current and other literature while the church pew, life insurance and incidentals will use up the balance. If a domestic servant is kept the figures need changing. S. JEFFERIES.

6. What is the largest temple in the world used for the worship of the Christian's God?

St. Peter's Cathedral, Rome, is the largest and grandest building in the world devoted to the worship of God. It stands on the site of Nero's circus. The total length of the interior is 612½ English feet; transept, 446½ feet; length of nave, 152½ feet; diameter of cupola, 193 feet; height of dome from pavement to top of cross, 448 feet. Its area is 212,321 square feet, while the next largest cathedral, St. Paul's, London, covers only 108,982 square feet. The foundation was laid in 1450 A.D. The building was dedicated in 1626, but it was not completed for many years after. R. BROWN.

7. What in brief may be said to be the history of writing?

It is generally supposed that the art of writing was introduced into Europe by the Phoenicians and that their system was based on the Egyptian. It is claimed by scholars that all alphabets were originaliy hieroglyphic, and that all systems of writmg may be traced back to five systems: the Egyptian, the Cuneiform, the Chinese, the Mexican or Aztec, and the characters of Yucatan. The Egyptian system has exercised the widest influence in the world. The modern German alphabet was introduced about the middle of the thirteenth century. The Norman style came to England with William the Conqueror and the English court-hand—adapted from the Saxon—was in use from the sixteenth century to the time of George II. There are no traces of writing at all in Britain before the Roman conquest.

8. What is known of the book of Iddo, the seer, mentioned in II. Chron. 9: 29; 12: 15; 13: 22?

Iddo is a prophet of Judah, who wrote the history of Rehoboam and Abijah or perhaps it would be more proper to say, who, in conjunction with Seraiah, kept the public rolls during the reigns of these two kings (II. Chron. 12: 15), and who in that capacity recorded certain predictions against Jeroboam (II. Chron. 9: 29); although some commentators think that the latter was a different person. According to Jerome he is identified with Oded (II. Chron. 15: 1). Josephus states that thus Iddo was the prophet sent to Jeroboam at Bethel and who was slain by a lion in consequence of his disobedience (I. Kings 13).

9. In "The Christian Herald" of March 28, a list of eleven metals was published, each of which is more valuable than gold. What, in the briefest terms possible, is the principal use of these metals?

"As metals," one authority states, "these elements, with one or two exceptions, are of no commercial importance, but the compounds of some of them I know not of." Another authority goes into details, as follows:

ARIUM "does not exist." BARIUM—"Chromate used as yellow paint, sulphide used for phosphorescent paint, sulphate used as adulterant, peroxide in manufacturing hydrogen peroxide." CHROMIUM—"Chrome-steel excessively hard and tough. Many compounds of chromium employed as pigments, in making artificial gems, etc." GALLIUM—"No more than a couple of pounds of this material has ever been isolated." OSMIUM "is not used at all." In reply to the suggestion that "its alloy, osmiridium, is used for tipping gold pens and for compass bearings, being inoxidizable, proof against acids and non-magnetic," this authority says: "Iridium is used as indicated, but not the alloy, in which the metals occur naturally." PALLADIUM—"For non-magnetic watch springs, for graduations and scientific instruments, verniers, etc." RHODIUM—"Not used." RUBIDIUM—"Metal difficult to prepare and of no technical value; salts rare." THORIUM—"Has been used for incandescent lighting." URANIUM—"Compounds used in photography; glass containing uranium fluoresces; uranium oxide used in porcelain decorations: oxide phosphoresces." INDIUM—"Rare; practically out of the market." EDITOR MAIL-BAG.

10. When was printing for the blind first introduced?

Printing for the blind was first introduced in 1784 by Valentin Hauy, founder of the asylum for blind children in Paris. He made use of a large script character, from which impressions were taken on a prepared paper, the impressions being so deeply sunk as to leave their marks in strong relief and legible to the touch. Hauy's pupils not only read in this way, but executed their own typography, and in 1786 printed an account of their institution and labors as a specimen of their press. In 1827, Gall, of the Edinburgh asylum, printed the gospel of St. John from angular types. This was the first book of the Bible ever printed for the blind. A. B. MILLER.

Miscellaneous Questions

J. M., Cleveland, O. Can a young man (who has a good position as bookkeeper and typewriter, and who is a musician besides) be a good Christian and member of a church, and play in dancing halls at the same time?

He would not be a consistent Christian were he to do so. We should avoid even "the appearance of evil," and certainly a person who devotes his evenings to furnishing music for dancing halls is helping along the devil's work openly.

Mrs. A. B. C., Paineville, Ore. Is it a sin to use the violin for church music, and if so, why? Are not all other instruments used for the same purpose as the violin?

There is no sin in using a violin in church music. It is one of the noblest of instruments, capable of the finest expression. Its introduction is still regarded in many places as an irreverent innovation, but that feeling is rapidly passing away. On the other hand, poor violin playing is an offense against good taste, not to be tolerated in a church choir or anywhere else.

Mrs. Lora M. I., Livermore, Ia., writes:

Your acknowledgment of the $27.60 sent for India's relief fund received in time, and I've been waiting for another collection that was to be sent either through me to you, or to the church's missionary in India; they sent it to the latter. The pastor asked me to aid him in a Sunday evening service, so I did by reading from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and also by essay of prose and some verses. May God bless your effort.

We thank the writer heartily for her efforts in behalf of India, which have already borne fruit. Her letter is a sample of many we are receiving, all of which deserve recognition and thanks.

E. R. R., Chicago, Ill. What is the law of sacrifice as explained by Paul in Heb. 9: 27?

In this text and the context the writer to the Hebrews claims that Christ's one offering of himself takes the place of the oft-repeated sacrifices under the Mosaic dispensation. Christ, when he appears again, will appear without reference to providing an offering for sin—apart from sin—to ensure the full and final salvation of those who trust him.

J. D. A., Sheridan, Mont. What space of time in history is covered by the Old Testament?

The narrative of the Old Testament covers the period from the foundation of the world until about four hundred years before Christ's birth in Bethlehem. Its records were made at various times, covering a period of about one thousand years.

Quenst, Richmond, Va. What is "Primrose Day" and where is it celebrated?

"Primrose Day" is celebrated in England by the Primrose League, April 19, as the anniversary of the death of Lord Beaconsfield, whose favorite flower was the primrose. On that day the Beaconsfield statue is decorated with primroses; the flower is in evidence and all the commemorative functions observed. The Queen usually sends a massive wreath of primroses to be laid on the grave of her dead friend and premier.

Gertrude G., Niles, Mich. What is the correct answer to make when some one says: "I beg your pardon?"

It depends upon circumstances. There are occasions when a simple inclination of the head and a smile are sufficient. "Granted, with pleasure;" "No offence whatever;" "Certainly," and similar expressions are all used, as good taste may dictate. If the apology is a very formal and serious one, a more extended reply might be made: "With the greatest pleasure;" "There is nothing to forgive," or some such expression might be used.

The War in South Africa

SURPRISE is felt in all quarters that Kroonstad, the new capital of the Orange Free State should have fallen almost without a blow. It was generally expected when Gen. Roberts occupied Bloemfontein and the Free Staters removed their seat of government to Kroonstad, that a stubborn resistance to the British advance would be made there. Indeed, it is reported that President Steyn made an earnest appeal to his men to make a stand, and intrenchments had already been constructed, but beyond a few unimportant skirmishes there was no fighting. President Steyn has now made Lindley, a town about fifty miles east of Kroonstad, his capital. It is, however, reported that he accompanied Generals Botha and De Wet across the Vaal River in their flight to Pretoria. Military critics now say that it would have been impossible to defend Kroonstad, because there is open country to the north of the town, in which cavalry could operate, cutting off retreat in the event of the town being taken. General Roberts surprised every one by the rapidity of his march from Bloemfontein to Kroonstad. That town is one hundred and sixty-three miles from Pretoria. The Free State prisoners are loud in their complaints that the Transvaalers have deserted them and have gone off to defend their own homes. It is, however, difficult to see what else they could do. By remaining in the Free State they would have run the risk of being surrounded as Cronje was, and probably they realized that it was wise to get back to the Transvaal while the way was still open. It remains now to be seen whether the Free Staters will go to the Transvaal to help its people in the defence of that country. Present indications are that the majority will return to their homes, leaving the Boers of the Transvaal to continue the war alone. It would appear that the Boers are still hoping for the intervention of some foreign power on their behalf, but Europe, thus far, has turned a deaf ear to their appeals and there is, at present no prospect of our government taking up their cause. It would appear that Mr. Kruger would be wise, in view of the overwhelming force that is swiftly advancing against him, to follow the example of the king whom Christ described:

Or what king going to make war against another king sitteth not down first and consulteth whether he be able with ten thousand to meet him that cometh against him with twenty thousand? Or else, while the other is yet a great way off, he sendeth an embassage and desireth conditions of peace (Luke 14:31, 32).

The State Boundaries

The controversy as to the boundary line between the States of Virginia and Tennessee, which has been in progress for more than a hundred years and involves jurisdiction over a strip of land in the Cumberland Mountains nearly one hundred miles long, has at last reached the Supreme Court of the United States, which has been asked to appoint a board of commissioners to survey and officially to declare where Virginia ends and Tennessee begins. This contest, one of the oldest between the States, is one only of several similar controversies which have been going on for many years. Some of the States involved are Maryland and Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania, Kentucky and Tennessee, West Virginia and Kentucky, Arkansas and Missouri, Texas and Arkansas, and California and Nevada. It would be well for the convenience of the State Governments and the satisfaction of the persons living in the disputed strips if the boundary lines were authoritatively settled. Happily, there is no question of national allegiance involved. No matter which of the States these people belong to, they are citizens of the United States, and their patriotism is not questioned. It is not with them as it is with many people in the religious world, about whom their neighbors and friends are in doubt, and they themselves are not sure whether they belong to Christ or to the world. But as to them God knows, and will eventually authoritatively pronounce judgment.

The Lord knoweth them that are his (II. Timothy 2:19).

Profiting by a Discovery

A western journal, recording the death of a wealthy miner, tells a romantic story of his acquisition of riches. He was a common miner in Colorado, working for two dollars and a half a day. The mine in which he worked was in an excellent neighborhood, and there were well-paying mines all around it, but the owners had tunnelled in all directions and had gone down several hundred feet, without finding the vein. He was employed in an excavation known as "Drift Four." One day, his pick brought down a small piece of ore which looked as if it might be valuable. He put it in his pocket and went on with his work. Soon afterwards an accidental blast destroyed the "drift."

GEN. LORD ROBERTS WRITING DISPATCHES IN A WAGON

and it was not reopened. The miner took his lump of ore to an assayer who reported it unusually rich. The miner said nothing about it, but continued to work in the mine for about two years, when the company became discouraged and closed the works. Then the miner arranged for a twenty-year lease of the abandoned mine. He borrowed all the money he could get and started to find "Drift Four." He worked hard and denied himself every comfort to keep the works going. It took him several months of constant toil and great hardship, but eventually he located the vein and took out an immense amount of paying ore. Then he sold his lease for an enormous sum and set out to enjoy life. His course was very short. Dissipation and idleness undermined his constitution, and in a few months he was dead. If he had done his duty, he would have told the company of his discovery; but the temptation to secure the treasure for himself was too great. He succeeded in enriching himself; but, as often happens to men who prosper by selfish devices, his prosperity proved his ruin.

As the partridge sitteth on eggs and hatcheth not; so he that getteth riches and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool (Jer. 17:11).

A Prince's Complaint

Extracts recently published from the album of the Duchess of Fife, one of the daughters of the Prince of Wales, comprise among others a contribution by her father. He, like other contributors, states his likes and dislikes; among the latter is that of newspapers which persistently misrepresent his conduct in private life, publish false reports of his sayings and doings and make false charges against him. There are many people less conspicuous than he, in his own country and in this who can sympathize with him. It is not, however, always the newspapers that are in fault. They are victimized as frequently and are as much chagrined as the people traduced. Men in the service of the newspapers, who are believed to be reliable and who carry written testimonials to their veracity, will often manufacture the news they are unable to obtain, or will embellish their stories with details which exist only in their imagination. The newspaper is unable to sift the false from the true and trusting to the good faith of the reporter which they have previously had no reason to doubt, publish the story, honestly believing it to be true. The reporter sometimes appears to have omitted from the ten commandments the one which most directly applies to him in the duties he undertakes to perform:

Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor (Ex. 20:16).

A Mountain Mirror

Two travelers in Africa report a remarkable natural curiosity which they found in Katanga, among the upper waters of the Congo. They rested one day in the neighborhood of a huge mountain called by the natives Kahwe-Marwi. It had been raining heavily all day, but in the evening the clouds broke, and the glories of an African sunset gilded the mountain top. It absolutely glowed in the light, and the rays shot from the summit as if from a mirror. The travelers watched it in wonder, and the next morning one of of them set out to discover the cause of the phenomenon. He started at dawn, and began the difficult task of scaling the steep slope of the mountain. He finally reached the highest peak, 6,888 feet above sea level, and there he found a great rock whose side, turned toward the western sun, was as polished and bright as a mirror, and shone like burnished steel. It seemed to be a block of almost pure metal. This shining surface contains several hundred square feet, and fully explains the remarkable refraction of the solar rays. The only explanation of the increased brilliancy on that particular day is that the rain washed away all particles that bedimmed the polished surface and left it a fine natural mirror where the falling beams of light were launched again far out over the plain with dazzling effect. The characters which reflect the beams of the Sun of Righteousness are generally prepared in the same way. The impurities of sin must be removed before the world sees the reflection.

We all with unveiled face, reflecting as a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image from glory to glory (II.Cor. 3:18 R.V.).

BRIEF NOTES

Dr. Talmage has been received with marked enthusiasm in Great Britain. Wheresoever he has preached the crowds have been enormous, filling the largest buildings in the respective towns. In Nottingham, the great Albert Hall was densely packed, and the throng of people outside who could not gain admission refused to go away without a few words from the famous American preacher. Dr. Talmage, therefore, addressed them from the steps of the hall after the service. A similar scene occurred on May 13, in Edinburgh, when Dr. Talmage preached in Synod Hall which holds six thousand persons.

Recently published missionary statistics show that there are now in India 2,797 missionaries, an increase over last year's figures of 329.

The effort to raise an endowment for Tuskegee College, Alabama, is meeting with success. The sum of $165,000 has already been contributed, and it is believed that the fund will yet reach half a million.

The Congregational Home Missionary Society will hold its seventy-fourth annual meeting at Detroit, Mich., on June 5-7. The annual sermon will be preached by Rev. Philip S. Moxom, of Springfield, Mass.

The slave trade is by no means suppressed. The last year's record of sales in Arabia of slaves imported in spite of the vigilance of the patrolling fleet on the eastern coast of Africa shows eleven thousand head. How many died on the journey is unknown, but probably many more than those who reached their destination.

The Annual Report of the American Sunday School Union shows that the amount received for missionary work during the year was $131,795, an increase on the previous year's figures of $10,778. The number of new Sunday Schools organized during the year was 1880, and 515 were reorganized. During the year churches have developed out of Sunday Schools in eighty-nine cases.

In a magazine article just published, Mrs. Hudson says that a woman, who came to Utah with her husband and children from Scotland, was informed that her marriage could not be recognized in Utah, as it was performed by a Presbyterian clergyman in a Presbyterian Church. Her children were illegitimate and she must go through the ceremony of marriage in the Mormon Temple, in order to insure the legitimacy of children who might be born to them in the future.

CHAPTER XXV.

ILLUSTRATIONS BY H. M. PETTIT

Samantha in India

THE palace of the Viceroy is a beautiful structure. It is only two stories high, but each story full and running over with beauty. I d'no but the widder Albert's house goes ahead of this but it don't seem as if it could, it don't seem as if Solomon's or the Queen of Sheba's could look any better. Though of course I never neighbored with Miss Sheba, bein' considerable younger than she, and never got round to visit the widder Albert, though I've always wanted to, and suppose that I may have disappointed her that year when I wuz in London, and kep' by business and P. Martin Smythe from visitin' her.

Miss Curzon is a real handsome woman. and always wuz when she was a neighborin' girl, as you may say, in Chicago, but the high position she's in now has gin nobility to her mean, and the mantilly of dignity she wears sets well on her.

She seemed real glad to see me; she had hearn on me, so she said, and she said she had laughed some when she read my books, and had cried too, and I sez, "I hope you didn't cry because you felt obleeged to read 'em, or somebody made you."

And she sez, "No," and she went on furder to say how they had soothed the trials of a relative, aged ninety, and had been a stay and solace to one of her pa's great aunts.

And a bystander standin' by come up and introduced himself and said how much my books had done for some relations of his mother-in-law who had read 'em in Sing Sing and the Tombs. And after considerable such interestin' and agreeable conversation Miss Curzon branched off and asked me if there wuz any new news at home.

And I sez, "No; things are goin' in the same old way. Your pa's folks are in good health so fur as I know, and the rest of the four hundred are so as to git about, for I hear on 'em to horse shows and huntin' foxes across the country and playin' tee or tee he."

She said, "Yes, golf wuz gettin' to be very popular in America." And I went on with what little news I could about the most important folks. Sez I, "Mr. and Miss McKinley are enjoyin' pretty good health, and Mr. Griggs is real well; Mr. Roberts don't feel quite so well as he did a spell ago, but he is so as to be a movin', and the political bosses and the Liquor Power are rulin' things jest the same as ever. Big trusts are flourishin', Capital covered with gold and diamonds is settin' on the bent back of Labor, drivin' the poor critter where they want to, and the Man with the Hoe is hoein' away jest as usual." And here Arvilly broke in (she had been introduced) and sez she, "Uncle Sam is girdin' up his lions and stands with a chip on his shoulder ready to step up and take a round with any little republic that don't want to be benevolently assimilated."

But I spoke right up, and sez, "He is a good-hearted creeter, Uncle Sam is, but needs a adviser time and agin, and not bein' willin' to let wimmen have a word to say, I d'no what will become on him; bime-by mebby he'll see that he had better hearn to me."

Jest then we hearn a bystander standin' nigh by us talkin' about the last news from Africa, and I sez to Miss Curzon, "It is too bad about the war, hain't it?" And she sez, "Yes indeed!" She felt dretful about it, I could see, and I sez "So do I. And I feel bad about our war, too; we've got one;" I didn't know as she'd heard on't but she had. And I sez, "You and I can't stop it, Miss Curzon; a few ambitious or quarrelsome or greedy politicians will make a war and then wimmen have to stand it. There hain't nothin' right in it, seein' they are half of the world, and men couldn't have got into the world at all if it hadn't been for wimmen, and then when wimmen has got 'em here, and took care on 'em till they can run alone, then they go to bossin' her round the first thing and makin' her no end of trouble, makin' wars and things." And she said she felt jest so, too. "But," sez I, "excuse me for introducin' personal and political matters on festive boards" (we wuz standin' on a kind of a platform built up on the green and velvety grass). Sez I, "I am real glad to see you lookin' so well, and your companion, too." She did look handsome as a picter, and handsomer enough sight than some, chromos and such. And seein' that she had so many to talk to, I withdrawed myself, but as I kinder backed myself off I backed right into Arvilly, who wuz takin' out the Twin Crimes out of her workbag, and I sez, "Arvilly, you shall not canvas Miss Curzon to-night."

And she sez, "I'd like to see you stop me, Josiah Allen's wife, if I set out to do anything." She looked real beligerent. But I got her into a corner and appealed to her shiverly and pity, and finally I got her to put her book up in her work-bag. Arvilly is good-hearted if you know how to manage her. I knew Miss Curzon would be tired enough to drop down before we all got away, without being canvassed, if she has got two hundred hired help in the house.

Well, we roamed along through the beautiful walks, sweet with perfume and balmy with flowers, brilliant with innumerable lights, and thronged with a gaily dressed crowd and the air throbbing with entrancing strains of music.

Robert Strong looked noble and handsome that night; I wuz proud to think he belonged to our party. He didn't need uniforms and ribbons and stars and orders to proclaim his nobility, no more than his City of Justice needed steeples. It shone out of his liniment so everybody could see it. It seemed that he and Mr. Curzon wuz old friends; they talked together like brothers.

Dorothy wuz as sweet as a posy in her pretty pink frock, trimmed with white rosies, and her big, white picture hat—the prettiest girl there, I thought; and I believe Robert thought so, too—he acted as if he did. And Miss Meechim wuz in her element. The halls of the noble and gay wuz where her feet loved to linger. And she seemed to look up to me more than ever after she see my long interview with Lady Curzon, as she called her. And then what must have been her feelin's towards me an hour later! But I must not anticipate and hitch the horse too fur from the buggy, but between the thills, where it belongs.

I had got kinder seperated from my party; Josiah had been walkin' with me down a beautiful path, but he see a man some distance off that he said he believed his soul wuz Elder Minkley, and he wuz all rousted up thinkin' that he could hear the last news from Jonesville. I knowed it wuzn't him way off in Injy, but couldn't hender my pardner from satisfyin' himself, so I wuz left alone walkin' down that beautiful shaded path, with here and there a colored light, showing how sweet the soft, perfumed dusk wuz.

Josiah and I returned to our tarven, but the rest of the party wanted to stay some later. We wanted dretfully to go to Benares, and on to Agra so's to see that wonderful monument to Wedded Love—the Taj Mahal—I spoze the most beautiful building in the hull world; and certainly it is rared up to as noble a sentiment; and its being a kind of rareity, too, made me want to see it the worst kind.

But we had loitered so on our travels that we had to hurry up a little in order to arrive at the Paris Exposition the Fourth of July—United States day. I felt that I couldn't bear to git there any later and keep France a waitin' for us, a worryin' for fear we wouldn't git there at all, so we went post-haste from Calcutta to Bombay and from there to Cairo and on to Marseilles; though we laid out to stop long enough in Cairo to take a tower in Jerusalem. Holy Land, wuz I, indeed, to see thee?

THEY PUT THEIR DEAD IN HIGH TOWERS, CALLED "TOWERS OF SILENCE"

We wuz considerable tired when we got to Bombay. The railroads in Injy are not like the Empire Express; though, as we drew near Bombay, the scenery wuz grand; some like our own Sierra Nevada's.

Only a few milds back from the railroad, tigers, panthers and all sorts of fierce animals wuz to home to callers, but we didn't try to visit 'em. At some places the trees along the road wuz full of monkeys, chatterin' and talkin' in their own language which they understood, so I spoze; and there wuz the most beautiful birds I ever saw. The climate wuz delightful, some like June days in dear Jonesville.

Bombay is on an island, with many bridges connecting it to the mainland. We went to a tarven close to Bombay Bay; the wide verandas full of flowers and singin' birds made it pleasant. We got good things to eat here; oh, how Josiah enjoyed the good roast beef and eggs and bread, most as good as Jonesville bread. Though it seemed kinder queer to me, and I don't think Miss Meechim and Arvilly enjoyed it at all to have our chamber work done by barelegged men.

I told Josiah that I didn't know but I ort to have a Ayah or maid whilst I wuz there, and he said with considerable justice that he guessed he could ayah me all that wuz necessary.

And so he could, I didn't need no other chaperone. But the Bombay ladies never stir out without their Ayah, and ladies don't go out in the streets much anyway.

The market here in Bombay wuz the finest I ever see; it has a beautiful flower garden and park attached to it, and little rills of clear water run through the stun gutters. Tropical fruit and vegetables of all kinds wuz to be seen here. The native market wimmen didn't have on any clothes hardly, but made it up in jewelry. Some on 'em weighin' out beef to customers would have five or six long gold chains hanging down to their waist. Bombay has a population of about a million, a good many English, some Hindus, Persians, Chinese, Siamese, Turks, and about one-tenth are Parsees, sun-worshipers. They are many of them wealthy and live in beautiful villas a little out of the city; they are very intelligent and firm friends of the English.

The Parsees dress in very rich silks and satin, the men in pantaloons of red or orange and long frocks of gorgeous colored silk; they wear high-pinted black caps, gold chains and rings and look dretful dressy.

Josiah loved their looks dearly, and he sez dreamily, "What a show such a costoom would make in Jonesville; no circus ever went through there that would attract so much attention," and he added, "their idees about the sun hain't so fur out of the way. The sun duz give all the heat and light we have, and it is better to worship that than snakes and bulls."

My land! had that man a idee of becomin' a Parsee? I sez, "Josiah Allen, be you a Methodist deacon, or be you not? Are you a backslidin' or hain't you?" Sez I, "You had better ask the help of him who made the sun and the earth to keep you from wobblin'."

He wuz real huffy and sez, "Well I say it, and stick to it, that it is better to worship the sun than it is to worship snakes," and come to think it over, I didn't know but it wuz.

The Parsees live together in big families of relations, sometimes fifty.

They do not bury their dead, but put 'em up in high towers, called Towers of Silence. And I believe my soul that I'd ruther be put up in the sky than down in the mouldy earth.

Jest a little way from this Tower of Silence is the spot where the Brahmans burn their dead; there are so many that the fires are kep' burnin' all the time. And a little ways off is the place where the English bury their dead.

And I d'no but one way is as good as another. The pale shadder of the real tower of silence has fell on 'em all and silenced 'em. It don't make much difference what becomes of the husk that is wropped round the wheat. The freed soul soarin' off to its own place wouldn't care what become of the wornout garment it dropped in its flight.

But to resoom: We all went out for a drive through the streets; Josiah and I and Arvilly and little Tommy in a little two-wheeled cart settin' facin' each other drawed by two buffalo cows. Robert and Dorothy and Miss Meechim occupied another jest ahead on us. The driver sot on the tongue of the wagon, and would pull their tails instead of whippin' 'em when he wanted 'em to go faster. The cows' ears wuz all trimmed off with bells and gay streamers of cotton cloth, and their tails had big red bows on 'em, and Josiah whispered to me:

"You see, Samantha, if I don't get some ear and tail trimmin' for old Brindle and Lineback when I git home; our cows are goin' to have some advantage of our tower if they couldn't travel with us. And," sez he, "what a show we could make, Samantha, ridin' in to meetin' behind 'em; bells a jinglin' and ribbins a flyin, I dressed in a long silk frock and you all covered with jewelry."

"Well," sez I (wantin' to break up the idee to once), "if we do that, I must be buyin' some jewelry right away."

"Oh, Samantha!" sez he anxiously, "can't you take a joke? I wouldn't drive anything but the old mair for love or money. And your cameo pin is so beautiful and so becoming to you."

We went by a good many Parsees in that drive, and Arvilly sez, "They look so rich somehow, I believe I shall try to canvass some on 'em." And that afternoon about sundown she seein' one on 'em goin' into a little garden she follered him in; he wuz dressed in such a gorgeous way that she wuz almost sure of a customer, but jest as she wuz gettin' the Twin Crimes out of her work-bag, he took off his outer frock, lain it down on the ground and knelt down, facin' the sunset and sprinkled his head, breast and hands three times from a little dish he had with him, and then begun to pray and kep' up his devotions for half an hour, and Arvilly of course not wantin' to break up a meetin' put her book up into her work-bag and went away. I kinder liked the idee of their worshipin' under the blue dome of heaven, though of course I didn't like their idee of worshipin' the created instead of the Creator. In travelin' through these countries more and more every day did I feel to thank the Lord that I wuz a member of the M. E. meetin' house in Jonesville, U. S., a humble follower of him who went about doing good, but I didn't feel like goin' on as Miss Meechim did. How she did look down on the Parsees and compared 'em to the Piscopals to their immense disadvantage.

But Arvilly, the iconoclast, sez, "These Parsees boast that there is not a pauper or woman of bad character in the hull of their sect, and I wonder if any other religious sect in America could say as much as that, Miss Meechim?"

Miss Meechim turned her head away and sniffed some; she hates to enter into a argument with Arvilly, but she wuz gittin' real worked up and I don't know how it would have ended, but I spoke right up and quoted some Bible to 'em, thinkin' mebby that it might avert a storm.

Sez I, "Charity vaunteth not itself. Charity thinketh no evil, suffereth long and is kind."

I meant both on 'em to take it, and I meant to take some ont myself. I knowed that I wuz sometimes a little hash with my beloved pardner. But a woman, if she don't want to be run over has to work every way to keep a man's naterel overbeariness quelled down. I worship him and he knows it, and if I didn't use headwork he would take advantage of that worship and tromple on me.

But though Arvilly didn't canvass the Parsee, she sold several copies of the Twin Crimes to English residents who seemed to hail the idee of meeting a Yankee book-agent in the Orient with gladness.

An Invitation to Arvilly

You all may sing your praises of Samantha and Josiah;
But away down here the neighbors now desire
To say that Arvilly is about the true blue,
For we believe in temperance, and will vote for temperance, too.

So you just tell Arvilly, when she gets around the world,
And has canvassed all the Japanese and her wrath abroad has hurled,
To come down here to Illinois and give her homily,
For we just dote on agents, and I'm sure we'll all agree.

"Never in a Sunday School"

A Frank Admission that is Frequently Made to A. S. S. Union Workers.....

THE Sunday School missionary is constantly reminded of the fact that the time to interest people in Christian things is while they are young. He is often unable to reach the hearts of the older ones, but the children are always anxious to come to his meetings and attend the Sunday School he organizes within reach of them. One of the workers of the American S. S. Union in Southern Illinois, writes:

"I asked last week of a man who lived within a stone's throw of a schoolhouse in a needy district where I was arranging to start a Sunday School, 'Will you and your family attend Sunday School if we organize one in the schoolhouse here?' 'Say, mister,' he answered, 'I am fifty-three years old and have never been inside a Sunday School but twice in my life. No, you won't get me there; I'm too old to begin now. But we've got four small like kids at my house that ought to be taught religion, I reckon: and if you can get a school on foot, they'll come. God knows we need something of that sort around here bad enough.' Passing on through the community, visiting the people, I presently came to the home of another man, to whom I put a similar question. He laid down his ax, looked at me a moment, and then said: 'Stranger, I'll be fifty-five years old next June, if I live, and I've never been in a Sunday School, and, what's more, I never aim to go to none. I don't believe in such things; it makes hypocrites. No, sir, I'll not come nigh it all!' 'But how about your boys?' I asked, looking at three half-grown lads who stood by, listening to our conversation. 'They ought to be in Sunday School and we would be glad to have them.' 'Well,' he replied, 'I 'low ye couldn't do 'em no good, and I dunno as ye could do 'em no harm neither, for they're about as mean now as the devil wants 'em to be; but if ye wants to experiment on 'em for a spell, just pitch in, and I'll not say nothin' agin it.'

"When we met in the schoolhouse the following Sunday afternoon, I noticed the children of both of these families present, but not their fathers. The house was crowded. They seemed to appreciate the Bible talk, after which we organized the Union Sunday School, much interest being manifested. A consecrated young man in an adjoining neighborhood consented to act as superintendent, but it does not require a prophet's vision to see that this school will be successful and accomplish a great deal of good."

Noble-Hearted Samantha

WARREN, IND.

Dear Editor: We enjoy Aunt Samantha so much that we can hardly wait from one week to another. I think she is a noble-hearted woman, and does the whole country good. My littie niece loves to see her and Tommy and find where they are.

"WE WENT OUT FOR A DRIVE THROUGH THE STREETS"

Under the Evening Lamp

By Margaret E. Sangster

Planning for the Future

TO youthful hearts there never comes a more exquisite moment than that in which they decide on their future home and blended life-work; where these shall be, in what environment, and when they shall begin the work in the home, and both radiant with supreme happiness. Before the hour of plighting their troth there is too much uncertainty for perfect joy. The maiden is not sure of herself; the man fears to put his desires to the test to win or to lose all. Courting days are charming in the retrospect, but at the time they may be compared to a voyage over ruffled waves with a wind that shifts suddenly, and squalls that rise unexpectedly out of clear skies. Engaged days, as every engaged couple can testify, are full of tranquil pleasure, trustful mutual complacency, and blissful anticipation.

Do not, dear friends, allow the engagement to linger along over too many months and years. Never mind whether you have the means to furnish a large or a little home; two young people do not need a very magnificent dwelling in which to be useful and contented. You will never have more satisfaction in your lives than in saving and planning together; your day of small things will shine on your future like a golden star.

But may I say to Strephon and Chloe, that for all their joy in looking over the same page and in hearing the same music, and watching the same flowers bud and bloom, if they are not careful, after awhile they will find a reef on which to split, and the name of that reef is Money. It seems to them very sordid now, and a matter of little account. Nevertheless, when there is not entire candor and confidence on the subject of the domestic finances, when the husband always holds the purse and the wife always asks him for the dollar she wants, there will come

The little rift within the lute
That bye and bye will make the music mute.

Before her marriage it would be very judicious for every intending bride to arrange and contract with her prospective husband for a full share in the handling of their common money, or else for a personal allowance of her own.

The Death of a Saved One

A break in the circle, a voice stilled, an empty chair. Life does not seem the same. There is a sense of loss in the home, in the church, in the Christian Endeavor meeting, in the missionary society, and the more useful and admirable our dear one was, the heavier is the shadow and the lonelier the path without her companionship.

These thoughts often come to us. They are borne in anew when we hear of a death among our beloved family of readers. Mrs. Alida Pierce, a child of God, whose whole life was a testimony to her belief in him, and whose days were filled with loyal service, has been taken hence, and in a touching letter one of her friends says, "the world is very sad; we miss her everywhere."

Yes, but up beyond the blue, in God's house of many mansions, there is joy and gladness, for a ransomed saint is safe at home.

A Child's Diary

The revelation of the heart of a child sometimes introduces us into a sanctuary. A very dear little girl, Minnie A. Foster, was called hence in the morning of her years, when she was in her thirteenth summer. Thirteen is a very attractive age, just "where the brook and river meet." After Minnie's death, her diary, which she had secretly kept was found by her mother, and in it were such passages as the following: "I love Jesus more every day I live. I try to do more for him every day. I am very happy in my Christian life. I wish I could get others to come to Jesus before it is too late. I thank God that I was ever brought to see that I was a sinner."

Begin in the morning to be and to do,
Nor wait till the noontide hour,
When the spirit is weak and the heart is faint,
And the purpose is wasted power.

Begin in the morning to treasure up
The odds and the ends of time,
The seconds of silver and minutes of gold,
As well as the cent and dime.

Begin in the morning to thank the Lord
For the early dews of love;
For home and friends and the thousand joys
That came from the Source above.

This dear child used to read THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (lent her by a neighbor), with rare pleasure and profit.

The Children and the Queen

It is said that Queen Victoria treasures many beautiful memories of her visit to Ireland. The warm-hearted people of that land chose various poetic ways of showing their love and reverence for the aged sovereign who had come to be their guest. It will be long before Her Majesty can forget the thirty thousand schoolchildren who gathered from far and near to look at her and to sing, "God save the Queen." Then there was the reception at one great school where the little folks stood in line, waving arum lilies and daffodils as Her Majesty approached; and at another institution where the Mother General came to meet her with a bouquet and a little Irish harp made of white silk embroidered in gold. Besides the pretty harp and many another handsome and dainty souvenir that the Queen keeps with care, a living memento went home with her from Ireland, for when she visited the Dublin "Zoo," they gave her the new baby bear. Ireland, too, treasures many beautiful memories and gracious souvenirs of their Queen's visit. Hardly a charitable or educational institution of Dublin but was visited by Her Majesty and the good Prince and Princess Christian, and Princess Henry of Battenberg. And will the Jubilee nurses ever forget how the Queen entertained them at the Vice-regal Lodge, asking about their work among the poor, encouraging them and commending them, and finally lunching them in the big historic dining-room. In the afternoon of the day when the Jubilee nurses were entertained, nurses from all the hospitals in Dublin were received by the Queen.

"LISTEN TO THIS, DEAR!"

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—JOHN PINE. Do not offer your arm to a lady unless she is old or an invalid.

—SOPHY BARTON. Everybody cannot eat hot bread for breakfast with impunity; but as your family boast of good digestion, and beg for warm biscuits and similar delicacies, do let them have what they wish, even if you confine yourself to dry toast, and cold remainder biscuit.

—FANCHON. Aunt Prudence cannot comprehend your love of flirting, unless you are just like a cat in its delight at teasing and tormenting a hapless mouse. To be serious, you must cease your present course or one of these days you will discover that you have lost the talent of honestly loving a good and worthy man.

—NETTA. A colored cloth is appropriate on the breakfast or luncheon table, but white is the rule for dinner. Under the table cloth, have a cover of felt or canton flannel, a silence cloth, to deaden sound, and to bring out the beauty of your linen. I never use starch in my table linen. It is a matter for individual choice.

—MARTHA J. Why not treat your maid as one of your household? She is a farmer's daughter, refined, educated and a lady. A little common sense will show you that her presence in the sitting-room and at the table may easily be agreeable, and, as you can have her on no other terms, I fancy you will yield the point involved, rather than be overborne with housework.

ROSES HERE AGAIN

THE roses are here, the red and the white
And the yellow that shines with the sun's own light;
They climb on the trellis, they peep through the pane,
They laugh to the ray and they play with the rain;
To the bedside of illness they come with their bloom;
They cover the grave-mound and brighten its gloom.
To our loss and our sorrow, our dole and our lack,
They bring their sweet faces—the roses are back!

And "lift up your hearts," is the song that they sing,
Rose petals as soft as the down on a wing;
And "believe in the Gospel," they tenderly preach,
These roses which sigh, and each breath is a speech,
For the Father who made them, who cares for the flowers,
This Father in heaven is theirs and is ours.

Oh, roses for children, and roses for brides;
A rose for the grief that from sympathy hides;
A rose for the blind, and a rose for the lame,
For the deaf, for the stricken, for souls that we blame;
Roses, rich roses, for altar and fount,
For the vale lying low, for the field and the mount;
For the grave with its peace, for the home with its love;
Sweet roses, the gift of the Father above.

.. A PLAGUE OF FLIES ..

I OFTEN wonder when I go into an otherwise tidy and beautiful home, where good housekeeping is evinced on every side, why neat people put up with the summer plague of flies. Dear Aunt Samantha, in one of her books, makes good humored fun of a matron, whose loathing of these invaders is so great, that a single one of them rouses her to fury, but I confess to sympathy with the matron. One persistent buzzing walking-delegate fly is a tormentor who almost drives me to nervous prostration. A host of flies crawling on the pane, nibbling the food, dropping into the milk, are enough to make one envy the Sleeping Beauty, whose tranced slumber lasted a hundred years. She missed a century of annoying flies.

By the very simple precaution of screening windows and doors all over a house, with wire screens if possible; if not, by the tacking of mosquito netting firmly over the outside of a window, and hanging full curtains of it around a veranda, flies can be kept outdoors where they belong. Should they effect an entrance, brush them out and look more carefully to the state of the screens. But do not use sticky fly paper, nor drop bits of poisoned paper into saucers; the first is extremely cruel, the second extremely disagreeable. Dead flies dropping on the table cloth, and into the porridge, are very objectionable. Poor, dying flies, caught by their feet on a glutinous surface, buzzing, writhing, struggling to escape are pitiful objects, and cruelty to flies is a bad lesson to instil into the minds of children, as well as a lowering experience in our own lives. The woman who is deliberately cruel to a fly may be so to a larger animal, and to a child, not only because she has insensibly became callous, but because the tendency of evil practices is to make one a degenerate.

Therefore, dear fellow-housekeeper, put in screens, and thus do away with the plague of the flies.

Impatient Tones

Even if her words are gentle, the mother may betray impatience in her sharpened tones, in the lifted voice, in the undue emphasis of her speech. Presently the little four-year-old girl will repeat the mother's inflection; the servant in the kitchen will catch it, the whole house will be aware of a crescendo of irritability.

Keep the tones gentle and low. Do not suffer yourself, dear tired woman, to speak above a certain even pitch. And I pray you do not frown. To the last day of your life let your brow be unlined with the marks which come so swiftly to underscore the fretfulness of tone, and the haste of your spirit.

How the Seedsmen Helped India

Nearly all the seedsmen in the country are represented by liberal contributions to the Quito's cargo. They gave large packages of carrot and onion seeds, cucumber seeds, pumpkins, tomatoes, corn, beets, turnips and lima beans, all of prime quality, and, we are assured by the missionaries, very desirable for planting in India. The donations are acknowledged below:

Donor's names	Seed Contributions
H. L. Holmes, Harrisburg, Pa., May 2, express; how packed, not said.	9 lbs. carrot 5 " " 2 " onion
S. H. Shumway, Rockford, Ill., May, 3, express; in sacks.	2 sacks onions 1 sack carrots
James H. Gregory & Son, Marblehead, Mass., May 3, express, soldered tins, wooden boxes.	30 lbs. pea onion. 35 " Danvers onion. 45 lbs. white Cucumber. 30 lbs. Faxon squash. 35 lbs. Danvers carrot. 20 lbs. Gibson pumpkin. 55 lbs. Log Bean 3 pks. Early Canada corn. 5 lbs. Parager tomato.

Latest News from India

Cable dispatches from the Government in India announce that in two districts, Madras and Mysore, rain has fallen, bringing the promise of relief. In all the other districts the distress is rapidly increasing, and the number in the relief camps has risen to 5,617,000. The Lord Mayor of London reports that he has received $1,150,000 for the relief of the sufferers. Lord George Hamilton, the Secretary for India, speaking in the House of Commons, said that the Viceroy was sending British officers into the states governed by native rulers, to aid them in inaugurating relief measures. In former famines these rulers had done next to nothing to save their people from dying of starvation; but now stirred up by the example of the British Government, they were desirous of relieving the suffering, but needed help in organizing. The officers who have had experience are therefore placed at their service, and are giving valuable aid. The condition of the people in these native states is appalling. The news has reached them of the relief that is being afforded in British India, and large numbers of emaciated creatures are being met on all the roads leading thither. They leave behind them a ghastly trail of the corpses of those who have perished by the way, many of the people not having started until starvation had impaired their strength.

Pandita Ramabai sends a brief letter, begging us to thank our readers for their recent gifts which we have cabled to her. She has just returned from a tour in the famine districts, and was setting out again for another journey. The devoted lady, on her return, finding our cabled funds, said that evidently the Lord wished her to do more, as he had sent the means, so she dare not stop the work, though physically she felt exhausted by her journey and the appalling sights she had witnessed. Thus far she has added to her large family of widows during the present famine three hundred and fifty mouths to be fed and persons to be clothed.

REV. R. G. HOBBS

Who presided at the meeting on the Quito

The Bombay Guardian publishes a statement that the corn now on its way from America will be a great boon to the people. The meagre wages paid at the Relief Camps are barely sufficient at the present high prices to secure grain enough to keep the people alive. It adds: "There is need for an independent supply of corn which the people may procure from the missionaries and which shall not on any account get into the hands of the grain-dealers." The same journal publishes the following from one of its correspondents who went to Prantij, near Ahmedabad: "In the streets of the town we saw the children grovelling in the dust after stray grains of corn which were dropped en route to the grain merchants' shops. On the way back to our bungalow, we were attracted by the cries of someone in distress, and looking to one side, a little distance from the road, we saw a woman sitting beside the body of her husband who had just died. She was weeping piteously, and beside her stood three children looking quite bewildered."

A GROUP OF INTERESTED SPECTATORS ON THE EDGE OF THE CROWD

One Pathetic Case

only one of many such — is related by Rev. H. G. Bissell, who has been indefatigable in using the funds supplied to him by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in relieving the sufferers: "The story of a family in a small village three miles south of Ahmednagar was related to me at my last visit. The family consisted of the father, who belonged to the farmer caste, his mother, his wife and two bright little girls. The means daily grew smaller and, in spite of the utmost economy, at last failed altogether. Of course a man of his position could not beg near home, and all the friends who might have helped him at another time were in a similar condition. He knew not what to do, so one day, almost crazed by mental agony, he stealthily left the house and wandered far, far away to forget his wife and home and go where he could no longer hear his little girls cry about him night and day for food. For weeks the husband's mother and his wife managed to keep along by asking alms, by doing small odd jobs of grinding grain for people, by carrying water, by bringing bits of fuel to the city to sell for a pittance, or by carrying their neighbor's fodder to market. Even these resources have an end in famine times—nothing was left to do but to die! That would not have been so hard as one might think. One day there was a quarrel between these women. The wife was accused of driving the husband off; she was held responsible for the hard times; she and her two good-for-nothing girls (had they been boys it might have been different), were the cause of the household misery. The old woman had a bitter tongue, and she knew, as only a woman can know, how to make her daughter-in-law suffer. I suppose her taunts and reproaches, added to the pangs of hunger that the younger woman was suffering, were more than her poor harassed brain could endure. In the night she rose and taking her two little girls with her made her way to a field where there was a deep well. Her heart must have been broken, for she loved those little ones as a mother does. But it seemed to her, I suppose, the kindest thing to end their misery, for she threw them both into the well and then rushed away to end her life somewhere out of hearing of their cries. The bodies of the children were found, but that of the poor demented mother has never been seen. Among so many corpses that are to be seen by the roadside everywhere it would not be recognized. A very little money given to that poor farmer a few weeks ago might have saved all that. I never realized the value of money as I do in the presence of this awful misery."

Heartrending Cries

Dr. Keskar, of Sholapur, the Christian physician whom many of our readers met during his recent visit to this country, says that around his home people are to be met with in all stages of starvation. Hundreds of people have applied to him for relief who were beyond the possibility of saving. He as a physician could see death plainly written on their haggard faces and their swollen joints and attenuated limbs. "The cry for food resounds through the city all day and all night. The sights and sounds will ever live in the memory of all whose sad lot it is to see and hear them. They cannot be forgotten by any human being who has learned from the Saviour to love his fellow man. We have taken in fifty children of different ages under eleven years, some of them orphans, some of them deserted by loving parents who to save themselves from going demented by witnessing the agony of their loved ones which they could not relieve, and the others given to us by parents who made the hard sacrifice of parting that their children might live. We have also upwards of twenty sick or infirm adults whom we are trying to support. Oh, it is dreadful to see their gratitude and not to know whether they may not have to perish after all! For who can tell whether we may be able to get food for them much longer. I thank you and your generous readers from a full heart for the help you have sent. You will never know how much good it has enabled us to do."

Consecrated Money

From many other missionaries come accounts of like purport. Especially are they concerned for the Christians among the sufferers, of whom there are many. The native who has been won to Christ, who has put his trust in him, giving up home and friends by his confession of Christianity, has peculiar claims on the Christians of other lands, and the missionaries plead for him. They have made him understand what loving Christ means; how it involves duties from one to another. The native so instructed is quick to see how far the Christian faith affects the hearts of his brethren in Christ. Therefore for the honor of our Lord the appeal of the missionaries must be responded to. "I mean not," one missionary writes, quoting the Apostle Paul, "that other men be eased and ye burdened; but by an equality that now, at this time, your abundance may be a supply for their want." It is on Christian principles that money should be given, and it is gratifying to know that every dollar given through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, being distributed by Christian missionaries, is being recognized as a Christian gift. From a Hindu's hand or from the hand of a government officer, the recipient perceives a public motive for the gift. The government recognizes a responsibility and feeds him; but when he receives the gift from the missionary, he knows that it is the gift of religion and comes to him because in a far-away land there are men and women who in this way show that they love to please Christ.

DR. KLOPSCH MEETS THE COMMITTEE

Dr. Klopsch, who arrived in Bombay on Saturday, May 12, found the situation so appalling, and the need for immediate help so urgent, that he placed three lakhs of rupees, equivalent at the present rate of exchange to $96,000, at the disposal of the Inter-denominational Missionary Committee for relief work, thus again considerably anticipating the contributions of our readers, as he has done on other occasions. Dr. Klopsch has sent the following cable message, which will be read with interest by all who have been connected with the India Relief Work:

BOMBAY, MAY 14.

Am about to start for the interior. On my arrival here I was met by Rev. R. A. Hume and the other missionaries, and was accorded a very hearty reception; also met the Governor of Bombay. Attended a meeting of the Inter-denominational Missionary Committee and had an opportunity to address the members briefly. My investigations have already confirmed the truth of the reports of numerous deaths by famine; the horrors are actual facts. The weather is extremely hot.

LOUIS KLOPSCH.

WORKING FOR INDIA

Churches, Sunday Schools, Newspapers, Young People's Societies, Factory Hands Helping—Greece and Mexico Contribute

FROM one end of the country to another, the heart of Christian people are stirred at the thought of India's awful affliction. Thousands of letters, coming from every State in the Union—and some from foreign countries—not only contribute money and grain to the relief of the starving, but pledge further effort, unfailing sympathy and continual prayer to the cause of India's dying millions. Such letters strengthen our hands for this good work.

A contribution blank returned from the M. E. S. S., Kansas, O., through Supt. E. L. McDole, brings $52.25, and bears the words: "God and his people will save India." The letter says:

There were just ninety present, including children, when India's suffering was told; every heart was touched. May the gift not only help India, but through its giving may we be better Christians. The prayers of our Sunday School go with this offering.

Superintendent Alfred H. Colby, of the Sunday School of famous Park Street Church, Boston, Mass., sends $55.85, "volunteer offerings in our Sunday School yesterday, for Famine Relief work. The mite-boxes were given yesterday and they will be returned next Sunday." Miss Armour, Supt. Reformed Presbyterian Sunday School, Seattle, Wash., writes:

CLINTON HONEY

Our little Sabbath School heard the cry from starving India and responded with $51, which I enclose. Our school is made up largely from mission scholars, and it would have made your heart glad to see more than a hundred happy little faces when the result of the collection was made known. I am sure the angels rejoiced and "sang a new song."

Master Clinton Honey, five years old, sends his dollar to help India. Little Helen B. Mackey, Treasurer, writes:

Please find enclosed $2.52, which the Jr. C. E. Society, Nyack, N. Y., want to send to help some poor starving one in India.

Rev. Jno. M. Pike, editor and manager of the Way and Faith, Columbia, S. C., sends $1,200 for India famine sufferers, contributed by his readers.

This shows how tots in Yonkers are working:

Dear Editor: This is from Miss Cristy's class, of the J. M. Mason School of Yonkers. Our class talked over the suffering in India, and decided that it would be well for each one to bring some small contribution. The girls' contributions amounted to $4.11. We send it, hoping it will help to prolong and strengthen some poor child's life. ALICE B. BEER.

It was suggested by Miss Cristy, the teacher of the sixth year class in school No. 6, that the pupils should try to help the poor starving people of India. We had brought clippings of the newspaper to school and read them. We gladly brought money to help the poor people and to deny ourselves some little comfort. We elected the ones to write the letter and I had to write for the boys. The boys, I think, gave as gladly as the girls, and their sum amounted to $3.30. We all hope the money will reach India in time to save some starving soul. ARTHUR J. LOCKWOOD.

Lillian Chenaweth, Glen Kam, O., says:

Karl is three and I am nine. We feel so sorry for the poor starving people. So we send our dollar. Our papa gave it to us.

Nebraska's third offering through Rev. G. L. Hosford, collecting under the direction of Rev. Dr. R. G. Hobbs, is received with this letter accompanying it:

Brethren:—Enclosed find check for $1,200 for starving India. This makes $4,000 in all I have sent you; and which I have collected in just five weeks' time. More is coming. Nebraska will not be behind in this great work for God and the starving millions whom he teaches us to pity and to help.

From Pecos, Tex., comes $55 and this message:

The writer is a member of our little Baptist Young People's Union out in this small Texas town. We sympathize with every effort you put forth for suffering ones. We give "In His Name." Next Sunday I shall present starving India's claims again.

WILLIE AND GLEN SAMPLE

The members of Presbyterian Church, Greenville, Mercer, Pa., send through their pastor, Rev. W. A. Peck, $233 to feed India's starving people. Rev. Dr. A. W. Spooner sends $55, from the "employers and employees of the Esterbrook Pen factory," and says:

Since last October, assisted by my Christian Endeavorers, I have conducted noonday religious services for the four hundred employees every Wednesday in the "packing room"; an organ has been purchased, hymn-books have been donated by the firm, and a lot of good done. This gift to India is one of the fruits of this work. Send us mite-boxes.

The Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, rector of "Old Trinity" Church and parish, New York City, sends the following letter:

In response to your appeal for the India Famine Relief work, I send a check for $50.

Sunday School Supt. Jno. T. Evans, Moorestown, N. J., writes:

The M.E. Church and Sunday School, Rev. Frank Moore, Pastor, took up a collection of $55 enclosed herewith. There were about 135 prayers offered in the Sunday School that God's blessing would attend the little offering on its mission of mercy to India.

Mexico is helping. Mr. W. W. Blake, City of Mexico, Mexico, sends $57.37 in gold, and says:

At a recent concert, this sum was raised for the famine sufferers. Understanding that you are helping the poor Hindus and sending them a ship-load of food, we send this through you.

God bless the working-people who help! $55.20 comes by the firm's check from the "Employees of Querns Bros., Philadelphia, Pa."

This letter is postmarked Athens, Greece:

Enclosed find cheque on Paris for 250 francs in aid of India Famine sufferers, which please apply in any way you think best. I do not wish my name to appear, but kindly mark it "Sympathy." Best wishes for the success of your noble charity.

LILLIAN AND KARL

From members of the Evangelical Association, Cleveland, O., by Wm. Yost, treasurer, comes $500.00 for suffering India—the second generous remittance from that noble body of Christian workers.

The Presbyterian Church choir of Auburn, N. Y., sends $90.75 through Treasurer W. H. Meaker, for relief of the starving. "Catskill Friends," New York, send $96 through one who "circulated famine literature." Mr. M. H. Arnold, Shickshinny, Pa., writes:

Through the Epworth League of the M. E. Church, a union meeting of the churches of this town was held in the Presbyterian Church and $33.20 collected for India. Individual members of the League raised the amount to $54.70, which we send, believing that through you the contribution will be placed to the best advantage. We pray God's blessing on your efforts to feed the starving.

This letter from Rev. D. N. Howe, Pastor of M. C. Church, Marble Rock, Ia., may contain valuable hints for other workers:

The literature came Saturday, at noon. I gave a bundle to each church, and had it distributed Sabbath morning. Saturday afternoon I distributed some in every business place in town, and put some in every wagon and buggy that came in from the country. Sunday evening we had a meeting in the opera house, and took up a collection of $67.68, which find enclosed. Marble Rock has about 700 inhabitants.

Mr. H. A. Plitt, of Wapello, Ia., sends $80.72 from Louisa County. With the letter is a list of over fifty names of contributors. The relief movement was organized by Rev. T. S. Poole, of Wapello. One good-hearted little boy of five years—Ellard Gore—when he learned of the sad condition of the children of India, instantly decided to send all his money for their relief. His gift appears in Mr. Plitt's roll of honor.

"TED" HUGHES

Mrs. Merry, of Wichita, Kan., sometime ago made the suggestion that the public school pupils give one penny each for the India sufferers. In the schools of Sedgwick county alone, $70 were raised by this plan and forwarded by Professor Dyer to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Mrs. Merry has also received many contributions for the Fund.

Chronic Rheumatism
Articular and muscular rheumatism and all uric acid troubles are caused by defective action of the kidneys and digestive organs; the kidneys not properly removing the waste products. Uric acid and chalky deposits then accumulate in the muscles and around the joints, causing the excruciating pains peculiar to these diseases, The only way to relieve rheumatism is to rid the system of this poisonous acid.
Tartarlithine
regulates the action of the kidneys, dissolves and removes the uric acid and chalky deposits, and reduces inflammation. It does not upset the stomach, and can be taken by the most delicate. It is a true remedy for rheumatism, for which it is prescribed by many leading physicians.
Tartarlithine is supplied in bottles containing 50 doses at $1.00 and can be obtained of all druggists or post-free by mail. Pamphlets with Testimonials sent FREE.

CROWDS IN FRONT OF GOVERNOR-GENERAL ALLEN'S PALACE AT SAN JUAN

OUR picture shows a delegation of country people of Puerto Rico awaiting a view of Governor Allen in front of the Governor-General's Palace, San Juan. The new American Governor, from whom the Puerto Ricans hope so much for their island, took place on May 1. Public demonstrations began at sunrise with a serenade by a military band; at ten o'clock the installation ceremonies were held at the Executive Mansion, and the oath of office was administered by Blennk, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Puerto Rico; a salute of seventeen guns was fired from the Fort of San Christobal, the Governor delivered his inangural address and the band played "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Reception at the ∴ ∴ Gospel Settlement

A MOST picturesque and interesting happening in the religious and social life of New York City was the recent reception given by Mrs. Bird, founder and housemother of the Gospel Settlement, 211 Clinton Street, to the Countess Schimmelmann. The gathering was a most notable one, consisting of representative Christian workers from almost every church, mission and social settlement in New York City, and of many wealthy and prominent people, who, while not known as pastors or missionaries, are doing the Master's work by sustaining with active sympathy and interest, and giving freely of their means to almost every good cause. Among the guests were Miss Helen Gould, Mrs. Russell Sage, Mrs. Louis Klopsch, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Shearman, of Plymouth Church; Mrs. John Slayback, Mrs. George and Mrs. Ellsworth Inness, Mr. and Mrs. Chester Chamberlain, Mr. and Mrs. Gladding, Mrs. Sarah M. Harris, President of the New York Mothers' Club; Misses McCombs, of Dobbs Ferry; Dr. and Mrs. Gerdson, of the Moravian Church; Mr. J. G. Hailmond, of the Bowery Mission; Columbia College and the University Settlement found representation; Mrs. Stambach, of Kentucky, through whom $6,000 have been sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for India, and Miss Graham, of the same State, were there, as were also Christian workers from Georgia, Virginia, the West, and, of course, from New Jersey and other near neighbors of New York.

Dr. Lyman Abbott delivered an address of welcome to the Countess, in which he emphasized the Christian and humanitarian character of the assembly that sought to do her honor. He commended the spirit which had inspired alike the Countess and the founder of the settlement and others present to forsake the world's high places and labor among the sinful and needy as the spirit of the true nobility. The Countess replied, expressing with simple and heartfelt feeling her appreciation of the manner in which America had welcomed her into its army of Christian workers, telling of her gratitude to God at the immense good that was being done in America and by America; and finally, in response to request, detailing some of the striking incidents of her own campaigns for Christ in this country and elsewhere.

The settlement was bright and fragrant with apple blossoms, pinks, roses and lilacs, contributed by its many friends. Mrs. Inness sat at a samovar and dispensed tea; while settlement lassies in simple white gowns flitted about bearing cream and cake to the guests. The children of the neighborhood, to whom the settlement as a rule belongs, were in great crowds on the street outside; the Countess stepped to the window and gave them greeting. When Fanny Crosby, the aged blind songwriter, had concluded her call, and was going down the settlement steps, she paused and made a lovely little speech to the children.

Next evening all the children were invited to the settlement, where they had a "play Countess' reception," were treated to cream and cake, and altogether enjoyed themselves as much as had their elders on the previous evening. The neighborhood is a very poor one, the children have few pleasures, and the settlement is a boon to them.

Winning - West - Africa for - Christ

A PIONEER group of missionaries went to the west coast of Africa over a quarter of a century ago, representing six of the great evangelical denominations of Christians. From this seed has sprung a wonderful work, covering a territory as large as the State of New York, and giving promise of the complete civilization of a million natives. What was once one of the most savage sections of the great continent is now the scene of daily toil, of a river and sea commerce formidable in its proportions, of daily school sessions attended by thousands of young people, and of missionary establishments being pushed far into the wilderness of the great equatorial region.

This has been accomplished, not by the representatives of one denomination, but of several, and so favorable have been the results that three great European governments now extend to the workers their protection and co-operation. These governments are the English, the German and the French. American mission boards have been far more active than European, although the French Protestant Evangelical Society, of Paris, has made a most favorable showing. The Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church of America is on the eve of adding industrial training schools to its already large force in the educational field of this region.

The progress of twenty-five years is shown forcibly in Batanga, one hundred miles south of the Kamerun River. The first native church building there, erected about 1873, recently fell to pieces, and a new one was built to take its honored place. Mr. Menkel, who built both, states that of the $1,800 cost of the new church, the natives subscribed $900. The amount was paid, not in ivory or cocoanuts or palm oil, but in the money which has been introduced into general use—German marks, French francs, English shillings and American quarters.

The progress in school work is shown by nothing more forcibly than in the changed dress of the natives, especially of the young people. The great advance in industry is making the earlier converts well to do, and this example is having its effect on the natives not yet civilized. Cassava, the native staple, resembling a sweet potato, and growing like it in the ground, is in a high state of cultivation.

The girls in the score of mission schools are taught sewing, cookery and music, while the boys in their own schools are given elementary courses. The missionaries have also trained not a few of the native boys to become good carpenters, boat-builders, tailors and shoemakers.

Gaboon is the distinctly French territory, where most excellent results have been obtained. While the native chiefs or middle-aged men are still in polygamy, none of the younger persons within the influence of the missions are addicted to it. Slavery is not nearly extinguished. The three German districts are doing most to stamp it out. The Togo country, lying between the English Ashantee, and the French Dahomey, is reasonably free from the raiders, but the Niger country and the upper Kamerun country still suffer. The chief offender is the Sultan of Sokato, who sits in State at a point 110 miles north of the Equator and compels minor kings and chiefs to pay him a yearly tribute in gold, ivory, cocoanuts and slaves. They, in turn, raid the neighboring tribes to supply their quota. If the Sultan could be captured and his power broken, the rest would be easy.

A SCIENTIFIC BREAKFAST.

Rightly selected food will cure more than half the diseases. Try a scientific and healthy breakfast:—Fruit of some kind, preferably cooked; a dish of Grape-Nuts, with cream; two soft-boiled eggs. Put two eggs in a tin pint cup of boiling water, cover and set off for nine minutes. Whites will then be the consistency of cream and most easily digested. One slice of bread with butter; cup of Postum Cereal Food Coffee.

On that breakfast you can work like a horse and be perfectly nourished until noon. Your nervous troubles, heart palpitation, stomach and bowel troubles, kidney complaints and various other disorders will gradually disappear and firm solid health will set in.

Why? You have probably been living on poorly selected food, that is food that does not contain the required elements the body needs. That sort of food and coffee, is the direct or indirect cause of more than half the ills the human body acquires.

Grape-Nuts is a perfectly cooked food and both that and the Postum Food Coffee contain fine microscopic particles of phosphate of potash obtained in a natural way from the grains of the field and by scientific food experts incorporated into food and drink. That element joins with the albumen in food to make gray matter, which is the filling of the brain cells and the nerve centers all over the human body.

A man or woman thus fed is scientifically fed and rapidly grows in vigor and vitality, and becomes capable of conducting successfully the affairs of life. To produce a perfect body and a money making brain, the body must have the right kind of food and the expert food specialist knows how to make it. That is Grape-Nuts and Postum Cereal Food Coffee, produced at the pure food factories of the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., at Battle Creek, Mich.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

The Pang of Remorse*

OH, how can I recount my wicked life
To you, or show the fabric woven here
Upon the loom of time—its warp and woof
Compact of weakness, woefulness, and crime:
Illumined once with love, then darkened, save
For lurid light of hate and wild revenge?
But set the screen before the candle, that
Its light fall not upon my shrinking face.
Pay strictest heed, for I would have you tell
This tale in such strong, turgid phrase that some Young soul may haply heed and be restrained
From entering on sure ruin's dreadful road;
Speak burning words that may arrest the ear,
Enchain the thought, and lead weak steps aright,
And should but one young spirit list, and heed,
And thus avoid my awful course, and gain
The strength that will endure when trial comes,
For this I'll lift the curtain from my past,
And show the ugly wreck strewn by the way!
I shudder and grow sick with wan despair,
When, with reluctant steps, life's pathway o'er,
At memory's back I tread. The forms recalled,
The tones of love, my mother's sad, pale face,
My father's curse, my sins and tragedies—
These make the shadows black as night and death;
Nay, tear away the remnant of that hope
Which ever bade me gaze up to the skies
To greet the morning star.

Women and Hygiene†

THE mistakes of ignorance have led to a vast amount of self-inflicted suffering, but now that science has come to our relief and indicated to us the broad highway to perfect physical health, the man or woman who knowingly strays into wayward paths of error and self-indulgence is criminally heedless. So hopeful is the outlook for those who realize individual responsibility in every detail of daily life, that it is no idle prophecy to predict that the time is not distant when physiological chemistry will be able to decide exactly what regimen will best further the desire or ambition to develop in certain directions, just as now the college athletic teams are trained to their work by rigid adherence to certain diet, exercise, baths, and sleep.

Women the world over have the baneful habit of hugging the fireside too much and leading too inactive lives; they often wear themselves to nervous wrecks by confining and monotonous indoor occupations. They need all the sunshine, fresh air, and variety that they can possibly contrive to introduce into their lives. Sometimes a round of exacting household duties gives a woman all the exercise she has either time or strength for. But if she closely examines the routine of her duties she will find that some are made unnecessarily laborious, that others can be wisely dispensed with, that into certain ones variety can be introduced which will relieve monotony and thus make the task lighter, and that all will be more easily performed if fresh air and the blessed sunshine are allowed to give a spring to the step.

The woman whose most serious occupation in life is sitting for weary hours sewing superfluous trimming on her clothes, I beg most earnestly to transfer her interest and attention to these more permanent methods of enhancing her attractions. She must become a disciple of Hygeia and devote herself with the same energy and enthusiasm to the study of the sources of health, grace, and beauty that she has heretofore lavished upon the minutiæ of dress; and she will then neglect any other duties before she denies herself her daily allowance of fresh air, sunshine, and exercise, into the proper regulation of which it will now be my pleasure to initiate her.

* From Gracia: A Social Tragedy. By Frank Everett Plummer. A pathetic story of sin and sorrow, vividly related in graceful blank verse. The thrilling experience of one girl who learned how exceeding bitter are the dregs of the cup which those must drain who "forget the guide of their youth and forsake the covenant of their God," is described in this beautiful poem so graphically, yet so tenderly, that girls, beset by fierce temptation, may take warning from it and cleave to the right and the true. The book is embellished with several full-page illustrations drawn from designs by the author, by Frank Wolcot Webster. Pp. 125; price $1; published by Charles H. Kerr & Company, Chicago.

†The Woman Beautiful. A Practical Treatise on the Development and Preservation of Woman's Health and Beauty, and the Principles of Taste in Dress. By Ella Adelia Fletcher. This is evidently a conscientious effort to tell women how to grow as beautiful as God meant them to be when he first thought of woman. While not prepared to endorse it throughout, it has much that commends itself to common sense, and which women would do well to read and heed. Pp. 535; price $2.50: publisher, Brentano's, New York.

BOOKS RECEIVED

A Mother's Love. By Jean Murray. This is a pretty story of love and duty. The letters of travel from a daughter to her mother constitute a particularly bright and attractive feature of the volume. Pp. 93; published by F. Tennyson Neely, New York City.

Picture Puzzles; or how to read the Bible by symbols. This volume seeks to impress Scripture texts upon the young through a very interesting and unique series of pictures, illustrating selected passages. The plan observed is similar to that of alphabet books. Pp. 150. J. L. Nichols & Co., Napierville, Ill.

Unleavened Bread. By Robert Grant, author of The Bachelor's Christmas, etc. This well-written story, with its clearly portrayed society characters, shows that the author's hand has lost none of its cunning. It serves to show up much of the hollowness of society and public life. Pp. 431; price $1.50; publishers, Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

Lay Sermons. By Howard W. Tilton. The writer says of his pulpit that it is "only a littered table in the editorial room of a great daily newspaper"; from it, the "unordained preacher" utters many true and helpful words. Pp. 173; price $1. The volume will be sent postpaid, on approval, to any address by the publishers, Doubleday & McClure Co., New York City.

A new and bright hymn and tune book for religious services is Our Thankful Songs, a new collection of choice Gospel songs, for prayer, praise and Gospel meetings, Sunday Schools, Young People's Societies, and general public worship. By A. J. Showalter, E. H. Cornelius, J. S. Hendricks, Rev. E. F. Stanton and Rev. N. Keff Smith, D.D. A. J. Showalter Co., Dalton, Ga.

God and the People; and other sermons. By David James Burrell, D.D., pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York. This is a collection of sermons recently delivered by Dr. Burrell. They abound in strong common sense, in successful application of truth to the thoughtful reader and in deep spiritual fervor. Pp. 350; $1.50; publisher, Wilbur B. Ketchum, New York.

The Life of Jesus of Nazareth. A study by Rush Rhees, Professor of New Testament Interpretation in the Newton Theological Institution, with map. We have here the work of a scholarly mind and a devout soul which the devout Christian will find fresh and profitable. The appendix will be of special value to trained Bible students. Pp. 320; price, $1.25; publishers, Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

A Difficult Problem. The Staircase at the Heart's Delight and other stories. By Anna Katharine Green (Mrs. Charles Rohlfs), author of Agatah Webb, The Leavenworth Case, etc. Half a dozen of this well-known author's startling stories are gathered in this volume, and serve to exhibit her notable skill in serving up horrors in readable form. Pp. 344. Publishers, The F. M. Lupton Publishing Company, New York.

The Territorial Acquisition of the United States. An Historical Review. By Edward Bicknell. In this handy little volume, the story is tersely told of the various accessions to the national domain from the Northwestern Territory to the ceding by Spain of Puerto Rico and the Philippines. A host of important history is condensed in very small compass. Pp. 103. Price, 50 cents. Published by Small, Maynard & Co., Boston.

Historic Finds in Egypt

NEW chapters in the history of ancient Egypt have been opened up by the wonderful discoveries of Professor Flinders Petrie during last winter's exploration at Abydos and elsewhere. The records, it is claimed, cover almost the whole period of the first dynasty of the Egyptian kings, and go back as far as 4,000 to 5,000 B.C. The revelations came about through a careful study of seemingly insignificant lumps of black mud. These hid wine jars, inscriptions on which led to the identification of the tombs of the fifth, sixth and seventh kings of the first dynasty. King Aha has now been identified with Menes, the founder of the Egyptian monarchy. Under Menes, art was rude and archaic, but it rose to the best point under King Denset'ui, the fifth king of the dynasty. His tomb is paved with red granite and richly furnished. Cups of crystal and beautiful stones bearing the King's name in large, finely-cut hieroglyphics, and twenty tablets of ivory and ebony with carved inscriptions were taken from his tomb. The later kings showed less sumptuousness, but had a more general habit of inscribing objects on palace and tomb.

Among royal tombstones discovered was one of Merneit, a king previously unknown. There were also found tombstones of private domestics, fine stone drinking bowls and platters; portions of several hundred dishes of fine stones and abundant alabaster dishes, sixty of which bore royal inscriptions; labels and tablets of ivory and ebony, thirty with inscriptions; innumerable pieces of carving in slate, ebony, ivory and stones. After the selection of a few of the most valuable pieces for the Cairo Museum the remainder were sent to London.

THE QUIET HOUR

'TIS good amid the cares of life,
To find a quiet hour,
A secret place within the soul,
Where restful thoughts have power.

There build a nest of lovely thoughts,
Like fairy palace bright,
Where we may rest in darkest hour,
That comes in sorrow's night.

Bright fancies, memories hallowed, dear,
With gold of friendship frought,
Rich, faithful sayings—treasure house
Of precious, restful thought.

Care cannot mar—nor pain make dark;
No need can take away,
The lovely nest of pleasant thoughts
Wherein the soul may stay.

HARD TO BREAK

But the Coffee Habit Can be Put Off

"I was a coffee user from early childhood but it finally made me so nervous that I spent a great many sleepless nights, starting at every sound I heard and suffering with a continual dull headache. My hands trembled and I was troubled with shortness of breath and palpitation of the heart. The whole system showed a poisoned condition and I was told to leave off coffee, for that was the cause of it. I was unable to break myself of the habit until someone induced me to try Postum Food Coffee.

"The first trial, the Food Coffee was flat and tasteless and I thought it was horrid stuff but my friend urged me to try again and let it boil longer. This time I had a very delightful beverage and have been enjoying it ever since, and am now in a very greatly improved condition of health.

"My brother is also using Postum instead of coffee and a friend of ours, Mr. W., who was a great coffee user, found himself growing more and more nervous and was troubled at times with dizzy spells. His wife suffered with nausea and indigestion, also from coffee. They left it off and have been using Postum Food Coffee for some time and are now in perfect condition of health." Grace C. M. Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio.

Put a piece of butter the size of two peas in the pot, to prevent it boiling over.

John Duncan's Sons, Agents - New York.

The story related by Miss Frances E. Harris, 301 Onondaga, Street, Syracuse, N. Y., fits exactly the cases of thousands of young girls of her age.

Weak and languid, suffering from nervousness and lack of blood, unequal to the slightest task. It is a disease known as Anæmia, a common ailment among growing girls. She says:

"When I was seventeen years of age I became debilitated and run down in health. I was extremely nervous, lost my appetite and my blood became so thin that there was no color at all in my face. Much of the time I was confined to my bed and was so weak that I could only walk a short distance. The least exercise would bring on shortness of breath and pain in side. Sometimes I could hardly breathe.

"I tried several different doctors without receiving any benefit. I also tried other medicines advertised to cure troubles such as I had, but they did me no good.

"I saw Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People advertised in the papers, and decided to try them. The first box helped me, and I procured some more. My appetite improved, my nerves became stronger, and within a short time I gained over twenty-five pounds in weight. My improvement continued, and in all I took a dozen boxes. When they were finished I was entirely cured and am in good health, have a good color and appetite and am as well as ever.

"I have recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to many others and will be glad to answer any inquiries if the writers enclose stamp for reply."

(Signed) FRANCES M. HARRIS.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schnectady, N. Y.

Sixty-sixth Anniversary of the American Female Guardian Society and Home for the Friendless—Attractive Exhibition of the Children's Work

OUR readers will be pleased to hear something concerning the recent celebration of the sixty-sixth anniversary of the American Female Guardian Society and Home for the Friendless, the pioneer in child-saving institutions in this country. The Society was organized in 1834; it is undenominational; its work has from the first been carried on by women only: it aims to save from degradation friendless or neglected children and to give them the benefits of a Christian home-life. The home building running through from 30 East Thirtieth street to 29 East Twenty-ninth street, has sheltered over 30,000 little inmates. Twelve industrial schools, registering 7,436 children during the past year, have been established in the poorest part of the city. Sewing, cooking, housekeeping and various occupations are taught. A daily lunch is provided and clothing is supplied to the most needy. Within the last twelve months 78,688 loaves of bread and 7,514 garments have been given out; 9,103 visits have been made by teachers and workers to the children in their tenement homes.

The Society has derived its main support from voluntary contributions. It is in touch with the poor throughout the city; knows their needs and can always distribute donations of food, clothing or money to the really destitute and worthy. The question has been asked: "Why are these schools needed where there are so many public schools?" The answer is easy: they do work the public schools do not and cannot in the nature of things, perform. For instance, the public school must have rules requiring regular attendance. There are children whose parents cannot afford to have them go to school every day. An overtaxed mother must have Rosy or Bobby to tend the baby on wash-day; if she is sick, they must stay at home and be housekeeper, cook and nurse in one. Then, again, the public schools may not bear indefinitely with the persistent truant. Some unworthy parents do not care whether or no a child goes to school, and the child pays the penalty of the parent's indifference. Other waifs and strays seem to belong to no one, and easily evade the schoolroom and all other regenerative influences; some poor little folks have no clothes to wear to school and no food to eat when they get there.

Such are the unfortunates—small working men and women, and small wayward men and women, who are taken under the motherly wing of the well-named "Guardian Society." Teachers look up the truants, visit the sick, help the little working-men and women and their fathers and mothers, and seek to raise up good citizens out of the flotsam and jetsam of the slums. As New York is the port of entry receiving the incoming foreign tide which so many sociologists fear as a threatening force to our civilization, it can readily be perceived that these twelve industrial schools in which almost every nationality finds representation, constitute a national benefaction. The President of the society is Mrs. Geo. B. Watts; and the Vice-president, Mrs. Francis M. Weeks. Upon Executive, Finance, Nursery and Dormitory Committees, on its Board of Managers, and in its list of generous benefactors, appears the name of Miss Helen Gould.

The anniversary celebration consisted of reports of the year; an entertainment by the children in the afternoon, and an exhibit of work done by students of the twelve schools. It was extremely interesting to walk through the various rooms and note the extent and variety of work performed by childish fingers; it would seem almost impossible that little tots—the very waifs and strays of the city—could accomplish such results. The explanation of the miracle lies in the loving pains and patience of the teachers and in the constant encouragement and oversight of the noble Christian ladies constituting the Society. There were neatly-made garments, well cobbled shoes, strong and pretty baskets woven of reeds and splints, and many other articles, useful and ornamental. Here and there a table was piled with ingenious products of knife-work, such as wooden match boxes, picture frames and kitchen conveniences, all going to show how the boyish propensities for whittling can be turned to good account. Particularly noticeable were the tables of appetizing, well-cooked dishes, brewed and baked by children. Pinned on the wall above them were the recipes by which they were made, showing the ingredients nutritious, yet cheap.

Out in the hallway a busy set of little lads were caning chairs and stools with neatness, dispatch and much cheerful pride. Through different rooms passed groups of little scholars viewing exhibits with critical and appreciative eyes.

The anniversary exercises in the chapel were exceedingly pretty and entertaining and were witnessed by a large concourse of managers, patrons and friends, among them Miss Gould, Mrs. Russell Sage and others equally prominent. The songs, recitations, choruses, flag drill and kindergarten games were really quite delightful. There was not only the evidence of culture and grace imparted, but of character developed in the way the little lads and lassies performed their various parts on the programme, at the end of which small white-capped, white-aproned cooks prepared a collation.

Among some of the little folks encountered in the hallway the representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD met with warm recognition, for thirty-five of the Society's children were guests at our Fresh-Air Home last summer.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggests sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

From the Mill to the Ministry

The Brief Story of a Lad's Struggle for Success
—Robert H. Westwood, Evangelist and Pastor

SUCCESSFUL as an evangelist and as a pastor in Cleveland and Chicago, blessed in the work of winning souls, and now pastor of the First Independent Church of Cleveland, O., the story of the life of Rev. Robert H. Westwood is one of much interest. One of several children, the son of hard-working parents, brought up in the atmosphere of a thoroughly Christian home in Kirkcaldy, Fifeshire, Scotland, he is a happy illustration of what may be accomplished by a set purpose and devotion to its fulfilment amid all besetting difficulties. There was no opportunity for a prolonged period of education, for the children had to learn to earn their own living early in life. Fortunately, Robert received a four-years' scholarship in an endowment school, which added to its educational advantages a suit of clothes and a pair of shoes every year, no small boon. He had already manifested a desire to become a preacher, and once given a chance to learn he showed himself an apt scholar. The school course over, he was set to work at a spinner's wheel, doing the monotonous twining of the wheel-boy. Even amid this drudgery he continued to look forward to the ministry. He was just entering his teens when he was advanced to the position of bell-sewer and oiler. Having learned from lectures that the great African missionary and explorer, David Livingstone, had wondrously improved his mind while at similar employment, Westwood determined to follow the illustrious example. Then came another change and a step upward. He was apprenticed as a "clothie" or dry-goods clerk.

On the day when he was to appear for his inspection before the employer, Robert was "decked out braw," having a Wincey shirt with a collar, a pair of fine looking shoes belonging to another member of the family and somewhat too large for him, his brother's swallow-tail coat, which fitted easy round the shoulders and was a "wee bit" too long, and a "bannet" that was made for a bigger head than his, was stitched to fit for the occasion, so that he might look "dressed up." He was accepted and wages enough were paid to keep him in shoe leather.

From now on the "struggles of a student after knowledge" became a real battle. The store hours were late, the work continuous, the companions opposed to such concentration. At the same time the members of his church perceived the lad's ability and readiness for every devoted service. The Sabbath School was large and held its exercises in an immense building. In these days one of the godly elders, whose lot it was to open and close the school, called upon Robert to undertake this duty for him. After some persuasion, his "boyish voice, firmed with determination," was sounding in the great auditorium, "leading in the reading of the lesson and in prayer." So satisfactorily did he fulfil this office that the elder desired he would continue.

Under the direction of a wise pastor (Rev. John Campbell) he was led to the work of visitation from home to home, and here we give one incident of blessing through the "boy's visits": A young couple were avoided by the neighbors on account of the husband's drunkenness and for other reasons. Thus they had become outcasts in the vicinity. An evening visit was made by young Westwood to their home, in fear and trembling, with an invitation to attend special meetings in the "auld Kirk" when the noted Rev. Dr. Hutchen was to preach. The mother, when she answered the knock at the door, carried in her arms a little babe. Robert had learned that to put your hand on a child's head is to put your hand on the mother's heart. With a loving word about the child and an earnest "Come to the meetings," the work was done, and in a few weeks the father and mother were converted, baptized and received into the Church, to the astonishment of the community.

Under the same leadership he was prompted to the work of cottage meetings, where workingmen and weary women might be gathered during the week nights "to meditate on the gracious themes of the Bible." Many came and were comforted. The temperance work also engaged his attention, and he became an earnest and eloquent advocate in the cause. Then came further years of assiduous business toil, of the hearty confidence of employers, of evening hours spent in Christian work, and later hours spent over the pages of the Latin and Greek lexicons. Providentially young Westwood was brought in contact with the Rev. Alexander Patterson—"a man who could preach two hours without tiring his congregation." With this learned and devoted minister, the young man spent many hours in helpful study. Of the attractive but subsequently vanishing prospects of a university education, of improved business conditions, of continued study and the unchangeable purpose to enter the ministry, of the loss of his mother by death and consequent change in the household, and Westwood's subsequent removal to America, interesting chapters might be written. Further chapters would tell of business associations in the New World, where the well established principles of the past served him in good stead in the conflict with minds that seemed set wholly on the pursuit of wealth, even though moral, mental and spiritual gain were discounted in the pursuit. By-and-by commercial doors seemed to close upon the young man, but the study and Christian work had been diligently pursued all along, and at last the opportunity for consecration to the ministry came. It came as suddenly as the flower blooms after the long period of growth and preparation on the part of the plant that bears it.

Mr. Westwood has accepted the call to his present field without the promise of one cent of remuneration, believing that God will supply all his need. The church is only three months old and has as yet no house of worship of its own. The divine favor has already been manifested and pastor and people are full of faith, hope and zeal. The young pastor is pronounced a man among men, and has notable influence among young people whom he easily leads into spheres of active Christian work.

Missions a Boon to India

Harnam Singh, of the royal house of Kapurthala, speaking recently in Calcutta, said: "I affirm that foreign missions have been one of the greatest boons to India which have come in the train of the British rule in this country." This is a notable expression of opinion from a native prince.

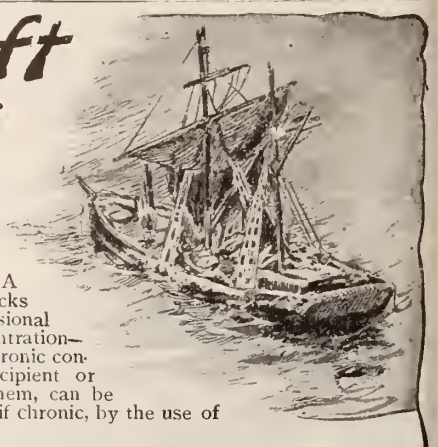
Don't Drift Too Far!



Don't drift around on the sea of life like a dismantled wreck. A little precaution will save you. Just as the careful mariner seeks a safe harbor until the storm is over, so you should take precautions to stop the first inroads of disease. A constipated condition—those insipient attacks of dyspepsia or billiousness—those occasional headaches—that loss of energy and concentration—may or may not be the forerunner of a chronic condition of similar illness. Whether incipient or chronic, these ills, and those akin to them, can be prevented at their inception, or removed, if chronic, by the use of that geuinely marvellous English remedy,

Abbey's Effervescent Salt.

Abbey's Salt is made principally from the salts extracted from the juices of Fresh Fruits—Nature's remedy! The use of this standard preparation not only ensures constant good health, but permanently and positively does away with such ills as Dyspepsia, Billiousness, Flatulency, Headache (nervous or otherwise), and all diseases arising from an impure condition of the blood.

Dr. C. C. Alexander, Albany, N. Y., states: "I think Abbey's Salt is a grand preparation to stimulate the secretions, ridding the blood of bile. I am prescribing it on all appropriate occasions."

Abbey's Salt is put up in three sizes. The 25c. size is the usual trial size; the 50c. size will remove a severe case of Dyspepsia or Constipation; while the $1.00 size is the economical size.

Abbey's Salt is sold in drug stores only, in many cities and towns, but if your druggist does not keep it, either size will be sent post-paid on recept of price.

A Good Neighbor*

The Neighborly Spirit an Exercise of the Divinity in Man

SOME surprise must have been felt by the lawyer who questioned Christ, at the tact with which the direction of the search-light was changed by Christ's answer to his question. He wanted to know what were the qualifications which entitled a man to rank as his neighbor. If according to his own summary of the law a neighbor had certain claims upon him, it was important to him to know what constituted a neighbor. He had probably realized that mere nearness of residence did not comprise all the qualifications, but he was apparently uncertain as to the length of the radius of the neighborly circle. In telling him the story of the Good Samaritan, Christ gave a clue to the principles which have kept his teachings effective for nineteen centuries. He turned the lawyer's gaze inward instead of outward. Christ intimated that the question for him to consider, was not the relations of others to him, or their nationality, or religion, or their social condition: but whether he himself had a neighborly heart. Not who were his neighbors, but to whom was he neighborly? The same question and the injunction with which the parable closes, apply in our day. It is not necessary to wait until we find a man by the roadside, robbed and wounded. The man who is in need of neighborly help of any kind is our neighbor, and when we see any such, our Lord's command comes to us: "Go thou and do likewise."

Doubtless, our Lord did not mean to imply that a Samaritan was more likely than a Jew to act in this kindly fashion. He purposely made the circumstances impressive that the lesson might have all the more weight. The Samaritan was despised by the Jew, who hated him all the more because of the differences between them of race and religion. Very probably if the two men had met under ordinary circumstances, they would not have spoken. The Jew would have passed the Samaritan with averted head and perhaps with a muttered malediction. The Samaritan might have shrugged his shoulders and repaid scorn with scorn. But the spectacle of the Jew in trouble and needing succor, changed all that. The kindly heart of the Samaritan is touched; he renders help and the Jew accepts the service. The two strangers, almost enemies, become neighbors. One wonders which was the happier that night: the Jew who, neglected of the men on whom he had a claim, and despairing of help, but succored after all; or the Samaritan who had availed himself of an opportunity to render service to one who hated and scorned him. Probably the latter, for there must have been some shame and self reproach in the Jew's mind, while the Samaritan had the consciousness of true nobility and magnanimity without any alloy. There is a luxury in a kind act that brings its own reward apart from the gratitude of the beneficiary. The doer feels himself a better man and a happier, for the exercise of the God-like qualities within him. It is a happiness that none know save those who win it in that way.

So it comes to this, that our neighbor is the man to whom we can render neighborly service. It may be that he is of a different race, a different faith, a man whose previous conduct has not been neighborly; but he affords us an opportunity for doing disinterested service, and so, unconsciously, he serves us. Even if we know that the man has brought the trouble on himself by his own misconduct or imprudence; if, as we say, he is only getting his deserts, the opportunity of helping him is still ours, and we may get good for ourselves by doing him good. We know that if God gave us no more than we deserve, we would have little ground for asking his help. He is kind to the unthankful and the evil, and we are most like him when we are doing the same thing. And it is important to remember that the example Christ sets before us, is one of discrimination. The Good Samaritan did that for the Jew that he needed most. We are not always careful to follow in his steps in that particular. It is so much easier to put the hand in the pocket and relieve the sufferer, than to try intelligently to give him what he really needs. To give a word of kindly sympathy, to help a man to get employment, to intercede for him with his enemy, to render any one of a hundred personal services, is often better than a gift of a coin. The Good Samaritan was not content with paying the man's bill at the inn; he walked that the wounded man might ride, and, with his own hands, bandaged the hurt. This was the act of a true neighbor, and it is of both kinds of help that our Lord said: "Go thou and do likewise."

Leaves from the Tree of Life

The printing press is the effective ally of missions, and Missionary Periodicals was the appropriate subject of one of the papers read at the recent Ecumenical Missionary Conference. The Rev. D. Strong, of Boston, informed the Conference that he had a list of forty-nine publications issued in Great Britain and Ireland, most of them issued monthly, some of them quarterly, entirely devoted to foreign missions, while there are twenty-two other journals which combine in their view missionary work at home and abroad. On the Continent of Europe there are nearly a score of magazines devoted to this cause, while in America we have a list of thirty-two publications, altogether foreign missionary in their character, while a dozen or more monthly magazines report the missionary work of the churches they represent, both in the homeland and beyond the seas. These lists are probably incomplete, and it is quite within bounds to say that there are to-day not less than one hundred publications, chiefly monthly, which are entirely devoted to foreign missions.

An Exhibit of Children's Work

In the exhibit which the American Female Guardian Society and Home for the Friendless, at its sixty-sixth anniversary at the home building, 29 East Twenty-ninth street and 30 East Thirtieth street, New York, there was an unusually large proportion of manual training work. There have been six industries taught in the various schools, and the specimens shown were baskets, shoes, chairs neatly caned, the simpler forms of knife work, all kinds of practical cookery (cooking has been taught in ten of the schools), garments for children and grown people, and dolls' wardrobes stitched by young fingers. The six primary grades gave illustrations of their drawing, penmanship, composition, nature studies, etc., and the seven kindergartens were represented. The schools have had 7,436 pupils in attendance during the year, a large proportion of them being the poorest of the poor, and the majority Italians, Hebrews and other foreign nationalities.

What One Mite-box Accomplished

The citizens of Blacksburg, Va., and the faculty and students of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, have sent $55.83 to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund to help feed the starving people of India. So small a thing as a mite-box started the movement bringing this goodly sum, sufficient to feed for one day 2,790 famine sufferers—a very multitude. Who that reads the story of America's dispersion of food to starving thousands, but recalls the miracle of the loaves and fishes which Jesus blessed and brake? That tiny mite-box which went to Blacksburg has brought the Master's blessing to thousands.

THE ANSWER ON THE WAY

YOUR prayer shall be answered—the Father's promise hear!
"Ere they call I will answer—while they're speaking I will hear,"
If your soul keeps on trusting—Oh, he will not say you nay—
The answer is coming—it is now on the way!

CHORUS—On the way—on the way—
It is now on the way!
The answer is coming—
It is now on the way!

His word faileth never! Oh, 'tis blessed to believe!
'Tis the soul that is steadfast, wondrous blessing shall receive!
Yea, his promise remaineth, though the stars should flee away—
The answer is coming—it is now on the way.

His grace is unmeasured, reaching into realms afar,
And he yearns to bestow it ever where the needy are.
Ask—Oh! ask then, believing—God will hear you when you pray—
His answer is coming—it is now on the way!

"Silver Plate that Wears."

You Can't Miss the Mark

You will find it on the silver plate that is most desirable in design, most suitable in style. This stamp is a sign of old-fashioned, enduring honesty in the materials and making—new-fashioned energy and good taste in the finish. In selecting Spoons, Knives, Forks, etc., make sure each piece is stamped:

"1847 Rogers Bros."

The first question from the lips of a person wise in silver handicraft will invariably be—"Is it "1847?" If it is, it is all right.

The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

These Questions Will be Answered June 27

1. By whom were the brief summaries of contents over each chapter of the Authorized Version of the Bible supplied?
2. What is the origin of Good Friday and how did it acquire the name?
3. What is the smallest seed known to man?
4. Who were the four first kings in the world's history so far as any records show?
5. What noble traits of character were admired and fostered among the nations of the earth at the time of Christ's birth?
6. Did Dred Scott, the negro, live to receive freedom by the emancipation proclamation and when and where did he die?
7. Who are the six leading orators of to-day in the English language?
8. Can a Christian find anywhere in the Bible justification for self-defence, even though his life is at stake?
9. What reason could there be for a dispute between Michael the archangel and Satan about the body of Moses?
10. Presuming that a boy, ten or eleven years old, already has a Bible, what ten books can be given him that he would be likely to read and which would do him good?

Questions of the Week

1. Can a Christian consistently practice hypnotism?

Hypnotism may be practised by a Christian, without doing any harm whatever. It is to be remembered that it is the use to which it is put that causes the trouble. Many use it for evil purposes, while others use it for the benefits they derive. It is now being more universally used by clergymen, doctors, and, in fact, all classes can use it, if they so desire. It is no more regarded as a mystery or anything superhuman, but is controlled by certain laws in physiology and psychology. It can, therefore, be used beneficially, and without harm to any one. JUDSON G. SMALL.

2. How did the name Tommy Atkins, as applied to the English soldier, originate?

The causes assigned vary. It is said that "Thomas Atkins" was the name of a soldier who, at the memorable siege of Lucknow, refused to save his life by deserting his post, and so any more than usually brave soldier would be called a regular Tommy Atkins. A more prosaic reason assigned is that in books of instruction, blank forms and reports were signed or filled in with the name, "Thomas Atkins," in order to show the proper form of signature. In fact, "Thomas Atkins" seems to have served much the purpose that John Doe and Richard Roe do in legal forms.

M. A. KNIGHT.

[In an article recently published by the London Mail, the Lucknow sentry theory is practically endorsed.—EDITOR MAIL BAG.]

3. What is meant by the "elect" spoken of in Matthew 24: 22, 31; Mark 13: 27; Luke 18: 7; Romans 8: 33; Col. 3: 12, and elsewhere in the Scriptures?

"To elect" means to choose; "the elect" are the chosen; in Scripture, God's chosen. Election is of three kinds. First, of individuals to perform some particular service, as Cyrus, the disciple. Second, of nations to special privileges, as Israel. Third, of individuals to be the children of God. To this last class belong all true believers, and such were undoubtedly the elect referred to in the texts cited above. Such were and are God's elect, whether elected unconditionally, as taught by rigid Calvinists; or conditionally, as taught by Arminians. W. P. ANDREWS.

4. In what States of the Union does temperance legislation prevail?

Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Iowa, Kansas, North Dakota and South Dakota have enacted prohibition laws. Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Kentucky, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, New Jersey, Ohio, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia and Wisconsin have local option laws. Maryland has special legislation. Nebraska and Pennsylvania, high license. Nevada, county license. New York, "Raines' Law." South Carolina, State monopoly; thus making seven have prohibition laws; twenty-four, local option; one, special legislation; two, high license; one, "Raines' Law;" one, State monopoly.

EDITH S. DAMON.

5. Can any one live like a millionaire and be a good Christian?

Possession of riches is no sin if they have been honestly acquired. Living like a millionaire does not necessarily imply selfish or base use of wealth. A millionaire may give employment to hundreds of needy people who would otherwise be idle. Some millionaires use much means in charitable work or in advancing meritorious undertakings, in scientific investigation, education and the spreading of light in knowledge and religion. No doubt the financial condition most favorable to Christian life is an intermediate state in which one is neither puffed up by money nor dishonest from poverty, but Paul knew how to be poor and how to abound. (See Prov. 30: 9).

MRS. T. W. COSTER, JR.

6. What is the best description, in a hundred words or less, of a liquor saloon, its objects and results?

A saloon is a place where intoxicating drinks are sold as a beverage. Its object is to make money for its owner. Its customers squander money, waste time, injure health, make shipwreck of character, and ruin their souls. The saloon traffic destroys domestic happiness, breaks up families, brings sorrow, causes poverty and want, instigates all kinds of crime, sacrifices virtue, weakens the intellect, dethrones reason, deadens the moral sensibilities, and degrades men below the level of the brutes. It disintegrates society, corrupts government, profanes the Sabbath, blasphemes God, and drags down to perdition all connected with it. JOHN G. OSBORNE.

7. When and with what nation did England make her first formal treaty?

After utterly routing the Danes under Guthrun, at Edington, King Alfred demanded that they should evacuate all Wessex, and that their king should receive Christian baptism. Guthrun accepted the terms which were offered, and Alfred, with the consent of his thanes, ceded to him the eastern part of the island, from the Thames to the Humber. The kingdom of North Umbria, lying beyond the Humber, was already under Danish dominion; so that after the treaty their territories, which now took the name of Danelagh, extended from the Thames to the Tweed. Alfred purposed the fusion of the two nations. A. W. KAINES, M. D.

8. Is suicide mentioned in the Bible and if so, where? Where do we get the idea that it is an unpardonable sin?

Five cases of suicide are mentioned in the Bible. Samson, Judges 16: 30; Ahithophel, II. Sam. 17: 23; Zimri, I. Kings, 16: 18; Saul, I. Chron 10: 5; Judas, Matt. 27: 5. The idea that suicide is unpardonable comes from the fact that it is a most appalling resistance of the will of God, and can never, if we accept the belief of the majority of Christians, be repented of, since the Bible gives no assurance of any "day of grace" beyond the grave. St. Paul forbids it, Acts 16: 27, 28.

G. E. KRAUTH.

9. Is the writing of letters to friends on Sunday a desecration of the day?

Business letters and letters devoted to mere gossip should not be written on the Lord's Day, but letters of condolence with those in affliction, and letters, the object of which is to convey spiritual good, may certainly be written on that day. Could there be any truer ministration of Christian love than a letter of sympathy to a soul in distress, or of a godly parent to a distant son or daughter, seeking to emphasize the lessons inculcated in the Christian home, before the absent left its hallowed influence behind them?

R. S. STUART.

10. What is at once the sweetest and most expressive word or phrase in any of the civilized languages of to-day?

What can be sweeter in sentiment than the German expression, "Auf wiedersehn," which conveys the thought, "I leave you, but with the thought of our next meeting." The French: "Au revoir," though literally the same as the German expression—"to the seemg again," has hardly taken on so full a meaning. In the English "Good-bye" the original meaning, "God be with you," is lost sight in by the condensation. The German "Heimgang," "home going," is a happy expression, covering the departure of our loved ones at the hour of death. M. E. MILLER.

Miscellaneous Questions

M. R. G., Needham, Mass. 1. What is the value of a Spanish pescta in our money? 2. Why is the Turkish Government called the Sublime Porte?

1. Nineteen and a half cents. 2. The literal meaning of "Sublime Porte" is "High Gate," and the Turkish Government is so called because of the fact that justice used to be administered from the high gate of the palace.

Mrs. G. S., Graw Camp, O. Would it be a sin to take advantage of Sunday excursion rates and attend church at Cincinnati?

It is well for Christians to avoid travel on Sunday. The example set by traveling on that day is not good. By traveling you help to keep up an activity that deprives your fellow men of their Sunday rest. Is there no church in Graw Camp? If there is, why not support it? If there is none, why not seek to establish religious services there? (See Romans 14: 22, 23).

A correspondent thinks that answer 8 in this department of May 2 is open to question when it says that "the disciples were quick to perceive the real teachings of Christ's parables." He claims that they had to ask Christ for an explanation of them. This at least showed their interest. The facts might have been more correctly stated had our correspondent of that date used the words "inquire for" in place of "perceive."

Glendale, San Francisco, Cal. Is silent prayer acceptable with Christ, that is, to say, "Amen," in your thoughts, and not open your lips. To illustrate, suppose when a pastor rises in his pulpit, and says, "Let us all pray," and as he prays, when he mentions any particular point in his prayer, you say, "Amen," or, "God grant it," etc., is your "Amen," acceptable? Again, if you offer a prayer in your thoughts, and never open your lips, is it acceptable? I have always thought that as God knows our thoughts, a silent prayer was acceptable, but I recently heard a minister declare otherwise, and also a prominent churchman, that if we did not open our lips, our prayer was not answered.

Any prayer that comes from a sincere and contrite heart, is acceptable, whether silent or spoken. This applies equally to the prayer in secret, the uttered petition in prayer-meeting, and the fervent exclamation that may be wrung from the hearer by the prayer of a pastor. There are many occasions when silent prayer is the most available refuge or consolation of the believer. On the other hand, a Christian who would never pray audibly, never confessing Christ before men with his lips, would be an anomaly.

Mrs. Margaret M., Cincinnati. Where is the word "gold" first mentioned in the Bible?

See Gen. 2: 11.

Mrs. Annie Minor, Allensville, Ky., sends us several interesting verses on the India Famine Fund work in that village, composed by the local postmaster, who seems to be a vigorous and apt rhymer. He advises his friends to > Feed the hungry, clothe the heathen;

> In the last day you'll get even.

In another production, he remarks:

> Perhaps you think, as you're full of meat,
> That every one else has enough to eat.

R. M. C. C., Pitzer, Ia. What is the religious belief or relation of the Boers?

It is very much akin to that of the Dutch Protestants in Holland.

Interested Christian, Shannon City, Colo. Do you think people who have never had any chance to learn of the Gospel will be held responsible for their sins? Are not we that are enlightened more or less accountable for their darkness, if we do not make any effort to help them?

Unquestionably, responsibility will be in exact proportion to opportunity. Those who have never heard the Gospel, cannot, in justice, be judged by the same standard as others who have heard it, but persistently neglected it. Moreover, the enlightened are in large measure responsible for any failure to carry the Gospel "to all nations," which is the Master's command. The spreading of Gospel truth and light is the first duty of every Christian, and he who, knowing his privileges, wilfully neglects this high commission, is a very poor Christian indeed.

J. Knight, Trenton, N. J. How should we pronounce the name of the great Boer ruler, Paul Kruger?

Americans usually pronounce it as written. A correspondent of one of the London illustrated newspapers spells it "Cruger," still others "Krayger," and says that the Boers pronounce it as though spelled "Crere," and rhyming with "care."

G. A. M., New London, Mo. How did Christ's twelve disciples meet death?

Andrew was tied to a cross, and while hanging there for two days, praised God and exhorted the spectators to believe the Gospel; he then died. Bartholomew is said to have been crucified with his head down, at Albanapolis, in Armenia Minor. James the greater, brother of John, was beheaded by order of King Herod (Acts 12: 2). James the less (son of Alpheus), according to some accounts was thrown from a pinnacle of the temple and beaten to death with a fuller's club. John died a natural death at Ephesus, in Asia. It is recorded that some time previously he was thrown into a caldron of boiling oil, but suffered no harm thereby. Judas committed suicide after betraying his Lord. Matthew's end is uncertain. Some accounts say he was martyred in a city of Ethiopia. Peter was crucified at Rome "by the head," not with his head downward—as is usually supposed—so some able scholars tell us. Philip's end was uncertain; according to some accounts he was beaten against a pillar at Hierapolis, a city in Phrygia, until he expired. Simon, the Canaanite, is said to have been crucified in Persia. Thaddeus, also named Judas and Lebbeus, according to Nicephorus, died a natural death at Edessa; but according to Abdias, he was martyred in Persia. Tradition says he was shot to death with arrows. Thomas is said to have been pierced by a lance in the East Indies, or possibly in Persia.

A. B. C., San Diego, Cal. 1. Can a Christian own a building in which there is a hall used for entertainments, including theatrical performances? 2. Can a Christian hold stock in a mining company which works on Sundays?

He cannot do either, consistently.

Cynthia A. Lynch. Could you let me know how to send money to the India sufferers?

You can send your contribution through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which cables all money to the Missionary Committee in Bombay.

J. C. C., Bryantsville, Ind. 1. If a man commits the unpardonable sin, will God take the Holy Spirit from him, and will he love God, or will he be indifferent? 2. If he loves God, and desires and tries to live by the Bible, is it a sign that he has the Spirit? 3. Can a man commit the sin unwilfully? 4. If committed through temptation, will he be forgiven? 5. Will God allow a man to commit that sin who has prayed to him earnestly to strengthen and keep him from it?

1. No man who has the Holy Spirit can commit the unpardonable sin. The man who commits that sin would have no love for God. He would be indifferent about it. Your anxiety about the matter shows that you have not committed any such sin. 2. Yes. 3. No. 4. Christ says the sin against the Holy Spirit is unpardonable. 5. No. Do not pray to be kept from this sin alone, but from sin in general. The unpardonable sin of which Christ spoke appears to have been attributing the works which Christ performed by the Holy Spirit to demoniacal agency. You have never committed that sin.

T. A. R., White Plains, N. Y. Was Longfellow a Spiritualist, as some claim him to have been, or a Unitarian?

Longfellow, like many another poet, was a good deal of a mystic, but we know of no reason for affirming that he was a spiritualist. His religious faith was that of the New England Unitarians.

E. R., ——. What is meant by a full salvation, or in other words, what is salvation?

The term "full salvation" is used by many Christians for conscious salvation or freedom from the power of sin. Undoubtedly many Christians are content to believe that they are through faith in Christ saved from the penalty of sin who do not earnestly seek by his grace to be saved from its thraldom, but no Christian is absolutely without sin (I. John 1: 8). The word salvation is used with varying meaning in God's Word. There is the salvation wrought out for us by Christ on the cross, which the soul appropriates by faith. There is the daily deliverance or salvation from the power of sin which Paul speaks of when he says (Phil. 2: 12), "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." Then there is the final deliverance from evil and from temptation of which Paul speaks when he says (Rom. 13: 11), "Now is our salvation nearer than when we believed."

D. S. B., Nehalem, Oreg. What is the "higher criticism" of the Bible?

This is the name given to that criticism of the Bible which deals with its origin, form and value, and is distinguished from the lower criticism, which deals with the text of the Bible. Although traces of the higher criticism have been found during all the Christian centuries, systematic work in this field is comparatively new. It began with Jean Astruc in 1753. Its principal result has been to assail the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch and to pronounce it a composite work of much later day than Moses.

Samuel P. H., Ramona, Kan. We do not care to discuss politics in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

J. A. O., Nebraska. We have already repeatedly answered questions in THE MAIL-BAG as to dancing, drinking and card playing.

R. G., Kankakee, Ill., and others. Miss Holley's characters are types from real life, although the story is a work of the imagination, like many other famous books. The photographs are from life.

King's Daughter, Monee, Ill., and others. We have the best reasons for believing that the great number of letters sent to Washington, protesting against Brigham H. Roberts taking his seat in Congress, which were written at the suggestion of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, materially helped in the decision against him.

Sad Lessons from Prison Cells

....A CHAPLAIN TELLS HOW YOUNG LIVES ARE WRECKED BY BAD BOOKS AND BAD COMPANY

THAT the way of the transgressor is a hard one is abundantly proved by many instances that come to the knowledge of the prison chaplain. Frank is one of the young men in the prison chapel on Sunday afternoons. He has a sad history: A persistent truant from school in his boyhood, he spent several terms in the Truant School, then fell into bad company and became a wanderer and a criminal. He claims to have been a Christian once, and would like to be so again. One day he confided his story to the chaplain. He leaned forward and, resting his head on his hand, said: "Nobody loves me, nobody cares that I am here; nobody cares for me, anyway." I put my hand on his shoulder and said to him: "Yes, Frank; Jesus cares and he loves you—be sure of that. No matter how far you have wandered away from him, if you return and repent he will receive you and love you as he always does. Cheer up and put your trust in the Elder Brother and Friend who will stay here with you as long as you stay and go with you when you go."

A few days after that, a good Christian man gave me a beautiful CHRISTIAN HERALD Bible, with the suggestion that I should give it to one of the men who did not have one and who would read it. I stepped into the corridor and called to Frank. He stepped out and I handed him the Bible. He prizes it and reads it, too. I am always glad to be able to place a copy of the Bible or some good paper or book in the hands of the men to read. Their evenings are long and they need something to occupy them. A good long evening, isn't it, from 5.30 on? This last week I have been able to place in the hands of the men who want them and will read them diligently, four copies of the Bible—two in Italian, one in French and one in English. God's Word is a great power to work in the hearts of men.

ENTRANCE TO THE PRISON

Frank taught me a lesson that day. I never want to complain myself, and I am sure I never want to hear any one else complain how hard it is to serve the Lord Jesus. If you want to see hard service, look at those who are serving Satan, and being led by him captive at his will.

Coming out of the chapel of the prison where I am chaplain, one day not long ago, an officer stepped up to me and said:

"One of the men would like to speak with you a moment, sir."

I asked the officer to show the man into the office. It was no new experience to have a man ask for an interview. Many had come to ask me to intercede in their behalf. Probably this was another one. In he came. A good-looking man in convict's clothes.

"Well, what can I do for you, to-day?" said I to him.

Then followed his life story. He had been brought up in a good Christian home, not far from New York, and a Christian mother was even now yearning over her boy in the prison. I talked with him and found he wanted to live another kind of life. Sick enough was he of the old life of sin. He told me that a number of years ago he had made a profession of religion in the Methodist church. It was a pleasant surprise to find in this backslider and criminal deep yearnings for the joy of the days of his active Christian service.

"NOBODY CARES FOR ME"

He told me how happy he had always been till he wandered into sin; how he did not intend to be a forger. He had never thought of being a thief. Then came the temptation in the apparent necessity, and then his fall. He was a fairly educated man and wrote a beautiful hand. I have a letter now that he wrote me shortly after this first talk with him. I found him well versed in the Bible, too. He had been well taught at home.

I had a number of talks with him after that. He really grew in grace from week to week. He enjoyed reading his Bible more and more and took great interest in the services.

One day in December the telephone called me up. It was a message from the prison that Henry was very sick and wanted to see me at once. I took a carriage and went to him as quickly as I could. When I arrived at his cell I saw plainly that he was dying. I talked with him freely and unreservedly. He was ready to die, but oh, he wanted so much to live till he should be a free man. It was terrible to him to die in prison and under sentence.

"How much longer have you to stay here, Henry?"

"Only a year from next March, sir."

That would not be a short time for you or me to spend in that place, away from all of our friends. Then he told me of his great hope—that if he lived to go out a free man, the old joy of his religious life would return to him again. It seemed to trouble him that it did not come to him in the prison. He wanted to feel as he used to feel, when he was a young Christian. But he was never to have his freedom or his much-sought religious joy again in this life.

As we talked I could see plainly that there was something on his mind which he wished to tell me. I stepped out to speak to an officer for a moment, and when I returned Henry was wandering so in his mind that he never knew anything again. So he died. Over and over again has come to me the passage in the good Book, "The wages of sin is death." It will always seem to me that I have had a glimpse of the payment of that dread penalty with my very eyes.

Henry died two hours after I left his cell. I can only think of him as being pardoned by the Judge of all the earth, long before his earthly sentence had expired. Like every other sinner, he had paid very dearly for his sin. No amount of money could pay for what he suffered, and of that of which he was deprived. I have no doubt that Henry was a saved man, but the awful wages of sin is death.

Let me tell you something I happen to know, because I am a prison chaplain. Many of the young men who come into my office to talk with me and tell me their troubles, admit that it was reading bad books that gave them their first taste for crime, though at the time they did not know what it was.

Let me give you one instance, though not in the prison where I am now chaplain. In the Massachusetts State Prison is a man by the name of Jesse Pomeroy. His case twenty-six years ago was known all over the United States. He was the boy murderer, who killed two boys and tortured a number of others. His whole iniquitous course was begun and fostered by the reading of bad books. He read how boys had done awful deeds and how cleverly they always escaped detection, and he came to the conclusion that he could do the same. His mother, a Christian woman, was afraid of the influence of these books and used to follow him to his room and see him safely in bed before she left him. But he used to conceal candles in the room and after his mother had gone to bed, he would light a candle and read nearly all night long. It was bad books that started him on his downward course. Jesse Pomeroy ought to have been a useful man. He is a clear headed, inventive, thoughtful man; but if there were 875 men to be released from the State Prison to-morrow, out of the 876 at present confined in the cells, he would be the one to remain. Public indignation would tear him limb from limb if he ever did escape. All this because he gave way to the temptation of bad books.

"I HANDED HIM THE BIBLE"

What a lesson for boys and young men! Be careful what you read. Once a month Jesse Pomeroy's poor, broken-hearted mother comes to the prison to see him. She is the only one now who is allowed to see him. Think of it! He has been there for twenty-six years now, and is only forty-two years old, healthy, strong, and with every appearance of living a good many years. But he is never to know what liberty means, although he spends day after day thinking and planning how it is possible to get out and what he will do when he gets out. His career of crime was inspired by bad books. He was like any other boy, till he became a slave to the book that told him of crime and its outcome; that told how boys did deeds of cruelty and were made heroes by it. Such a life and such a lesson ought to teach every young man a good lesson on reading.

CHAPLAIN A. T. KEMPTON

One day, as I sat in the guard-room waiting for a man I had come in to see, the officer went over to a pleasant-faced woman sitting beside a young man not more than twenty-four or twenty-five years old, and said to her, "Your time is up, Madam." I asked the officer about the case. Said he:

"Yes, that is his mother. She is the only one of the family that will come near him; they all feel so disgraced at his being here. Sad case, sir. He is here for life. Been here seven years already."

While we had been speaking, the woman had risen, and covering the young man's face again and again with tears and kisses, she at last tore herself away from him, and he rushed toward his cell. This scene is repeated every month. Another life blighted by bad books and bad companions! AUSTEN T. KEMPTON.

FRANK STUDYING THE WORD

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT.

The Victor's Shout

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, John 17: 4: . . . . . I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do.

THERE is a profound satisfaction in the completion of anything we have undertaken. We lift the capstone with exultation, while, on the other hand, there is nothing more disappointing than, after having toiled in a certain direction, to find that our time is wasted and our investment profitless. Christ came to throw up a highway on which the whole world might, if it chose, mount into heaven. He did it. The foul-mouthed crew who attempted to tread on him, could not extinguish the sublime satisfaction which he expressed when he said: "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do."

Alexander the Great was wounded, and the doctors could not medicate his wounds, and he seemed to be dying, and in his dream the sick man saw a plant with a peculiar flower, and he dreamed that that plant was put upon his wound, and that immediately it was cured. And Alexander, waking from his dream, told this to the physician, and the physician wandered out until he found just the kind of plant which the sick man had described, brought it to him, and the wound was healed. Well, the human race had been hurt with the ghastliest of all wounds—that of sin. It was the business of Christ to bring a balm for that wound—the balm of divine restoration. In carrying this business to a successful issue, the difficulties were stupendous.

In the first place, his worldly occupation was against him. I find that he earned his livelihood by the carpenter's trade—an occupation always to be highly regarded and respected. But you know, as well as I do, that in order to succeed in any employment one must give his entire time to it, and I have to declare that the fatigues of carpentry were unfavorable to the execution of a mission which required all mental and physical faculties. Through high, hard, dry, husky, insensate Judaism to hew a way for a new and glorious dispensation, was a stupendous undertaking that was enough to demand all the concentrated energies even of Christ. We have a great many romantic stories about what men with physical toil have accomplished in intellectual departments, but you know that after a man has been toiling all day with adze and saw and hammer, plane and axe, about all he can do is to rest. A weary body is an unfavorable adjunct to a toiling mind. You, whose life is purely mechanical, if you were called to the upbuilding of a kingdom, or the starting of a revolution which should upturn all nations, could get some idea of the incoherence of Christ's occupation with his heavenly mission.

In his father's shop no more intercourse was necessary than is ordinarily necessary in bargaining with men that have work to do; yet Christ, with hands hard from use of tools of trade, was called forth to become a public speaker, to preach in the face of mobs, while some wept, and some shook their fists, and some gnashed upon him with their teeth, and many wanted him out of the way. To address orderly and respectful assemblages is not so easy as it may seem; but it requires more energy, and more force, and more concentration to address an exasperated mob. The villagers of Nazareth heard the pounding of his hammer, but all the wide reaches of eternity were to hear the stroke of his spiritual upbuilding.

So also his habits of dress and diet were against him. The mighty men of Christ's time did not appear in apparel without trinkets and adornments. None of the Cæsars would have appeared in citizen's apparel. Yet here was a man, here was a professed king, who always wore the same coat. Indeed, it was far from shabby, for after he had worn it a long while, the gamblers thought it worth raffling about; but still it was far from being an imperial robe.

Neither was there any pretension in his diet. No cup-bearer with golden chalice brought him wine to drink. On the seashore he ate fish, first having broiled it himself. No one fetched him water to drink, but, bending over the well in Samaria, he begged a drink. He sat at only one banquet, and that not at all sumptuous, for, to relieve the awkwardness of the host, one of the guests had to prepare wine for the company.

Other kings ride in a chariot; he walked. Other kings, as they advance, have heralds ahead and applauding subjects behind; Christ's retinue was made up of sunburned fishermen. Other kings sleep under embroidered canopy; this one on a shelterless hill. Riding but once, as far as I now remember, on a colt—and that borrowed.

His poverty was against him. It requires money to build great enterprises. Men of means are afraid of a penniless projector, lest a loan be demanded. It requires money to print books, to build institutions, to pay instructors. No wonder the wise men of Christ's time laughed at this penniless Christ. "Why," they said, "who is to pay for this new religion? Who is to charter the ships to carry the missionaries? Who is to pay the salaries of the teachers? Shall wealthy, established religion be discomfited by a penniless Christ?" The consequence was that most of the people that followed Christ had nothing to lose. Affluent Joseph of Arimathea buried Christ, but he risked no social position in doing that. It is always safe to bury a dead man. Zaccheus risked no wealth or social position in following Christ, but took a position in a tree to look down as he passed. Nicodemus, wealthy Nicodemus, risked nothing of social position in following Christ, for he skulked by night to find him.

All this was against Christ. So the fact that he was not regularly graduated was against him. If a man come with the diplomas of colleges and schools and theological seminaries, and he has been through foreign travel, the world is disposed to listen. But here was a man who had graduated at no college, had not in any academy by ordinary means learned the alphabet of the language he spoke, and yet he proposed to talk, to instruct in subjects which had confounded the mightiest intellects. John says: "The Jews marveled, saying, How hath this man letters, having never learned?" We, in our day, have found out that a man without a diploma may know as much as a man with one, and that a college cannot transform a sluggard into a philosopher, or a theological seminary teach a fool to preach. An empty head, after the laying on of hands of the presbytery, is empty still. But it shocked all existing prejudices in those olden times for a man with no scholastic pretentions and no graduation from a learned institution to set himself up for a teacher. Thus, scholarly prejudice was against him.

So also the brevity of his life was against him. He had not come to what we call mid-life. But very few men do anything before thirty-three years of age, and yet that was the point at which Christ's life terminated. The first fifteen years you take in nursery and school. Then it will take you six years to get into your occupation or profession. That will bring you to twenty-one years. Then it will take you ten years, at least, to get established in your life work, correcting the mistakes you have made. If any man, at thirty-three years of age, gets fully established in his life work, he is the exception. Yet that is the point at which Christ's life terminated.

Men in military life have done their most wonderful deeds before thirty-three years of age. There may be exceptions to it, but the most wonderful exploits in military prowess have occurred before thirty-three years of age. But as a legislator—no man becomes eminent as a legislator until he has had long years of experience. And yet the gray-bearded scribes were expected to bow down in silence before this young legislator, who arraigned sanhedrims and accused governments. Aristotle was old; Lycurgus was old; Seneca was old. The great legislators of the modern world have been old. Christ was young. All this was against him. If a child, twelve years of age, should get up in your presence to discuss great questions of metaphysics, or ethics, or politics, or government, you would be as contemptuous as these gray-bearded scribes in the presence of this young Christ.

Popular opinion declared in those days, "Blessed is the merchant who has a castle down on the banks of Lake Tiberias." This young man said, "Blessed are the poor." Popular opinion said in those days, "Blessed are those who live amid statuary and fountains and gardens and congratulations and all kinds of festivity." This young man responded, "Blessed are they that mourn." Public opinion in those days said, "Blessed is the Roman eagle, the flap of whose wing startles nations and the plunge of whose iron beak inflicts cruelty upon its enemies." This young man responded, "Blessed are the merciful." Popular opinion said, "An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth." In other words, if a man knocks your eye out, knock his out. If a man breaks your tooth, break his. Retort for retort; sarcasm for sarcasm; irony for irony; persecution for persecution; wound for wound. Christ said, "Pray for them that despitefully use you." They looked at his eye. It was like any other man's eye, except, perhaps, more speaking. They felt his hand, made of bone and muscle, and nerves and flesh, just like any other hand. Yet, what bold treatment of subjects, what supernatural demands, what strange doctrine! They felt the solid earth under them, and yet Christ said, "I bear up the pillars of this world." They looked at the moon. He said, "I will turn it into blood." They looked at the sea. He said, "I will hush it." They looked at the stars. He said, "I will shake them down like untimely figs." Did ever one so young say things so bold? It was all against him.

I imagine Christ one day standing in the streets of Jerusalem. A man descended from high lineage is standing beside him, and says: "My father was a merchant prince; he had a castle on the beach in Galilee. Who was your father?" Christ answers: "Joseph, the carpenter." A man from Athens is standing there unrolling his parchment of graduation, and says to Christ: "Where did you go to school?" Christ answers: "I never graduated." Aha! the idea of such an unheralded young man attempting to command the attention of the world! As well some little fishing village on Long Island shore attempt to arraign New York. Yet, no sooner does he set his foot in the towns or cities of Judea, than everything is in commotion. The people go out on a picnic, taking only food enough for a day, yet are so fascinated with Christ that, at the risk of starving, they follow him out into the wilderness. A nobleman falls down flat before him, and says: "My daughter is dead." A beggar tries to rub the dimness from his eyes, and says: "Lord, that my eyes may be opened." A poor, sick, panting woman presses through the crowd, and says: "I must touch the hem of his garment." Children who love their mother better than anyone else, struggle to get into his arms, and to kiss his cheek, and to run their fingers through his hair, and for all time putting Jesus so in love with the little ones, that there is hardly a nursery in Christendom from which he does not take one, saying: "I must have them. I will fill heaven with these; for every cedar that I plant in heaven, I will have fifty white lilies. In the hour when I was a poor man in Judea, they were not ashamed of me; and now that I have come to a throne, I do not despise them. Hold it not back, oh weeping mother! lay it on my warm heart. Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Again, I remark, there was no organization in his behalf, and that was against him. When men propose any great work, they band together, they write letters of agreement, they take oaths of fealty; and the more complete the organization, the more and complete the success. Here was One who went forth without any organization and alone. If men had a mind to join in his company, all right; if they had a mind not to join in his company, all well. If they came, they were greeted with no loud salutation; if they went away, they were sent with no bitter anathema. Peter departed, and Christ turned and looked at him; that was all.

All this was against him. Did any one ever undertake such an enterprise amidst such infinite embarrassments and by such modes? And yet, I am here to say it ended in a complete triumph. Notwithstanding his worldly occupation, his poverty, his plain face, his unpretending garb—the fact that he was schoolless, the fact that he had a brief life, the fact that he was not accompanied by any visible organization—notwithstanding all that, in an exhilaration which shall be prolonged in everlasting chorals, he declared: "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do."

See him victorious over the forces of nature. The sea is a crystal sepulchre. It swallowed the Central America, the President and the Spanish Armada, as easily as any fly that ever floated on it. The inland lakes are fully as terrible in their wrath. Some of us who have sailed on it know that Lake Galilee, when aroused in a storm, is overwhelming; and yet that sea crouched in his presence, and licked his feet. He knew all the waves and the wind. When he beckoned, they came. When he frowned, they fled. The heel of his foot made no indentation on the solidified water. Medical science has wrought great changes in rheumatic limbs and diseased blood, but when the muscles are entirely withered no human power can restore them, and when a limb is once dead, it is dead. But here is a paralytic—his hand lifeless. Christ says to him, "Stretch forth thy hand," and he stretches it forth. In the eye infirmary, how many diseases of that delicate organ have been cured? But Jesus says to one blind, "Be open!" and the light of heaven rushes through gates that have never been opened. Nature is his servant. The flowers—he twisted them into his sermons; the winds—they were his lullaby when he slept in the boat; the rain—it hung glitteringly on the thick foliage of the Parables; the Star of Bethlehem—it sang a Christmas carol over his birth; the rocks—they beat a dirge at his death. Behold his victory over the grave! The hinges of the family vault become very rusty because they are never opened except to take another in. There is a knob on the outside of the door of the sepulchre, but none on the inside. Here comes the Conqueror of Death. He enters that realm and says, "Daughter of Jairus, sit up!" and she sits up. To Lazarus, "Come forth!" and he came forth. To the widow's son he said, "Get up from that bier!" and he goes home with his mother. Then Jesus snatched up the keys of death, and hung them to his girdle, and cried until all the graveyards of the earth heard him. "O Death! I will be thy plague; O Grave! I will be thy destruction!"

No man could go through all the obstacles I have described, you say, without having a nature supernatural. In that arm—amid its muscles, and nerves, and bones were intertwisted the energies of Omnipotence. In the syllables of that voice there was the emphasis of the eternal God. That foot that walked the deck of the ship in Gennesaret shall stamp kingdoms of darkness into demolition. This poverty-struck Christ owned Augustus, owned the Sanhedrim, owned Tiberias, owned all the castles on its beach, and all the skies that looked down into its water; owned all the earth and all the heavens. To him of the plain coat belonged the robes of celestial royalty. He who walked the road to Emmaus, the lightnings were the fire-shod steeds of his chariot. Yet there are those who look on and see Christ turn water into wine, and they say, "It was sleight of hand!" And they see Christ raise the dead to life, and they say, easily explained; not really dead; playing dead. And they see Christ giving sight to the blind man, and they say, clairvoyant doctor. Oh! what shall they do on the day when Christ rises up in judgment, and the hills shall rock, and the trumpets shall call, peal on peal?

My subject also reassures us of the fact that in all our struggles we have a Sympathizer. You cannot tell Christ anything new about hardship. I do not think that wide ages of eternity will take the scars from his punctured side, and his lacerated temples and his sore hands. You will never have a burden weighing so many pounds as that burden Christ carried up the bloody hill. You will never have any suffering worse than he endured, when with tongue hot, and cracked, and inflamed and swollen, he moaned: "I thirst." You will never be surrounded by worse hostility than that which stood around Christ's feet, foaming, reviling, livid with rage, howling down his prayers, and snuffing up the smell of blood. Oh! ye faintheart-ed, oh! ye troubled, oh! ye persecuted one, here is a heart that can sympathize with you!

Again, and lastly, I learn from all that has been said to-day, that Christ was awfully in earnest. If it had not been a momentous mission, he would have turned back from it disgusted and discouraged. He saw you in a captivity from which he was resolved to extricate you, though it cost him all sweat, all tears, all blood. He came a great way to save you. He came from Bethlehem here, through the place of skulls, through the charnel house, through banishment. There was not among all the ranks of celestials one being who would do as much for you. I lay his crushed heart at your feet to-day. Let it not be told in heaven that you deliberate-ly put your foot on it. While it will take all the ages of eternity to celebrate Christ's triumph, I am here to make the startling announcement, that because of the re-jection of this mission on the part of some of you, all that magnificent work of garden, and cross, and grave is, so far as you are concerned, a failure. Helena, the Empress, went to the Holy Land to find the cross of Christ. Getting to the Holy Land there were three crosses exca-vated, and the question was, which of the crosses was Christ's cross. They took a dead body, tradition says, and put it upon one of the crosses, and there was no life; and they took the dead body and put it upon another cross, and there was no life. But, tradition says, when the dead body was put up against the third cross, it sprang into life. The dead man lived again. Oh, that the life-giving power of the Son of God might dart your dead soul into an eternal life, beginning this day! "Awake, thou that sleepest, and rise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee life!" Live now! And live forever!

Progress of the Great Exposition

THE CZAR TO VISIT PARIS—AMERICAN MACHINERY—PLEASANT COMITIES—RUSSO-ASIATIC WONDERS . . .

A GENERAL VIEW OF THE PARIS EXPOSITION FROM THE RIVER

THERE was considerable alarm on May 15, when fire was dis-covered in the basement of the Chateau d'Eau. For a time it was feared that the adjoining Salle des Fetes might be reach-ed by the flames, in which case the Ameri-can section of the Palace of Electricity would have been in danger. Fortunately the fire, which was due to the fusing of wires and consequent ignition of a scaf-fold, was promptly extinguished.

The American Machinery Building, in the Vincennes Annex of the Exposition, was formally opened during the afternoon of May 15. The United States Ambas-sador, General Horace Porter; United States Commissioner, General Peck, the American Commissioners, a few guests and Sousa's Band made the trip in a decorated boat. The ceremony consisted of remarks made by Mr. F. E. Drake, the superintendent, Mr. Peck and Gen. Porter. On returning, the boat stopped in front of the German National Pavilion, the inauguration of which was proceeding. Sousa's Band serenaded the Germans; the Americans landed and were received of a body by the German officials, who evidently appreciated the compliment paid by the Americans.

The Exposition is not to be ignored by royalty. The visit of the King of Sweden was officially announced for this month. He will take up his residence in the palace fitted up by the government in the Avenue Malakoff, at the corner of the Avenue du Bois de Boulogne, opposite to the hotel of Comte Boni de Castellane. The Shah of Persia is expected June 8. He will also take up his residence in the same palace as the King of Sweden, which will be somewhat small for the numerous suite which the Persian sovereign purposes to bring with him. And now comes the of-ficial announcement of the visit of the Czar of all the Russias. This is to take place in September, and will be the crown-ing feature of the Exposition. The largest influx of visitors is expected during that month, and a series of magnificent fetes will be inaugurated, throwing all former records into the shade.

It is pleasant to record the good feeling caused by the tactful courtesy of Mr. Ferdinand W. Peck, the United States Commissioner General, on the occasion of the inauguration of the Spanish pavil-ion. The Commissioner most cordially congratulated the Duke de Sesto, the Spanish Commissioner General, on the beauty and grandeur of the Spanish pavil-ion and on the importance of the fine exhibit it contains, which, by the way, he could most truthfully do. The Duke was evidently well pleased with these con-gratulations, and the utmost good fellow-ship was evidenced between the distin-guished representatives of the two peoples not long since at war with each other.

Readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be glad to know that the inauguration of the United States pavilion was notable for the absence of a buffet and its accom-panying champagne and other wines and liquors. Commissioner Peck gave the matter no little thought, and, believing that the absence of wine would best please the majority of Americans, he decid-ed on the temperate plan. The occasion was extremely success-ful, and suffered nothing from the course pursued by Mr. Peck.

The Russo-Asian section, situated upon the brow of the Troca-dero, is an imposing structure. Its contents will be a revelation not only to the French, but to visitors from other countries. It affords an idea of the immense re-sources of the vast north-ern empire which could hardly be gleaned from handbooks or consular reports. The Central Asian Hall, with its blue and yellow tilings, its heavy draperies, its painted panelings—giv-ing different views of Turcoman life—and its rich variety of textile goods, vegetable and mineral products and artistic curios, is worth half a day's visit by itself. Grave turbaned Asiatics and Transcaspian Cossacks in tall fur hats, moving silently amid the throng, add to the local color, while in the courtyard adjoining, the band plays Russian and Oriental airs. This Central Asian Hall sums up the full extent of Russia's marvel-ous progress in the heart of Asia since Scobeleff stormed Yeo-Tepe and Annen-koff constructed the Trans-Siberian rail-road. Which nation will be most largely represented at the Exposition is a ques-tion discussed by Parisians. At the last Paris Exposition, Great Britain furnished more than a third of the total of 1,109,550 visitors. It is not unlikely that the South African war and the strong anti-British sentiment that has found vent in the press may diminish the proportion, but there have been many English visitors already, and there will probably be many more. Some English visitors are not ap-preciated. A number of trained English thieves initiate themselves into the good graces of well-to-do passengers, and on reaching Paris see that the traveler is served with a cabman who is in league with him. Then the cabman takes his fare to half a dozen hotels that he knows are full and the victim who is homeless and in a strange city is at once hos-pitably invited by his new made acquaint-ance to spend the night in the latter's flat, which is generally situated in the Rue de Provence or the Rue des Victoires. In the morning, the dupe finds that money and jewelry have been stolen, while a garcon indignantly demands the money for the rooms.

....SAVING INDIA'S STARVING MILLIONS....

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S INTER-DENOMINATIONAL COMMITTEE GRATEFUL FOR THE FUNDS CONTRIBUTED BY OUR READERS.....

SAD, but full of Christian hope and courage, is the report just received from the Secretary of the Inter-denominational Committee, which was organized in India at the request of this journal to receive and distribute the money contributed by the Christian pepole of America. It is easy to see from the report how the hearts of these devoted missionaries were oppressed by the fearful sights they were hourly witnessing; how hopeless must have seemed to them any effort they could make to save the millions who were perishing: but when they learned that the Christian people of the homeland had been informed by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of their situation, and were resolved to stand by them again as they did in 1897, and supply them with funds, they took heart and commenced the work of relief. One fact stated by the Committee is sufficient to show the dire nature of the calamity. After referring to general conditions, the report goes on to say: "There is no disguising the fact that the distress is increasingly acute and the mortality from starvation is now terrible and rapidly becoming larger. Over whole provinces the conditions are worse than in 1897. In one large section eighty-seven persons in every hundred are likely to perish." Can anything more appalling be imagined? Only thirteen persons left alive to show where a hundred are now living! All the rest slowly and painfully starved to death! And this not in one peculiarly afflicted village, but throughout "a large section." No wonder that the news of funds being sent from America to save the sufferers filled the hearts of the missionaries with joy and thankfulness.

The next business was to ascertain from each member what were the needs of the missionaries of his respective denomination. After hearing these statements the Committee decided on the following apportionment, to rule for the present, but to be changed whenever in any area the famine became more severe, and each missionary declared himself satisfied with the relative division:

The Methodist Episcopal Mission, being largely in the famine area, one-third of all available funds; next the Baptist, one-fifth of the whole; The Christian Alliance, in view of their work in the afflicted province of Gujerat, 14 per cent.; The American Board (Congregational) and the Church of the Disciples, 13 per cent. each; the Lutheran, 5 per cent.; and the Presbyterian, whose chief fields lie outside the famine area, 2 per cent.

No basis of apportionment was suggested by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to the Committee, the members of which were left perfectly free to divide the funds as they chose. It must therefore be concluded that as each representative was satisfied with the division there must have been a spirit of mutual concession and Christian regard for the needs of one another.

The committee, whose members are well-known representatives of the missions of the Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal, Lutheran, Disciples and Christian Alliance bodies, assembled in Bombay on April 12, and completed its organization by electing Dr. Hume chairman and convener, and Rev. E. F. Frease secretary and treasurer. These two, with Rev. M. B. Fuller were constituted an Executive Committee to act in the intervals between the meetings of the General Committee. It was decided that in view of the urgent need of immediate relief to the famine sufferers, no portion of the fund of $25,000 which had been cabled by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as an Easter Offering should be reserved for future needs, but that it should all be applied at once to the rescue of the starving people. A second resolution required all missionaries receiving funds through the committee to use the money for the relief of the sufferers, and in no case to apply it to mission work. It was also decided that in apportioning funds, the main consideration should be the severity of the famine in the respective areas, attention being paid in each instance to the work already inaugurated in each area and the funds available from other sources. These decisions show how far-sighted and fair-minded are the missionaries composing the Committee, and how sincerely desirous they are that the money contributed by our readers should be wisely and economically administered. It is very gratifying to have such men ready and willing to undertake the arduous service of conducting relief measures.

The Question of Corn was fully considered by the Committee and the following resolution was passed and forwarded to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD with a request that it be published:

The Committee expresses the opinion that in the case of future famines, the early shipment of corn from America for use in certain sections in India, is one of the best forms of famine relief.

At that time the Committee did not know of the magnificent generosity of the United States Government in chartering a steamer. The members, therefore, assuming that a large sum of money would have to be paid out of the fund for the charter and that probably much time would elapse before the corn could be collected and the steamer could start, advised that money instead of corn should be sent. They would doubtless be glad to learn that the steamer Quito was laden with unprecedented rapidity and the cost of sending it was a free gift to the fund from the Government, thus disposing of the two reasons which had weighed with them in their decision

The Committee had been informed that the Anglo-Indian government had offered to furnish a ship for the transportation of the corn; but in view of the fact that corn so sent would not be distributed by missionaries, while it was raised in response to the appeals of the missionaries, the Committee advised that the offer be not accepted. It also decided adversely to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD paying the freight, both on account of the delay which might occur and on account of the cost. It will thus be seen that the precise reasons which influenced the Committee had been recognized by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD before they were pointed out, and not until both objections were removed was the cargo of corn collected and dispatched. The corn, as our readers are aware, is transported to India without expense to the fund and the whole of it will be distributed exclusively by missionaries. It is gratifying to perceive that the missionaries will now have the corn, which they characterize as "one of the best forms of famine relief," without the drawbacks which influenced them in counselling its rejection.

REFUGEES RECEIVED BY MRS. ADA LEE AT CALCUTTA

SALVATION ARMY OFFICERS SUPPORTING A FAMINE VICTIM

The Orphans

constitute a problem which was evidently a matter of serious concern to the Committee. The members passed a special resolution, which Dr. Frease, as Secretary, was requested to transmit to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It was that: "Reports from the various American missions indicating that the missionaries would be called on to receive many more orphans this year than in 1897, and in our opinion ought to receive them, it is important that they should know, at the earliest possible date, what amount of support they can rely upon receiving. The American missions should in our opinion receive at least ten thousand children, as the minimum number, if they do their clear duty; but it would be imprudent for the missionaries to assume so large a burden, unless they can be assured beforehand, that the money to maintain the children will be forthcoming as it is needed. This appeal, however, the Committee considers ought not to divert any portion of the famine fund, every dollar of which is needed for the rescue of the destitute people from impending death."

The report concludes as follows: "Mr. Hume has already cabled the hearty thanks of the Committee and the suffering thousands they represent, to you and to your generous readers; but in conclusion I wish to emphasize our gratitude for the help so opportunely received.

Sincerely yours,
E. F. FREASE, Secretary."

That the Committee is acting prudently in asking as to the future support of the orphans before incurring obligations, cannot be denied. A missionary who undertook to feed, clothe and educate a hundred children would be placed in a very humilitating position, if a year hence he found himself without funds. Yet the opportunity is one that ought not to be neglected. The children are the hope of a country. Who can tell how much India might be benefitted, how largely the kingdom of Christ might be advanced a few years from now if ten thousand young men and women were standing for Christ in the towns and villages of the country, owing to the education they had received in the homes of American missionaries? God has promised again and again in his Word a special blessing to those who succor the widow and the fatherless. Are there not many who would like to secure that blessing? It would be a fine thing if ten thousand Sunday Schools, or Christian Endeavor Societies, or Epworth Leagues would each pledge themselves to support one or two orphans. It would involve a cost of only fifty cents a week for each orphan. We should be glad to receive such pledges and would notify the Committee of the number, so as to enable them to form an estimate of how many of these precious little creatures they might undertake to support. In every case, the denomination of the missionary might be indicated and the child would be regarded as the adopted child of the person, or Sunday School, or Young People's Society responsible for its maintenance. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would be very thankful if its readers would authorize it to cable to the Committee: "Accept ten thousand children; the money to support them will be regularly forwarded, quarterly, by the young people of the United States."

The Committee, however, in the matter of the orphans, are merely asking for information in guiding them as to the number they may receive, and do not feel justified in reserving any portion of the famine fund for the purpose. That they are wise in thus deciding is evident from the reports coming in from all sources. Dr. Klopsch's cablegrams show that the number of deaths from starvation is appalling. In his journeys into the interior of India he witnessed shocking sights. So overwhelming was his conception of the need of help that, as briefly stated in our columns last week, he placed one hundred thousand dollars at the immediate disposal of the Committee, and that amount has been already remitted by cable. He had so much confidence in the generosity of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who have come nobly in the past to the help of the sufferers in Russia, in Armenia, in Cuba and in our own Western States that he felt they would desire the awful destitution relieved without loss of time, and he therefore anticipated their gifts, so that the flickering flame of life in millions of emaciated bodies might be saved before it died out in the darkness of death.

The letters we are now receiving show that he rightly trusted in the people, who have proved their love of Christ and humanity in past years by their magnificent liberality, and that they endorse and approve his resolve to afford timely help. From all sections of this country and of Canada, contributions are flowing in and prayers are being offered for a continuance of this awakened philanthropic spirit. We are glad to notice also that the policy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in having every cent of money distributed through Christian missionaries is heartily approved, and that our readers appreciate the fact that in this way the cause of Christ will be advanced. Money that reaches the people through the hands of heathen or official hands will be received with gratitude; but only when it reaches them through the missionaries will it accomplish that higher and better purpose of leading them to perceive the beauty and glory of our holy religion.

Col. Nurani, the indefatigable lady who has left high position and home comforts to serve in the Salvation Army in India, writes a grateful letter of thanks to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the money we have cabled to her. She says: "May God bless you all abundantly for this timely help. Our hearts have bled over the crowds whom our means will not allow us to help. We are doing much by supplying the people with grain, but it is little compared with what is really needed. We are having a well dug and are giving work to weavers, for which we need funds, so that your gift is most welcome. I send you a photograph [reproduced on the opposite page] of one poor creature whom two of our officers brought in. She could not stand alone. I had her portrait taken that you might see the kind of people you are helping. They are all around us and their condition is in some cases even worse than that of the woman in the picture. It is often impossible, even if we had the means, to save those who have sunk so low through long starvation.

"The news that you are sending a shipload of grain to us in India, to feed these poor creatures is splendid. We trust you will not forget our grain stores which need replenishing. May God's richest blessing be upon you for this grand benefaction."

Rev. H. G. Bissell, of Ahmednagar, who has also received help from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, writes to correct a misconception that is liable to be produced by the letters and published reports. "The idea that when the rains come, as we hope they will in June, the distress will be relieved, is unhappily erroneous. It is true that many will then leave the relief works because the bamboo matting huts in which they are sheltered will not keep out the rain, and many will make an effort to get to their own homes and fields. But that is the time when help will be most needed. They have lost everything. Even their cooking utensils and all their household goods were sold at the beginning of the famine. They have nothing to plough with and no seed to put in the ground. They cannot borrow, for who would lend to them? Yet if they do not plough and sow there will be no harvest, and thus the rain so long hoped for and so eagerly anticipated will be of no use. If we had the means and could supply them with only a little money for farm implements and a little seed it might be the means of so much good. Without such help the famine will be repeated next year and those whom we are saving will die after all. It is therefore at this season that help will be of the most practical service. We are especially anxious to give the Christians who have lost their all a new start, and there are many, many of them. We earnestly hope that in this final crisis that will come in June and July your readers will stand by us. At no time will the money you can send be so gratefully received or will accomplish so much benefit. You cannot realize the difference between one of these native farmers going back to his land in the rain with empty hands and the same man going with a little money in his hand to buy seed and implements. It is all the difference between hope and despair. We therefore beg that you who have so generously helped us thus far will go on helping us to the end, and at least see that we have something to give our Christian people, who weak and wan and almost naked have to begin life over again. May God bless you all for what you have done already and continue to give you the heart that is not weary in well-doing. Pray for this afflicted people and give us all the help you are able!"

One of Mr. Bissell's native assistants has been visiting the relief camps, where he found many native Christians patiently toiling, some of them almost naked under the burning sun. With a little money with which he had been supplied he purchased some garments, which he gave away, to the intense gratitude of the women. "They utter no word of complaint, but it is easy to see how much they have suffered. The hardships which many persons have to endure are greater this time, as this famine has come so close upon the former. The people have hardly been able to fortify themselves against the calamity. Among the principal sufferers are weavers, as their trade is almost at a standstill. The streets of the cities and towns seem to be over-run with men, women and children calling from door to door for alms. Their pitiful cries and sad stories of want and beseeching entreaties would move a heart of stone. Some say they have walked ten and twenty miles, have had no food for two or three days together. No covering from the cold at night. The bare streets to lie in, insufficient water, and wearied nigh unto death. Seeing these people, hearing their voices crying for food, often makes our own food tasteless, and the desire frequent of dividing what we have to the last mouthful with these woe-begone famished people. Besides these, there are people and families ordinarily well to do in this city who are passing through most trying experiences in the ordinary matter of daily food and drink."

Cheerfulness

WE believe there is such a thing as taking the pitch of Christian devotion in the morning and keeping it all the day. We think we might take some of the dullest, heaviest, most disagreeable work of our life and set it to the tune of Antioch and Mount Pisgah. It is a good sign when you hear a workman whistle. It is a better sign when you hear him hum a roundelay. It is still a better sign when you hear him sing the words of Isaac Watts or Charles Wesley. A violin, chorded and strung, if something accidentally strike it, makes music, and we suppose there is such a thing as having our hearts so attuned by divine grace that even the rough collisions of life will make heavenly vibration. We do not believe that the power of Christian song has yet been fully tried. We believe that if you could roll the Old Hundred Doxology through Wall street, it would put an end to almost any panic. We believe that the discords and sorrows and the griefs of this world are to be swept out by heaven-born hallelujahs.

Rough Christians

A MERE elegance of manner cannot successfully hide iniquity from the eye of God. That model, gentlemanly apostle, Paul, writes to us: "Be courteous." That man can neither be a respectable worldling nor a consistent Christian who lacks good manners. He is shut out from refined circles, and he certainly ought to be hindered from entering the church. We cannot overlook that in a man which we could hardly excuse in a bear. One of the first effects of the grace of God upon an individual is to make him a gentleman. Gruffness, awkwardness, implacability, clannishness, are fruits of the devil; while gentleness and meekness are fruits of the Spirit. But while these excellencies of manner are so important, they cannot hide any deformity of moral character. How often it is that we find attractiveness of person, suavity of manners, gracefulness of conversation, gallantry of behavior thrown like wreaths upon moral death. The flowers that grow upon the scoriæ of Vesuvius do not make it any less of a volcano. The sepulchres in Christ's time did not exhaust all the whitewash. Some of the biggest scoundrels have been the most fascinating. If there are any depending on outward gracefulness and attractiveness of demeanor, with any hope that because of that God will forgive the sin of their soul, let me assure them that the divine justice cannot be satisfied with smiles and elegant gesticulation. Christ looks deeper than the skin, and such a ragged cloak as the one in which you are trying to cover yourself will be no hiding in the day of his power. God will not in the judgment ask how gracefully you walked, nor how politely you bowed, nor how sweetly you smiled, nor how impressively you gestured. The deeds done in the body will be the test, and not the rules of Lord Chesterfield.

The Element of Safety in Our Common Schools

THERE is nothing like fellowship in school to get rid of prejudice, whether of nationality, social rank or religious difference. There is no leveler like that of being associated in the same school classes. Superior scholarship, superior moral character, as shown in the class-room and on the playground, are something that cannot be blinked or resisted. Nor can difference in religious denomination be kept up or magnified after the familiar acquaintance encouraged and fostered in our public schools. There is a new type of humanity unfolding under these influences. It does not go back to medieval times. It is not engaged in settling old scores. It is a type that has this New World as its possession; that has before it the open pages of the Bible, God's Book; and of human history, man's book. And from these two sources it determines that men should no longer magnify their differences, but their similarities. There is but one God, and he is the Father of our Elder Brother; and but one humanity, and that is man in all his varieties, appointed to dwell on all the face of the earth; to possess it and beautify it, and in it to sleep the slumber of death, and from it to rise to a glorious resurrection. God bless our common and public schools and institutions of learning.

The Right Place

HOW many get into occupations and professions for which they are not fitted! It is often the case that the difficulty begins clear back in the home circle, with misapprehension as to which child ought to be consecrated to the ministry. John is a keen, bright boy. He is good at a bargain. When he trades at schooi he always gets the best of it. Make him a merchant. He will soon gather a fortune and go right up to take his place among the Grinnells and the Lawrences. George has great cerebral development. Phrenologically, language is large. Make him a lawyer. He will argue his way to the front, and he will take his place among the Mansfields and the Storys. Henry has large girth at the chest, and is military in his step and bearing. Send him to West Point. We shall see him yet a brigadier-general. William is fond of sketching, especially of sketching ships, and he knows as much about a vessel as an old sailor. Make him a shipbuilder. The vessel that he builds will successfully wrestle with the Caribbean whirlwind. Aleck is not very well. He has never had very good digestion. Since that last malarial attack his spleen is enlarged. He has a morbid way of looking at things. He will sit for hours looking at one figure in the carpet. His manners are so mild, so soft, so gentle, so affectionate, so heavenly, and he cries easily. Make him a minister! Now, my friends, that is a great mistake. If you want to consecrate one of your sons to the Gospel ministry, take the widest awake, the brawniest, the most brilliant, the most irresistible, the most potent. A tremendous work opens before a profession whose one object is to lift the nations toward God and prepare them for heaven

...A GREAT...
SERMONIC LIBRARY
Over 8,500 Pages
20 Handsome Volumes
Containing Over 500
Selected Sermons by Rev. T.
DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.

WE are pleased to announce to our readers that, after nearly three years of infinite labor on the part of Dr. Talmage and a large number of CHRISTIAN HERALD assistants, and at an enormous outlay of money, the entire set of Twenty Volumes, comprising over Five Hundred "Selected Sermons," is completed, and ready to take an honored and well-deserved place in your home. The publication of twenty volumes of sermonic literature is truly an announcement extraordinary, unique and unprecedented. In this remarkable work every volume contains more than 400, and the complete set, 8,571 pages. Each volume has an illuminated title page, is handsomely bound in maroon silk-finished cloth, with gold stamping and gilt top, and the paper is deckle-edged. Volume I contains a fine full-page portrait of Dr. Talmage. We are assured that the host of readers of his sermons will hail with unbounded enthusiasm this opportunity to secure for themselves a set of these priceless volumes, containing over 500 sermons, sermons abounding in spiritual helpfulness, matchless eloquence, valuable anecdote and pathos. Within their pages there is consolation for the sorrowing, an uplift for the fallen, hope for the despairing, an arousing for the indifferent and a glorious course indicated for the zealous and devoted Christian.

One cannot read the sermons contained in these volumes without gaining a vast amount of knowledge, increased vocabulary and improved diction.

Over five hundred different texts furnish the subjects of these remarkable discourses, but many hundreds more are illustrated and employed. Thus, in one sermon alone, preached soon after Dr. Talmage's visit to the Holy Land, text after text is explained by a simple allusion to the customs of the people to which Christ referred in his teaching and which remain to this day to enforce the truths he proclaimed. The meaning of many hitherto unexplained passages becomes wonderfully vivid and the Gospels take on new attractiveness for the reader.

A brief study of the titles of the sermons gives a forceful idea of the great variety of topics treated.

Volume I is a brilliant setting forth of God in his Works. At the preacher's summons, all nature discloses the Creator; the wide universe tells the story of his wisdom, skill, power and love. From the heavens, the earth, the waters, and the human frame, lessons of divine providence, of faith, and hope, and trust, are taught. Volume II is national in its character. The truest patriotism and the soundest philosophy are manifest. The preacher is seen to be one who has understanding of the times to know what God's later Israel ought to do. Another volume refutes the sceptics and serves to arm the Christian against the sophistries of the age and to show the folly and absurdities of unbelief. The sins of the city and the perils of young men and women are forcibly presented in Volume VI, while the succeeding volume is a graphic panorama of Life in the Holy Land. The explanations of Bible lore and Bible times are extremely graphic and flood the soul with new light. In volume VIII, the Home Life is discussed with a rare eloquence and fidelity. The "Choice of a Wife or of a Husband," "Sisters and Brothers," "Costume and Morals," "Life Insurance," the "Making of Friends," and subjects of a kindred character, so often ignored by the pulpit, are here treated in a manner which charms and captivates the reader.

The Gospel of the grace of God is in constant evidence. The "Living Bread" which came down from heaven is dispensed freely, fully, and faithfully. Here are help and healing for all who sorrow and suffer. Here, on page after page, through the eight thousand pages, are thoughts that breathe and words that burn and glow, and stimulate and strengthen — echoing the sentiments of Him who said, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life."

The subjects treated of in these twenty volumes are numbered by the thousand. About ten thousand are to be found in the copious and very convenient index appended to the final volume of the set. This index is comprehensive, and the references to Christ are numbered by the hundred. It takes two pages of the index to cover the references to "Sin"; there are 100 references to "Prayer," and almost twice as many to "Heaven." Dr. Talmage introduces numerous incidents from his personal experience.

Forty-four pages of the index are given to references to the anecdotal and historical illustrations with which the sermons abound. There are between one and two thousand of these delightful anecdotal helps, which are invaluable to preachers, Sunday School teachers and to Christian workers generally, as well as to all who study the Word of God for personal instruction and profit.

These sermons cover an unusually wide range of thought and are unsurpassed for originality, versatility, terseness, splendor of diction, glowing imagery, and wealth of incident.

The large and legible type used (long primer) is a feature seldom found in any publication of this magnitude. Too much emphasis cannot be put upon the value of the index which consists briefly, as follows: The 500 texts of sermons; twenty pages of Titles and Texts; forty-four pages of Anecdotal and Historical Illustrations, and 235 pages of Index to Subjects. The index is in compact and convenient form, and the type used is nonpareil.

Each volume measures 5½ x 8½ in. when closed, and the twenty volumes require shelf space 30 inches long. Their combined weight is about thirty-five pounds. The Price of the Complete Set is Twenty Dollars. The entire set will be sent securely boxed, either by freight or express, charges not prepaid, on receipt of only one dollar down and one dollar a month until paid. Ten per cent. discount will be allowed when the purchaser pays spot cash. All orders for this great Sermonic Library should be addressed:

BRIEF NOTES

The Rev. S. Hartwell Pratt, evangelist, who organized and conducted the Gospel Tent Services in New York last summer, is being urged by many friends to reopen the work this season.

The Baptist Young People's Union will hold its National Convention in Cincinnati, June 12-15. Special trains will leave New York and Philadelphia on July 10, one fare for the round trip.

The Governor of Georgia has been collecting statistics of the prisons in that State. Among other interesting facts elicited is that of the prisoners then confined, eighty-three out of every hundred had never been in Sunday School.

Dr. R. S. MacArthur celebrated May 12-15 the thirtieth anniversary of his pastorate of Calvary Baptist Church, New York. The report showed that during that period over two million dollars had been raised by the church and four thousand members had been received.

New York has a policeman who was born in Finland. He is an exceptionally intelligent, efficient officer. Recently he organized a church for Finns in the city. "If," he says, "it will do nothing else for them, it will help to counteract the influence of the saloon, which is their worst enemy.

The attempt to form a basis of union for Primitive Methodists and Bible Christians in Great Britain appears to have failed. The conferences of both bodies were in accord, but when the plan was submitted to the Primitive Methodist Quarterly Meetings, it was rejected by a vote.

Envoys from the Boers

EARTY and cordial was the welcome extended by the Mayor of New York to the three envoys from the Transvaal Government, who arrived on our shores on May 15. The chilling reception they had met with in European capitals had prepared them to appreciate the warmth of the greeting of Mayor Van Wyck, who with a number of citizens of Dutch descent and Irish-Americans were evidently pleased with the opportunity of displaying their sympathies. The Mayor apparently felt that he had a double cause for cordiality, inasmuch as he is of Dutch descent, and is the municipal representative of Tammany Hall. He appeared to forget that, in expressing his personal sympathy with the cause which the envoys represent, he might give them a wrong idea of the sentiment of the city, which is by no means unanimously in accord with him on this subject. The representatives of the Boers are Abraham Fischer, the Chairman and leader of the party; C. H. Wessels and A. D. W. Wolmarans, all men of about middle age. Mr. Wolmarans was appointed by President Kruger, Mr. Wessels by President Steyn, and Mr. Fischer was the joint selection of both Presidents. J. R. de Bruyn accompanies them as secretary. During their stay in New York they refrained from fully explaining the purpose of their visit. In general terms it was, of course, to enlist the sympathy of the United States Government and people, but whether they hoped to have the sympathy manifested in diplomacy or by force of arms, they did not say. Their official explanation was reserved for their interview with the President and Department of State. It is predicted by some, who claim to speak with authority, that the policy of the envoys will be to address public meetings before the assembling of the National Conventions, in the hope that one or both of the great political parties will incorporate a pro-Boer plank in its platform. It is generally believed that the appeals of the envoys will have no effect on the President, or the Department of State. The President, as is well known, would gladly mediate, if invited to do so by both powers; but so long as Great Britain has expressed no wish for his good offices, he will probably not volunteer them. During our war with Spain, Great Britain so vigorously opposed the intervention of European powers in the struggle, that, as the President believes, she has the right now to expect similar treatment from the United States. This is the principle of the Golden Rule:

Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do you even so to them (Matt. 7:12).

THE BOER ENVOYS NOW IN THIS COUNTRY ON A MISSION OF MEDIATION

Mafeking Relieved

The news of the relief of Mafeking was first received from Boer sources. For more than seven months the little town has been held by Col. Baden-Powell and twelve hundred irregular soldiers against an overwhelming force of Boers. Before the outbreak of the war this gallant officer was sent from his command in Rhodesia with instructions to hold the place at all hazards. It was deemed important because the railroad from Cape Town to the West Coast ran through it. With Col. Baden Powell were many aristocratic officers, including a son of Lord Salisbury, and Lord Bentinck, who is a descendent of the famous Dutch statesman, who was the most intimate friend of William III. Although most of his troops were unused to war, they showed astonishing courage and endurance. Every attack made by the Boers was repulsed with loss, and though at least five thousand men well armed and with heavy artillery surrounded the town, the little garrison could not be subdued. They made bomb-proof shelters and in many ingenious ways protected themselves. They suffered severely from lack of provisions. Early this year they were reduced to a diet of horse and mule flesh and a soup made from the fodder of horses. It was feared that the men would become so feeble from lack of nourishment that they would not be able to resist an assault, but no word of surrender was uttered. At last on May 16 a column of troops from Kimberley arrived and delivered the garrison from its protracted suffering. The news was received in London with the wildest joy. All places of business were closed, and the people thronged the streets, singing and shouting with an enthusiasm that showed how keen the anxiety had been. The spectacle of the heroism and fortitude displayed had touched all hearts, and every one rejoiced that it had not been in vain. It is this quality of endurance and fortitude exercised in spiritual conflicts that our Lord especially commended:

He that endureth to the end shall be saved (Matt. 10:22).

Bells With a Record

A descriptive article on the City of Charleston, S. C., narrates a history of the bells in St. Michael's Church of that city that is probably without a parallel. The peal of bells has been five times across the Atlantic. Its first journey was westward, before the Revolution. The bells were duly hung on their arrival in America. When the Revolutionary War broke out, it was feared that they might be injured, and they were sent out to England for safe keeping. At the close of the War they were returned, and amid triumphant ovations they were again placed in position in the church tower. They continued to delight the ears of the citizens until the outbreak of the Civil War, when Sherman's army broke them in pieces. After the departure of the troops the pieces of the bells were carefully collected and sent to England to be re-cast. The old books containing a description of the proportion of metals composing the bells were consulted and the fragments were re-united. Again for the fifth time they came back and were placed once more in the church tower, where they have continued ever since. The people are all the prouder of their bells because of the dangers they have survived. So it will be with the Lord's people who through many adversities still testify for him.

Dying and behold we live; as chastened and not killed; as sorrowful yet always rejoicing (II.Cor.6:9).

For Love of the Homeland

Among the personal anecdotes current about the leaders in the war in South Africa is one of Sir Redvers Buller which shows the strength of ties of nationality. It appears that the General was on his way to Canada a year or two ago, with a regiment of soldiers. Off the entrance to the St. Lawrence the transport vessel was delayed by the fog and the provisions ran short. The difficulty increasing, the General asked if there was no way of obtaining food and learned that on a little islet there was a station where provisions were stored for shipwrecked crews. Gen. Buller at once ordered a boat lowered and went to the island. A woman was in charge and to her the General described the situation and asked for a supply of provisions. The women peremptorily refused. She said her stores were for shipwrecked men and no others. Gen. Buller pointed out that the stock was a Government store and he, as a servant to the crown, had a right to whatever it contained that he needed, but the woman was firm. But in her voice Gen. Buller recognized the Cornish accent and exclaimed, "What, not for dear old One-and-All and I a Buller?" Instantly the woman's austerity vanished. "What," she said, "from Cornwall and a Buller? Take everything in the place; you're heartily welcome." She could refuse a general and turn a deaf ear to a tale of need, but she could not refuse anything to a man who, like herself, loved the home-land. Christ wishes his followers to let the love of him form such a tie of brotherhood.

Whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you he shall not lose his reward (Mark 9:41).

An Awkward Dilemma

The Supreme Court has been invoked for the relief of a Chinaman who is in prison as a consequence of choosing the least painful of two alternatives. He was ship's steward on board the steamer Josephus. Some six weeks ago while the steamer was lying at the Standard Oil Company's docks at Bayonne, N. J., she caught fire and burned to the water's edge. The steward was aware that it was a violation of United States laws for him to land on American soil, he being a Chinaman without a certificate. On the other hand, if he went ashore he would be arrested and imprisoned. Between the two alternatives he did not hesitate long. He jumped over the side and swam ashore. He was promptly seized and taken to jail. On hearing the circumstances Judge Lacombe ordered his release on condition that he was placed on board the first ship bound for China. No one placed in the Chinaman's position of having to choose between burning and imprisonment, would hesitate to do as he did; yet, how many there are, who, though warned of their spiritual danger and assured of absolute safety if they trust themselves to Christ, neglect to avail themselves of the opportunity to escape:

How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation (Heb. 2:3).

Identity Fixed by Phonograph

A short time ago a citizen of Galesburg, Mich., paid a visit to Kalamazoo, and among other amusements that attracted him was one in which a phonograph played a part. The phonograph interested him intensely, and when it gave a fragment from the play of "The Three Guardsmen," he paid particular attention. Something in that fragment startled him. He asked to have it over again, and his request was complied with. Then he begged to know where the cylinder came from, and, being told, he set off at once to find the maker. He explained that one of the characters in the play had a scarcely perceptible stammer and a slight difficulty in pronouncing certain words. He had a brother with those characteristics, and he felt sure that it was his brother who had spoken into the phonograph. The brother had enlisted in the army nearly twenty years ago, but had broken down in health and had been discharged on that account. A search had been made for him, but without success. Family affairs rendered his presence important, but he could not be found. The phonograph, however, furnished the true clue and in a few days the brothers were reunited. Probably if the two brothers had met they would not have known one another, but the peculiarity of speech served to identify the missing man, even though heard through a phonograph. It would be well if the conversation of all Christians were of that character that it might be said to them as it was to Peter:

Of a truth thou art one of them for thy speech betrayeth thee (Matt. 26:73).

Paid to Die

In a Chinese newspaper, an extract from which is cabled to the American press, the statement is made that the men who have suffered punishment for the recent murder of the missionaries were not the real criminals. They were men who for a stipulated sum of money consented to undergo the respective sentences. The man who delivered the blow that killed Missionary Brooks was sentenced to be beheaded. For $1,000, the paper says, he got an opium fiend, who had but a few months to live, to allow himself to be decapitated in his stead, and the substitute was duly killed. The second man was condemned to strangulation. The story says he paid a consumptive $600 to be strangled in his stead, and the third murderer got a third substitute to take life imprisonment in his place for $500. The remarkable story says that 218 men, broken down in health, offered themselves as substitutes that they might perform one good act for their parents before their lives were ended, by handing them a sum of money which to poor people in China would be a fortune. The murderers must have been very glad to find people willing for such small sums to suffer in their places, and thankful also that the law permitted such substitution. It was a matter of bargain between the man who had money and the man who wanted money. How different is the sacrifice by which men may be redeemed through Christ, who gave his life that even his enemies might have life eternal.

For scarcely for a righteous man will one die: yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die. But God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us (Rom. 5:7, 8).

Around the World with Josiah Allen's Wife

SAMANTHA IN EGYPT

DOROTHY and Miss Meechim and Robert Strong went over to an island on the bay to see the caves of Elephanta, the great underground temple, one hall of which is one hundred and fifty feet long, the lofty ceilin' supported by immense columns, and three smaller halls, the walls of all on 'em richly sculptured.

Whose hands made them statutes? I don't know nor Josiah don't and I guess nobody duz. There wuz a thoughtful look on Dorothy's sweet face when she came home, and Robert Strong too seemed walkin' in a reverie, but Miss Meechim wuz as pert as ever; it takes more than a cave to dant her.

One place in Bombay I liked first rate, a hospital for dumb animals, it is kep' by a sect called the Jains. Sick animals of all kinds are cared for: horses, cows, dogs, cats, rats and I spoze any ailin' creeter from a mouse up to a elephant is nursed with tender care.

Sez Josiah, "No matter what her creed is, Samantha, that Jane is a good creeter and is doin' a great work, I would send the old mair here in a minute if she wuz took with consumption or janders or anythin', if it wuzn't so fur, and I'd tell Jane jest how much I thought on her for her goodness."

Sez I, "Josiah, it is a sect, not a female."

But he wouldn't gin in and talks about Jane a sight now when he recalls about the horrors of vivisection or when he sees animals abused and horses driv too hard and overloaded—he always sez:

"I would like to have Jane see that, I guess Jane would put a stop to that pretty lively."

Well, it shows Josiah's good heart.

The Hindus have several temples in Bombay. One of the great days is the Festival of the Serpents. Snake charmers bring to this place the deadly snakes which are then fed to propitiate them, by the priests. I spoze.

Oh, how Miss Meechim went on about the idee of worshipin' snakes, and it wuz perfectly dretful to me too. I must confess. But Arvilly always puttin' her oar in and always hash on our govermunt, sez:

"Why, what is this different from what we do in America?"

The Worship of Serpents

Miss Meechim's eyes snapped, she wuz madder than a wet hen, but Arvilly went on, "Every 'lection time hain't the great serpent of the liquor power fed and pampered by the law-makers of our country?"

Miss Meechim didn't reply; I guess she dassent, and I didn't say anything, and Arvilly went on:

"Our serpent worship is as bad agin as these Hindus', for after their snakes are fed and worshiped they shet 'em up again so they can't do any harm. But after lawmakers propitiate the serpent with money and influence, they let it loose to wreathe round the bright young lives and noble manhood and crunch and destroy 'em in its deadly folds, leavin' the slime of agony and death in its tracks all over our country from North to South, East to West. It don't look well after all this for an American to act horrified at feedin' a snake a little milk and shettin' it up in a box." She wuz fairly shakin' with indignation, and Miss Meechim dast as well die as dispute her agin. And I didn't say a word to harrer her up any more, for I knew well what she had went through.

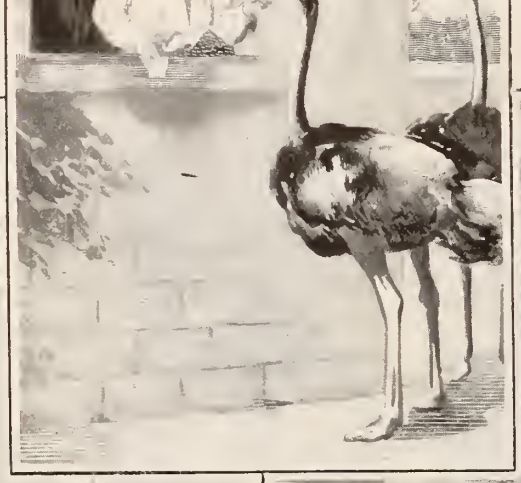
Through the Red Sea

We only stayed a few days in Bombay, and then took the steamer and went straight acrost the Arabian Sea, stopping at Aden for a little while, and then up the Red Sea; on one side on us, Arabia, and on the other, Africa.

Aden, where we stopped for a short time is a dreary lookin' little place with seventy or eighty thousand natives livin' a little back from the shore, while the few English people there live near the coast. Beautiful ostrich feathers are obtained there from the many ostrich farmers living near, as well as the Mocha coffee, which made over a Jonesville stove by a Jonesville woman has so often cheered the heart and put to flight the worrisome passions of a Josiah. But in most of these tropical countries, where you'd think you could git the best, I didn't find coffee half so good as I made it myself, though mebby I ortn't to say it.

We saw some wonderful jugglers here. They will draw out great bunches of natural flowers from most anywhere that you wouldn't expect 'em to be, and call 'em a pretty good duckin'. But I spoze the walls of water like as not is risin' on each side on 'em onbeknown to them, and when the time comes, when the bugle sounds, they will rush in and overwhelm the armies of Greed and Tyranny and the oppressed. Them that are forced to make brick without straw, or without sand hardly, will be free, and go on rejoicin' into the land of Promise.

"WE SAW SOME WONDERFUL JUGGLERS"



WATCHING THE OSTRICHES

IN THE CAVES OF ELEPHANTA

Straits or Bab-el-mandeb, Gate of Tears, named so on account of the many axidents that have happened there. But we got through safely and sailed on towards Suez.

So we went on past the coasts of Abyssinia, Nubia. Fur off we see Mount Sineii, sacred mount, where the Law wuz given to Moses.

Where Moses Stood!

Oh my soul, think ont! To see the very spot where Moses stood and talked to the Almighty face to face. It is only three hundred milds from Suez.

We sailed directly over the place where the Israelited passed over dry shod whilst their enemies, the Egyptians, wuz overwhelmed by the waters. The persecuted triumphant and walkin' a-foot into safety, while Tyranny and Oppression wuz drownded.

I wish them waters wuz swashin' up to-day and closin' in on the Oppressor, not to drownd 'em mebby, but to give

To resoom: It is three thousand milds from Bombay to Suez, but it wuz all safely passed and we found ourselves in Cairo in a most comfortable hotel, and felt after all our wanderings in fur off lands that we agin breathed the air of civilization almost equal to Jonesville.

We found some letters here from home. I had a letter from Tirzah Ann and one from Thomas Jefferson. His letter wuz full of gratitude to heaven and his ma for his dear little boy's restored strength and health. He and Maggie wuz lookin' and waitin' with eager hearts and open arms to greet us, and the time wuz long to 'em I could see, though he didn't say so.

Tirzah Ann's letter contained strange news of our neighbor, Miss Deacon

JOY OVER LETTERS FROM HOME

Sypher. Her devotion to her husband has been told by me more formally, it is worthy the pen of poet and historian. She lived and breathed in the Deacon, marked all her clothes, M. D. S., Miss Deacon Sypher. Her hull atmosphere wuz Deacon, her goal wuz his happiness, her heaven his presence.

News from Jonesville

Well, a year ago she got hurt on the sidewalk to Jonesville, and the Deacon sued the village and got five hundred dollars for her broken leg. He took the money and went out to the Ohio on a pleasure trip, and to visit some old neighbors. It made talk, for folks said that when she worshiped him so he ort to stayed by her, but he hired she that wuz Betsy Bobbett to stay with her, and he went off on this pleasure trip and had a splendid good time, and with the rest of the money he bought a span of mules. Miss Sypher wuz deadly afraid of 'em. But the Deacon wanted 'em, and so they made her happily agonized, she wuz so afraid of their heels and their brays, and so highly tickled with the Deacon's joy. Well, it turned out queer as a dog, but just after we started on our trip abroad Tirzah said that the Deacon fell and broke his leg in the same place and the same spot on the sidewalk; the Jonesvillians are slack, it wuzn't mended proper. And Miss Sypher thought that she would git some money jest as he did. She didn't think on't for quite a spell. Tirzah writ. She wuz so bound up in the Deacon and never left his side night or day, nor took off her clothes only to wash 'em for two weeks, jest bent over his couch and drowged round waitin' on him, for he wuz dretful notional and hard to git along with. But she loved to be jawed at, dearly, for she said it made her think he would git along, and when he would find fault with her and throw things, she smiled gladly, thinkin' it wuz a good sign.

Well, when he got a little better so she could lay down herself and rest a little, the thought come to her that she would git some money for his broken leg jest as he had for hern. She thought that she would like to buy him a suit of very nice clothes and a gold chain, and build a mule barn for the mules, but the law wouldn't give Miss Deacon Sypher a cent; the law said that if anything wuz gin it would go to the Deacon's next of kin, a brother who lived way off in the Michigan.

The Value of a Child's Life

The Deacon owned her bones, but she didn't own the Deacon's!

And I wondered at it as much as Tommy ever wondered over anything why her broken limb, and all the emoluments from it, belonged to him, and his broken leg and the proprietary rights in it belonged to a man way out in the Michigan that he hadn't seen for ten years and didn't speke to (owin' to trouble about property) and after Miss Deacon Sypher had worshiped him and waited on him for thirty years like a happy surf.

Well, so it wuz. I said it seemed queer, but Arvilly said that it wuzn't queer at all. She sez: "One of my letters from home to-day had a worse case in it than that." Sez she, "You remember Willie Henzy, Deacon Henzy's grandchild, in Brooklyn. You know how he got run over and killed by a trolley car."

"Yes," sez I, "sweet little creeter; Sister Henzy told me about it with the tears runnin' down her cheeks. They all worshiped that child, he wuz jest as pretty and bright as he could be, and he wuz the only boy amongst all the grandchildren; it is a blow Deacon Henzy will never git over. And his ma went into one faintin' fit after another when he wuz brought home, and will never be a well woman agin, and his pa's hair in three months grew gray as a rat; it most killed all on 'em."

"Well," sez Arvilly, "what verdict do you think that fool brought in?"

"What fool?" sez I.

"The law!" sez Arvilly sternly. "The judge brought in a verdict of one dollar damages; it said that children wuzn't wage-earners and therefore they wuzn't worth any more."

I throwed my arms round Tommy onbeknown to me, and sez I, "Millions and millions of money wouldn't pay your grandma for you." And Tommy wonnered and wonnered that a little boy's life wuzn't worth more than a dollar.

"Why," sez I, "the law gives twenty dollars for a two-year-old heifer."

"Yes," sez Arvilly, "the law don't reckon Willie Henzy's life worth so much as a yearlin' calf or a dog. But they can do jest as they please; these great monopolies have spun their golden web round politicians and office-seekers and office-holders and rule the whole country. They can set their own valuation on life and limb, and every dollar they can save in bruised flesh and death and agony, is one more dollar to divide amongst the stockholders.

"Well," sez I, "we mustn't forgit to be megum, Arvilly; we mustn't forgit in our indignation all the good they do carryin' folks from hether to yon for almost nothin'."

"Well, they no need to act more heartless than Nero or King Herod. I don't believe that old Nero himself would done this; I believe he would gin two dollars for Willie Henzy."

And I sez, "I never neighbored with Mr. Nero. But if I could git holt of that judge," sez I, "he would remember it to his dyin' day."

"He wouldn't care for what you said," sez Arvilly; "he got his pay. There hain't any of these big monopolies got any more soul than a stun-boat."

The Valley of the Nile

It is only nine hours from Suez to Cairo. How often have I spoke of the great desert of Sarah in hours of Jonesville mirth and sadness, little thinkin' that I should ever cross it in this mortal spear, but we did pass through a corner on't and had a good view of the Suez Canal, about which so much has been said and done. For milds we went through the Valley of the Nile, that great wet nurse of Egypt. The banks on either side on't stand dressed in livin' green. There wuz a good many American and English people at the tarven in Cairo, but no one we knew. In the garden at the side of the tarven wuz a ostrich pen where a number of great ostriches wuz kep, and also several pelicans walked round in another part of the garden.

Tommy and I stood by the winder, very much interested in watchin' the ostriches, and though I hain't covetous or proud, yet I did wish I had one or two of them satiny, curly feathers to trim my best bunnet in Jonesville, they went so fur ahead of any sisters in the meetin' house.

Josiah hadn't seen 'em yet; he wuz layin' on the lounge, but he sez: "I don't see why you're so took up with them geese."

"Geese!" sez I; "Look here, Josiah Allen"—and I took a cookie I had got for Tommy—"see here; see me feed these geese ten feet from the ground." He could see their heads come up to take it out of my hand.

SIGHTS IN THE STREETS OF OLD CAIRO

Josiah and the Ostriches

"Good land!" sez he, "you don't say they stretch their necks clear up here." And he jined in our astonishment then and proposed that he should be let down from the winder in a sheet and git me a few feathers. But I rejected the idee to once. I sez: "I'd ruther go featherless for life than to have a pardner commit rapine for 'em."

And he sez: "If some Egyptian come to Jonesville and wanted a rooster's tail feather, we wouldn't say nuthin' aginst it."

But I sez: "This is different; this would spile the looks of the ostriches."

And he said there wuz sunthin' said in the Bible about "spilin' the Egyptians." But I wouldn't let him wrest the Scripters to his own destruction, and told him I wouldn't, and then sez I, "I never could enjoy religion settin' under a stolen feather."

As you pass through these picturesque streets memories of them that have made this city historic crowd upon your mind. You think of Saladin, Christian, Mameluke and Islamite.

You think of the Bible and you think of the Arabian Nights, and you almost expect to see the enchanted carpet layin' round somewhere, and some one goin' up to the close shet doors sayin, "Open sesame."

And as you stroll along you will hear every language under the sun, or so it seems, and meet English, Italian, French, Bedowins, soldiers, footmen, Turks, Arabs, all dressed in their native costumes. Anon close shet up carriages in which you most know there are beautiful wimmen peerin' out of some little corner onbeknown to their folks; agin' you meet a weddin' procession, then a trolley car, then some Egyptian troops, then some merchants, then mysterious lookin' Oriental wimmen, with black veils hangin' loose, then a woman with a donkey loaded with fowls, then some more soldiers in handsome uniform.

Agin' every eye is turned to see some high official or native prince dressed in splendid array dashin' along in a carriage with footmen runnin' on before to clear the way. And mebby right after, comes a man drivin' a flock of turkeys, they feelin' jest as important and high-headed to all appearance.

The air is delightful here, dry and warm. No malaria in Egypt, though nigh by are sulphur baths for anybody that wants them, and also a cure for consumptive folks.

In goin' through the streets of Cairo you will see bazars everywhere; slipper bazars, carpet and rug, vase and candle, and jewelry bazars; little shops where everything can be bought are on all sides of you.

Confusing Oriental Money

But if you go to buy anything you get so confused as to the different worth of a piaster that your head turns. In some transactions it is as much agin as in others. Josiah got dretful worked up tryin' to buy a silk handkerchief. Sez he to the dealer:

"What do you mean by it, you dishonest tike, you? If you should come to Jonesville to buy a overcoat or a pair of boots, and we should wiggle round and act as you do, I wouldn't blame you, if you never come there to trade a cent with us agin."

The man kep' bowin' real polite and offered some coffee to him and a pipe, and Josiah sez:

"I don't want none of your coffee, nor none of your pipes. I want honesty, and I can tell you one thing that you've lost my trade, and you'll lose the hull of the Jonesville trade when I go home and tell the brethren how slippery you be in a bargain."

The man kep' on bowin' and smilin' and I told Josiah, "I presoom he thinks you're praisin' him; he acts as if he did." And Josiah stopped talkin' in a minute. But howsumever he wouldn't take the handkerchief.

Miss Meechim and I—and I spoze that Robert Strong wuz to the bottom of it—but tennyrate, we wuz invited to a harem to see a princess, wife of a pasha. Robert thought that we would like to see the inside of an Indian prince's palace, and so we did.

Miss Meechim of course wouldn't consent to let Dorothy go anywhere nigh such a place, and I guess she disinfected her clothes before she see Dorothy when she got back; 'tennyrate, I see her winder up and her dress hangin' over a chair. Arvilly didn't want to go, and as she wuzn't invited, it made it real convenient for her to not want to. And of course I couldn't take my pardner. Why, that good, moral man would be flowed from by them wimmen as if he had the plague. Dorothy and Robert wuz a-goin' to Heliopolis and offered to take Tommy with 'em. And Miss Meechim and I accordin'ly sot off alone.

Drink Out-Herods Herod

QUARTERLY TEMPERANCE LESSON

DEATH OF JOHN THE BAPTIST

BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

International Sunday School Lesson for June 10: Mark 6: 14-29 | Golden Text, Eph. 5: 18: "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit"

JOHN and Herod, prophet and king, preacher and president are all "ministers of God." That title Paul twice applies to rulers in the thirteenth of Romans. It ought not to seem a strange saying in a country whose Supreme Court has said, "This is a Christian nation;" but when Rev. Dr. W. J. Robinson stood in the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, and, with the solemnity of a bishop addressing a class of young preachers, reminded the listening governor and legislators that they were civil "ministers," "ordained of God," "called" to serve him and humanity by applying the law of Christ to civil affairs, it was manifestly to many of them and even to some of the preachers who were present, a novel view of politics. However, when the opposite doctrine, that "politics owes no allegiance to the Decalogue and the Golden Rule," was proclaimed by a United States Senator, he was speedily retired from politics, as if to prove that the law of Christ had not been so retired. A denial in deeds often escapes similar rebuke, but it is something to have the people hold fast even in their ideals to the truth that the sovereign and citizen are both responsible to God for every political act. "The greatest thought that ever entered my mind," said the greatest of American statesmen, Daniel Webster, in one of his great moments, "is the thought of my individual responsibility to God." In the words of Gladstone, "The purpose of law is to make it as hard as possible to do wrong, and as easy as possible to do right." That is a good paraphrase of Paul's words that "rulers should be a terror to evil-doers."

The Herods of History

Herod stands for another class, who are "terrors," but only to the good. The Herod family has become the synonym of cruelty and tyranny. The first Herod though he had built the temple, attempted to kill Christ, and in the effort massacred all the babies of Bethlehem. He treated his own children so badly that the Emperor Augustus said, "I would rather be his swine than his son." In the intoxication of anger to which he was subject, he murdered at different times his brother, his grandfather, three of his sons, his wife's mother and his wife, Mariamne, who was the favorite among his ten wives. And when he was dying, he ordered that the chief men of the cities of Judea should be killed, lest there should be no mourning, but rather rejoicing when he was dead. He died of a loathsome disease, probably due to his vices.

His son, Herod Antipas, the Herod of this lesson, called by Christ, "that fox"—a fine characterization of the unprincipled politician in all ages—was less given to murder than his father; adultery being his favorite crime. He took the legal wife of his brother, Herod Philip as his own, no doubt veiling his crime under some unwarranted decree of divorce. John the Baptist, God's ambassador at his royal court, arraigned the king and queen for this mutual crime, before the Supreme Court of the universe. Herod had borne the rebuke, even if he did not obey it, but women when they are wicked seem to go into sin more intensely than men, and so the Jezebel at his side insisted that John should be sent to the dungeons of Machaerus. Edersheim says of its ruins, "These immense heaps look like a monument of judgment. The foundations of the walls all around to the height of a yard or two above the ground, are still standing. As we clamber over them to examine the interior we notice how small the keep is, exactly one hundred yards in diameter. A well of great depth and a deep cemented cistern with the vaulting of the roof still complete, and—of most terrible interest to us—two dungeons, one of them deep down, its sides scarcely broken in, with small holes still visible in the masonry, where staples of wood and iron had once been fixed. As we look down into this hot darkness, we shudder in realizing that this terrible keep had for nigh ten months been the prison of that son of the free wilderness, the boy herald of the coming kingdom, the humble, earnest, self-denying John the Baptist."

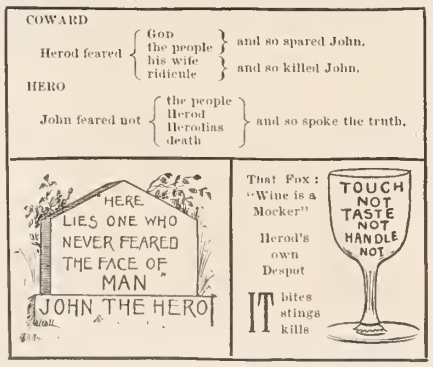
This Herod had a living conscience, and he often called forth the imprisoned prophet and "heard him gladly." But for fear of his wife he would have set him free. He had no thought of punishing him by anything worse than imprisonment. We shall have further proof that whatever this Herod fell short of the family reputation in cruelty, his wife made up.

Here comes into the story King Alcohol, the power behind the throne then and now, that out-Herods Herod in cruelty and tyranny and lust. Every crime of all the Herods he repeats on a grander scale. Herod put in his mouth what steals away the brains of king and peasant alike. In his after-dinner drunkenness, with his guests in like case, he called for the dessert that usually follows the wine in the Orient, as it is coming to do in some of our cities to-day—the dancing girl. We see lust completing the work of liquor in the king's brain, and he utters his foolish promise to reward the dancer with whatever she would ask, to the half of his kingdom. Her mother bade her ask "the head of John the Baptist." To this crime of beheading John, Herod had brought himself by first losing his own head through wine. The awful request sobered him. He saw to what folly and wickedness "wine and woman" had led him, but he was not brave enough to say he had made a mistake and face the sneers of his wife and guests. He might at least have pleaded that a bad promise is "worst kept than broken, though better not spoken." In the words of Shakespeare:

> It is a great sin to swear unto a sin,
> But greater sin to keep a sinful oath.
> Who can be bound by any solemn vow
> To do a murderous deed?

But this was one of many cases where a king was himself a woman's slave. And so in his lonely dungeon John was straightway beheaded, and the woman whose sin he had rebuked received the ghastly head on a platter for her feast of revenge.

JOHN THE BAPTIST REPROVING HEROD AND HERODIAS—SALOME'S GHASTLY GUERDON



Herodias, the destroyer of John, was at last the destroyer of her husband in everything but life. In her ambition, she induced him to go to Rome to secure the title of king. Instead, he was there charged with crimes, and was deposed by Caligula and banished to Leyons.

How Drink Perverts Government

This lesson invites us to survey the ruin drink has wrought in the specific realm of government, illustrating the warning in Proverbs 31: 4, 5:

> It is not for kings to drink wine,
> Lest they forget the law
> And pervert the judgment of any that is afflicted.

Railroads are insisting on total abstinence in their employees. Perhaps we shall learn some day that as clear a brain is required to run a government as a freight train.

The Chinese author of "She-King," in about 450 B.C., describes a Chinese Herod whose wickedness was also in part due to drink:

> Thus to the tyrant Shen, our King, Wan said:
> "Alas, alas! Yin's king so great,
> Not heaven, but spirits flush your face with red,
> That evil thus you imitate.
> You do in all your conduct what is wrong—
> Darkness to you the same as light;
> Your noisy feasts and revels you prolong,
> And day through you is black as night."

King Benhadad was defeated when he was drinking himself drunk, he and the thirty and two kings that helped him (I. Kings 20: 16). Belshazzar, the young king of Babylon, only seventeen years old, was overthrown while he drank sacrilegiously from the sacred vessels taken from God's temple (Dan. 5: 1-30)—a sin no greater than corrupting with intoxicants the temples of God to-day, which temples we are.

General O. O. Howard gives the following among other instances of defeat through drink in the war for the Union: "In one of our great battles we suffered defeat, and many of us have believed that the mistake which caused the defeat was due to an excess of whisky drunk by the officer in command. I had the testimony from an officer who was with him, that pitchers of liquor were brought on to his table, and that he and those around him drank freely from them as if they contained only water. The orders the commander gave were the direct opposite from what he would have given had he not been suddenly confused by drink. A heavy loss of men and material, and a dreadful defeat for our cause was the result."

Even Homer, ten centuries before Christ, knew that wine was harmful to the soldier's body and brain, as witness the following dialogue between Hector's mother and her hero son:

> "Stay till I bring the cup with Bacchus crowned,
> Then with a plenteous draught refresh thy soul
> And draw new spirits from the generous bowl."
> "Far hence be Bacchus gifts!" Hector rejoined.
> "Inflaming wine, pernicious to mankind,
> Unnerves the limbs and dulls the noble mind:
> Let chiefs abstain, and spare the sacred juice
> To sprinkle to the gods—'tis fitter use."

The Modern Slaughter of the Innocents

The murder of John by drunken Herod, and even the slaughter of soldiers in defeats caused by drink is a trifle to the slaughter of native races through the rum which has been shipped from Christian nations to the child races of heathen lands, through the influence of drink, not in the brains of kings, but at the ballot-box.

Herod's massacre in Bethlehem shrinks into insignificance beside the modern destruction of child races by the vices of civilization. Rev. Charles Satchell Morris, of South Africa, said at the World's Missionary Conference in New York: "What an awful many-sided charge the vast crowd of butchered African witnessess will have against the civilized world in the day of judgment! Africa, robbed of her children, rifled of her treasures, lies prostrate before the greed of the Christian nations of the world. A slave-pen and battle-field for ages, Christian nations, instead of binding up her wounds, like the good Samaritan; instead of passing by and leaving her alone like Levite and priest, have come to her with ten thousand shiploads of hell's master-piece of damnation—rum—that is turning her children into human cinders; that has turned the entire West Coast into one long barroom, from which it is estimated that no fewer than two million drunken savages go forth to die of delirium tremens every year. 'Gin, gin!' is the cry all along the West Coast, and, says Joseph Thompson, 'Underneath that cry for gin I seem to hear the reproach: "You see what Christians have made us.' Africa sends to Europe fibre, palm oil, palm kernels, rubber and coffee. Europe sends to Africa powder and balls to slaughter the body and rum to slay the soul."

In 1892, sixteen civilized nations made a treaty to suppress traffic in slaves, opium and spirituous liquors in a newly opened section of Africa. These nations a year ago held another conference on the one subject of restricting the liquor traffic among native races, and made some new but too feeble restrictions by an increase of duties on spirits. Great Britain has led all other nations in forbidding her merchants to sell firearms or firewater in the New Hebrides, and in establishing total prohibition in the Soudan just when the United States was repealing it in Alaska, except for natives, and allowing unlimited sales to natives as well as whites in Hawaii and the Philippiness. Let this quarterly temperance lesson be made practical by the adoption everywhere by teachers and the older classes of the following petition, first presented in a supplemental meeting of the World's Conference of Missions:

"The undersigned authorize the use of their names on a petition that shall ask the sixteen great nations that in 1892 nobly covenanted to suppress traffic in slaves, opium and spirituous liquor in a defined district of Africa, in protection of native races, to extend that new policy of civilization, by separate and united action in such ways as to protect at least the islands and other districts which are inhabited chiefly by similar undeveloped races, especially those that are under Christian government, against intoxicants and opium." (Sign and send to the Reform Bureau, Delaware avenue N. E., Washington, D. C.).

Even if it be lawful, it is not wise to bring partisan politics into the Lord's Day, even in mass meetings out of church hours, and it will hurt more than help to bring it into the pulpit or Sunday School; but we may surely quote not only the warnings of the Bible, but the resolutions of our churches in favor of total abstinence and prohibition, and especially at this time should we urge as a missionary crusade the foregoing petition to all Christian governments.

Temperance and a Judgment to Come

It was before another Herod, Herod Agrippa II., that Paul "reasoned of righteousness, temperance and a judgment to come." So should the successors of Paul the preachers and teachers of to-day, reason with the rulers of our time, not forgetting that the voters are our ultimate rulers and that Christian voters are as responsible to God for the use of their ballots, as kings for the use of their sceptres and swords.

In closing, what nobler contrast can we set against King Herod sacrificing John to keep a promise made in drink, than Abraham Lincoln uttering the following great words on Washington's birthday, 1842, to a Washingtonian Society, in Springfield, Ill.: "Whether or not the world would be vastly benefited by a total and final banishment from it of all intoxicating drinks, seems to me not an open question. Three-fourths of mankind confess the affirmative with their tongues (he does not forget that half the race are under total abstinence religions), and, I believe, all the rest acknowledge it in their hearts. Ought any then, to refuse their aid in doing what the whole good of the country demands?"

MEMORIAL DAY

VER the graves where our soldiers sleep,
The grasses wave, and the mosses creep;
ines grow thick on the lowly mound,
hich to widowed heart is a holy ground.
owers are sweet where the earth was stained hen the blood of the brave on the turf was rained, nd the tender touch of the latest May eaves a wreath for Memorial Day.

othing they heed, who lie so still valley low, and on wind-swept hill f the clash of arms, or here, or there,
r the roll of drums on the stormy air.

ver their battles, their strife is done.
ong ago were their laurels won.
ever again shall the reveille, all them forth, and from sea to sea heir tents are struck, their flags are furled;
hey are done with the work of this trouble-some world.
anful and resolute, 'twas their best hey gave, and well have they earned their rest; lowers for them, each tender May,
nd songs and love, on Memorial Day.

Mother and Child

T makes no difference whether a mother be a poor, hardworking woman who must snatch the time to nurse her baby and crow over it her lullabies from her wash-tub, her scrubbing brush, and her kneading board, or whether she is a lady of ourtly grace and high degree, with a ain of maids to wait upon her, the nother-love is the same. Her baby is er treasure, her pride, her darling. The nother-heart throbs with a pure ecstasy o one else knows or even dreams of, hen the little blessed one lies in her rms, and she feels the weight of the umbering head against their circling rength. Under every sky, in every age, tent and on shipboard, in hut and alace, in town and country, in old Egypt nd medieval England and young America, like, mother-love is the most dominant nd the most sacred passion in the niverse. And when baby rests, it matters ery little to a true woman whether she is ch and famous, or poor and unlettered nd obscure. Heaven itself has stooped pour its divinest elixir into her soul, nd she is blessed among women.

Our Menaced Song-birds

We who love the songsters of wood and rove, and who value the work they do for s, aside from their melody, in protecting uit and crops from maurauding insects, ust rejoice that steps are being taken to ave them from extermination. That little uffian in feathers, the English sparrow, ho is the doughty foe of every decent ird, seems to thrive and multiply in face f the fact that his friends are few and his nemies a host.

In a recent eloquent address in the louse of Representatives at Washington, he Honorable Amos J. Cummings, of ew York, pleaded the cause of the irds, both against the sparrow, and gainst the milliner, and the milliner's atrons, beautiful ladies who wear bon-ets adorned with birds and with the ings and breasts of birds. Mr. Cum-ings declared that thirteen years ago the arks of Washington were vocal in the pring with bobolinks, robins, and other ong-birds; that now one seldom sees a obin, except pursued by the sparrows ho peck him to death, if a solitary one ppears. He added:

"Last summer I spent in the Susque-anna Valley. Twelve years before this had summered in the same spot. The ttle yellow cherry bird was there then in rofusion. The ground chippy darted nder the fences and had its nest in the all grass. The yellow hammer was there undulating from tree to tree. The tapping of the woodpecker was heard in the bass-wood and other trees, and the twitter of the phœbe bird and the plaintive note of the pewit. The killdee and plover flew over the hills, and the king-fisher and the little tip-up were seen upon the shores of the river. Bobwhite made himself heard in the meadows, and dainty woodcock flew out of the dells toward nightfall. All the varieties of birds familiar to us in boyhood days were there, including the catbird, the brown thrasher, and the king-bird. In that same region to-day there is not one of these song-birds, where twelve years ago there were fifty."

Mr. Cummings stated that wild pigeons have been very nearly exterminated in regions where once they were familiar, that in Florida special legislation and heavy fines have been invoked to protect the few remaining species of the beautiful birds which formerly abounded there; that, in short, we are in danger of becoming a birdless country, largely through the "vanity of the female sex."

If it is so, it is high time that we women call a halt, and refuse to be sharers in the wanton destruction of our little brothers of the air. The millinery trade claims that much of the plumage used on hats and bonnets is manufactured from the feathers of domestic fowl, which are thrown aside when the fowl comes to the table in the form of necessary food.

We may at least decide for ourselves, whether or not we will allow the wholesale destruction of useful and beautiful and sweet-voiced birds to go on. Famine may yet visit us, if we suffer this outrage, and we should at once rebuke the propensity of men to kill anything alive wherever they see it. Of this, Rudyard Kipling makes mention in an article on Vermont scenery in the May number of Harper's Magazine, saying in substance that the craze of men and boys to shoot any moving creature in the woods, is rendering New England woods strangely silent. All the blame lies not at women's doors.

WHEN BABY RESTS

Bobby's Pets

"Mamma, may I have a hen and a coop and raise some chickens for my very own?" asked a very eager little voice. "Bobby, you had a canary bird; what became of it?" He hung his head—it had died of his neglect. "I can't let you have pets until you learn to take better care of them. You can't have the chickens." Auntie was at Bobby's house on a visit. "Sarah," she said to Bobby's mamma, when the disconsolate little boy had gone out, "how is he to learn unless he tries?" "Must he try at the expense of poor dumb creatures?" "No; but at our expense; you must feed his pets when he does not. Perhaps, you might deprive him of a meal when he lets a pet go without. But, busy as you are, you must find time to train him to habits of thoughtfulness. It is a lot of trouble, but it is worth while. I will help you while I am here."

"A DEAR HOME DAUGHTER, PURE AND SWEET"

AN OLD SONG

THE girl with her flower-like face, and air
Of spring and sunshine, eyes and hair
And slender grace as she bends a look
On a beautiful old-time music book,
Is herself a poem and picture in one,
For whom might errands of love be done.

For whom might knights, as in days of old,
Ride forth in tourney brave and bold.
A dear home daughter, pure and sweet
From her golden head to her dainty feet;
Around her radiant memories throng,
As she muses over a dear old song.

That song her mother used to sing
In the days of her own sweet blossoming.
Her father knew it long ago;
And loved its tender silvern flow,
And perhaps there are unseen angels who look
At the girl with the quaint old music book.

About Prayer-Meeting

Attendance on prayer-meeting is so largely a matter of habit and of conscience that where it is abandoned, the family should look to itself, and see whether there is a good reason for the falling off on its part. In the home of the church member it should be taken for granted that social engagements will not be made on the prayer-meeting night, the meeting being in the nature of a permanent engagement.

When the topic of the meeting is announced on Sunday from the pulpit, it is a good plan to go to the meeting prepared by reading and thought, perhaps also by home conversation, although we may take no audible part. A certain note of unity should distinguish a prayer-meeting. If the leader has been speaking of Solomon's temple, the next to follow him should not dwell on the fate of Ananias and Sapphira. Cap the remarks of the pastor or leader by comments along the same line. Join heartily in the hymns, and reverentially in the prayers. Take the children with you. If you are young and belong to the Christian Endeavor group, that need not keep you from attending the regular meeting of the older people. They need you for cheer and inspiration, and you need them for counsel and instruction.

Older or younger, sustain your prayer-meeting. Thus the home upbuilds the church.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-all

—ARTIE. Who shall speak first, when lovers have quarrelled? Why the one whose love is the truest of course.

—OLD GENTLEMAN. You are not expected to give your seat in a public conveyance to anyone younger than yourself. You probably will do it, however, for I see that you are a gentleman of the old school.

—CHARLOTTE AND JANNY. Aunt Patience is astonished at you. Not wear cleaned gloves! Why, girls you must be made of money. I wear mine when they have been cleaned nine times, and the other day a lady who was calling on me, remarked that hers had been cleaned thirteen times. Don't be extravagant, Charlotte and Jane.

INDIA'S LIFE-SAVERS

All America Laboring for the Starving People...Soldiers, Business Men, Clergymen, Church-Choirs and Children Helping

THE frightful suffering caused in India by this, the greatest famine of the century, has stirred the national heart to its profoundest depths, as it well may. It is hard for us, who only know what such ordinary hunger as comes of a delayed meal may mean, to realize the horrors of starvation. It is almost impossible in this rich and bountiful land of ours for us to fully understand these words: "Sixty millions perishing for lack of food!" Yet thousands of letters, from the young and old, which pour into this office daily, show that our unselfish, great-hearted people, surrounded by plenty, are seeking to comprehend the situation in India, and to meet as Christians should the responsibility devolving upon them of keeping these wretched ones alive until their next harvest comes. We give extracts from a few, which show the spirit of the many. God himself will reward these and all other helpers of the starving.

JOHN, ANNIE AND ROBERT — MYRTLE AND WINNIE — LEAH AND BEULAH

BERTHA STONE

Here is the story of one little mission's self-denial:

Rose Hill Mission Sunday School, Jeffersonville, Ind., $5, through Chas. H. Allen. "You will be pleased to know how this money was raised, and I am sure, as superintendent of the mission, it did me much good to see our children and teachers enter into the two weeks of 'self-denial,' which closed last Saturday. Many sacrifices had to be made to enable us to send this amount. Perhaps one of the most noble acts on the part of any, was that of two young ladies; every spring, their parents have the fences and trees on the place whitewashed by some man engaged in the business; this time the two sisters took the contract, doing the work as well as any one could, and doing it for Jesus' sake that they might send the amount to the starving people in India."

This struggling Texas Sunday School has done well for itself:

Sterling Creek Sunday School, Texas, $5.15. Mr. O. R. Wilson writes: "Our little Sunday School was organized at the foot of the plains in Sterling County. Three or four neighbors got together; some one suggested a Sunday School; we got literature and started it with a brother, who had never filled such a position before, as superintendent. Now we are having a splendid time and the best of lessons. I told Supt. Price to announce to all present last Sunday the facts about the famine and we had no trouble in raising this money.

FLORENCE AND NELLIE

Corn bought with the money sent in this letter is now half-way to India. The writer is J. M. Campbell, Treas. India Famine Com., Troy, O.:

Enclosed find $736.70 to be applied to purchasing corn for the starving people of India. We send money instead of corn, in order to make certain that it will be in time for the relief ship's sailing.

This friend regards help as an obligation.

Beecher Wheeler, N. Y., $100. I see the famine is still raging. I feel it my duty to send you this for the starving.

Where can warmer or more merciful hearts be found than in the men who wear our uniforms and guard our country? God bless our "Boys in Blue"! Here is a letter, enclosing $7, from Private F. J. Deane, Co. I, 8th United States Infantry, Minn:

I receive THE CHRISTIAN HERALD every week from an aunt of mine. I saw the Famine Relief supplement, so I thought I would try to get the boys to give something, and I succeeded pretty well. Although they did not give much, it was as much as some of them could afford.

Rev. B. P. Pennington, W. Va., writes: This $50 was given by R. L. C. Bradley, W. Va., a Baptist minister and a poor man. I am the pastor of the church to which he belongs, and he put it into my hands, asking me to forward it to the famine sufferers of India. This was given at a great personal sacrifice. God will surely bless the giver and the gift. The cry from India has touched the hearts of many of our people.

Surely the story of this busy little worker will be an inspiration to older people:

Willie Hackett, Oklahoma. I am a little boy seven years old. I felt so sorry for the starving people of India that I have sold vegetables of a morning before going to school until I earned $1. I send it to you. I hope it will save some little boy or girl.

This small pair worked to earn money for India, and then collected from friends.

Regina and John Klushman, California. We are six and seven years old. Mamma told us about the poor people in India, and we feel so sorry that we asked her if we could take our little bank and go out collecting some money for them; and she said yes; and so we did, and now have $2.50. We have been working and earned 50 cents ourselves, which we also send, hoping it will all keep some poor children from starving.

The writers of these letters constitute a noble army of children united in their purpose of working for the Master and his starving ones, though scattered geographically from Canada to Georgia.

Mabel and Melville Hart, twin brother and sister, Iowa., $1 each, write: "Papa was reading in your paper about the little children who are starving in India, and we wish to help some. We feel so sorry for them. We are seven years old. We hope every child in the United States will send something. Our teacher is making up a relief fund and we want to help there also."—Margaret Vermillion, Montana, $5: "I am a little girl eleven years old. I took a subscription list around to a few friends."—Nellie Strickland, Ontario, $3.20: "We are glad we could collect this. My sister, Florence, is twelve years old. She expects to be a missionary. I am ten."—Bertha Stone, Kansas, sends $3.65, "collected for the poor little starving children of India."—Mrs. A. E. Pritchell, Georgia.: "My three little fatherless grandchildren, John, Robert and Annie McLarty, brought me 25 cents each for India. They seem greatly interested in the starving people, and will do what they can to help. God put it into all hearts to help in this noble work of relief."—Mrs. M. H. Moore, Kansas, $1.10: "My daughter, Olive, and her friend, Gertrude Wellinger, got up a little entertainment of songs and recitations in Mr. Moore's shop, charging two cents admission for the benefit of the famine children."—Leah and Beulah Hodgeson, South Dakota, 3.50: "We saw the pictures of the famine sufferers in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and we felt so sorry we wanted to do something; so while one of us stayed at home and helped mamma, the other took the blank sheet you sent with the paper, and in just a few hours got this sum from our kind-hearted neighbors. It must be awful to starve to death. I know it is bad enough to be hungry and just have to wait a little while till dinner is ready."

GERTIE MELLINGER

Newark, N. J., has done a noble part, sending altogether through the treasurer of its India Famine Relief Committee, Mr. Chas. G. Rockwood, President of the National Newark Banking Co., $3,000 to help save the starving, with a promise of further aid. Mr. R. W. Jones, S. S. Superintendent, Neb., sends $60 and tells how it was raised:

OLIVE MOORE

On last Friday I received your circular about the famine. Sunday morning the urgent need of India was laid before the Sabbath School, church congregation and Junior Christian Endeavor Society by their superintendent, pastor and leader respectively, and this was contributed.

Mr. J. A. Boyd, business manager of The Wilkesbarre Record, sends a check for $200, saying, "This makes a total of $700 contributed by our readers to this worthy cause. As you will notice from enclosed list of givers, the amounts are made up of small sums, and many of the contributions come from little children, some of whom have given their entire savings." Ten little ladies, Wanda, Celeste, Katherine, May, Jennie, Clara, Miriam, Edna, Jessie, Laura, and two little gentlemen, Stewart and Ernest, all of Baltimore, Md., send $10, proceeds of an entertainment given by themselves.

A LITTLE OFFERING

ENCLOSED one dollar you will find
To feed the starving humankind
In India's distant land.
I'd gladly give a hundred more,
If blessed with plenteous earthly store,
To help that suffering band.

In lowly country home I bide;
My simple wants are well supplied,
Though riches I have none.
No silks or gems, or dainties fine
Are found within this home of mine.
By toil my bread is won.

This dollar sent means sacrifice;
Though gladly given, 'tis the price
Of needed household store.
May God so soften every heart
That each shall gladly bear a part,
And feed the starving poor.

LIVES THAT LIFT*

Souls Changed in their Nature as Leaven Changes Meal, Influencing Other Souls with whom They Come in Contact

APT and forcible is the illustration Christ uses in his Parable of the Leaven, of the progress of his Church through the centuries. Legislation and wars have never directly served its cause; men have never been driven into the church. The patronage of civil government has hindered, rather than helped, the progress of Christ's kingdom. It has increased and developed in spite of persecution and of the indifference of rulers. As he foresaw, the potent truths of his Gospel would work effectually, if let alone, and would silently and slowly, but surely, permeate the whole world. It was a sublime confidence that he showed in the mighty force of the truth, when he staked the whole future of his kingdom on this unostentatious process. And that confidence has been justified by the result. The leaven has worked through society: it has spread from land to land, until it is to-day the mightiest force known to man. Men form social and political ties: they are connected by their relations in business and art and science; they are grouped by nationality and separated by race and color. But the leaven is not checked in its work by any lines of connection or separation. It goes on ceaselessly, reaching forth into the unleavened mass, and as we watch its progress and notice the hindrances still to be encountered, we rejoice in those pregnant concluding words: "till the whole was leavened."

In the very beginning of the kingdom the process was at work. Andrew found his brother Simon and brought him to Jesus; Philip found Nathanael and invited him to come. So it has ever been. The kingdom has grown by accretions brought by its members, as well as through the power of preaching. Leaven has the power of transforming the meal into its own nature, of making it leaven. It is this power which the Gospel possesses, that has worked the wonders that we see. The man who becomes leavened may have been a bad man, exercising an evil influence on his social circle, but after his conversion his influence undergoes a change. If his conversion is genuine, there is no one coming in contact with him who does not feel the power of the new life. He is spiritually alive and all life must exercise power. The meal is inactive and however large may be the heap of surrounding meal, it is an inert mass and remains so: but once let a handful of the meal be leavened and immediately the operation is started which will eventually permeate the whole mass. So well-established is this law that there is reason to suspect the genuineness of the change that has no effect on the people in contact with the soul that professes to have been converted. It is like a tree that bears neither leaves nor fruit. We cannot believe that it is alive. By the very law of its being, leaven leavens the surrounding meal: if the meal is not leavened, we must conclude that it has never been in contact with leaven. The soul that the power of Christ has touched is changed in its nature; it has the power of the creative Spirit, in some degree small as it may be, and it affects others.

Several considerations must be briefly entertained in relation to this view of the Parable. It is objected that in the Bible leaven invariably represents evil. But Christ so plainly represents leaven as a symbol of the kingdom that his parable must constitute an exception to the rule. It was so suitable a symbol that Christ ignored its evil association. A second objection to this view is that it represents the world as continually improving while in the opinion of many it is continually growing worse. But is such an opinion justified by the facts? We see the principles of the kingdom gradually gaining power. Who that can look back over half a century will deny that there is more brotherhood, more mercy and compassion, more sympathy with the suffering, more recognition of Christian principle as the law which ought to govern the conduct of men and nations, than there were fifty years ago? Take our own country for example. Could a notorious libertine, gambler, or infidel be elected to the Presidency as easily as he could fifty years ago? Would not a man of bad moral life be defeated if he were nominated even if he were politically acceptable? When was there a time when the effort was more strenuously made to mitigate the horrors of war, to relieve the anguish of the sufferers by earthquake, or flood, or tornado, or famine? The world is becoming more like Christ, in spite of the prevalence of evil. The leaven is working and in process of time the whole will be leavened.

Boy Crusaders in the Carolina

A SUCCESSFUL work for the welfare of boys is reported from Inoir, N. C. Its inauguration was due to Mr. J. M. Moore, who is connected with the Carolina & Northwestern Railway Company. On Nov. 27, 1898, Mr. Moore organized the "Boy Crusaders" with six boys. The organization is still flourishing, and has a membership of sixty-five. The boys have three rooms, one for an assembly room, with a seating capacity of one hundred and fifty, which is used for Sunday meetings, gymnasium class, initiation of Crusader Knights, etc. Another room, known as the Outer Court is used for reading and games; the third room is the Inner Court, used for educational purposes. The rooms are open three nights in the week and on Sunday afternoon. The work was looked on by many good citizens in the start with something akin to disfavor. It is now pronounced by all a good thing, a success and a fixture in the town.

Mr. Moore has since moved to Chester, S. C., and will be likely to introduce the good work there. Already the Lante, the bi-weekly paper of the town has called public attention to the movement by publishing the plans and objects of the movement. These are simple and commend themselves to those who know what boys are and what it is pre-eminently desirable they should be. There are three divisions in the order, Boy Crusaders, Crusaders and the Grand Council. To become a member, a boy must promise to earnestly endeavor to observe the Golden Rule, to abstain from all intoxicating drinks, the use of tobacco, including cigarettes, and the use of profanity; to attend all Sunday meetings of the organization, and induce others to become members. The guide of the order is the Bible, and the colors are black, red and white. Anybody and everybody's boy is eligible for membership, as there is not the slightest taint of caste or class about the order.

Saving the Lost—Uplifting the Fallen

A Great Rescue Work in Cincinnati—The Beatty Mission—A Work of Faith—Anniversary Love-Feast

STEEPED IN SIN

TRANSFORMED IN CHRIST

NINE years ago Sherrard Beatty and his wife determined to consecrate their lives to rescue work in Cincinnati. The husband had been saved from the degrading clutches of drink by the power of Christ, and when his own redemption was accomplished, he could not rest till he had shared the joys of the new life with others who had been like himself, victims of sin.

Without a dollar of capital to start with, no fund to draw on but unshaken faith in the promises of God, this devoted couple began by holding meetings in the streets. They had no home, no mission house, nothing but trust and prayer. Help came. Their first mission was a room in a house which had long been a gambling den, in a disreputable quarter of Fifth street. By degrees the influence spread, the work grew, donations increased, and, inside of a few years, they moved three times to larger quarters, always pitched on the devil's chosen battle-ground, right on the firing line, where they could come daily and hourly into literal touch with the strongly intrenched sin and its desperate cohorts.

George street, for half a century the allotted reservation of moral lepers in this city, is lined for squares with houses of sin. Right in the centre of this plague-spot—a Christian breakwater against the seething tide of evil—stands the new Beatty Mission, —a very haven of rest for shipwrecked souls. It is a substantial brick structure, two stories high, about forty feet wide by nearly a hundred deep.

The ground floor is a mission room capable of seating five hundred people. On the upper floor are the apartments of Mr. Beatty and his wife, and ten rooms used as a refuge for penitent women.

"I had not a penny to start with," said Mr. Beatty, "and I never take up a collection. This house and its furnishings have come in answer to prayer. Since this Rescue Mission for Erring Women was founded, about 1894, we have sheltered some sixteen hundred girls, of whom seven hundred have been returned — new creatures in Christ—to parents and friends, and occupation has been found for over three hundred."

Mr. Beatty handed the writer two photographs. "Here is one of our girls," said he. "She rang the mission door here late one bitter night in winter a few years ago. I never saw such a tattered and pitiable wreck of womanhood. Only seventeen, she looked a veteran in dissipation, and had been run out of several towns as a hopeless case. Coming to Cincinnati, a friend sent her to us. She gave a wild, incredulous look when I spoke of God's wonderful love to lost sinners. 'I don't see what there is in me to love,' said she, bursting into tears. Her reformation began from that night. To-day she is back among her own people, a fine Christian woman, helping others. One of these two pictures shows her as she came to us; the other as she is. The change is one of God's miracles."

Across the street from the Mission, and under the same auspices, is a large house rented as a home for men.

Each morning Mr. Beatty visits the Police Court to make the acquaintance of the poor wretches brought there, and to ask the judge to turn over to Mrs. Beatty's care girls under arrest for the first time. Then there are visits to the workhouse, House of Detention and systematic calls at disreputable houses, where they tell fallen women of the love of Jesus, offering them a home if they ever want to lead better lives.

There are many daily calls at the Mission from distracted parents and relatives of girls who have gone astray, and whose whereabouts cannot be traced.

THE BEATTY MISSION

MR. AND MRS. SHERRARD BEATTY

The Mission work includes ten regular meetings each week in the Mission Hall; rescue Gospel meetings every night, and open air and street work in summer. No creed is known but "Jesus only." Last year over 100,000 persons attended the Rescue Mission. Over 3,000 homeless men, and many homeless and hopeless women were sheltered and fed, and led in better paths. All the helpers are rescued men and women, with no salaries.

A great local love-feast was planned for Mr. Beatty's anniversary on May 11, when all the Mission workers in Cincinnati would gather to bless his work. Two well-known workers from New York were present: S. H. Hadley, Superintendent of the famous Water Street, or Jerry McAuley Mission, and John H. Wyburn, for nearly four years in charge of the equally noted Bowery Mission, still sustained by the benevolence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Mr. Wyburn has been in Cincinnati for some months past.

The Lord is Thy Healer

THE Lord is thy Healer:
He hath spoken liberty,
He hath bound the broken-hearted,
He hath made the captive free.

The Lord is thy Healer:
He hath ever been the same;
He hath shown his great compassion—
Let us praise his holy name.

The Lord is thy Healer:
He "remembers we are dust";
He hath healing, he hath pardon
For the souls that fully trust.

The Lord is thy Healer:
Let thy doubting all be o'er;
Trust him with a faith unshaken;
Take his healing, sin no more.

CHORUS:
The Lord is thy Healer,
In his mercy now confide;
The Lord is thy Healer,
In his promises abide;
The Lord is thy Healer:
He will heal, who forgave;
His arm is not shortened—
He will save, he will save!

Calling the Wanderers In

Mrs. Bird, "the Mother of the Bowery Boys," Writes of the Bowery Mission's Soul-saving Work . . .

WITH its door ever open as a gateway to heaven, the Bowery Mission shelters under its wing thousands of the bravest and noblest wanderers from all the nations of the world. The boy leaves home, friends, and all he holds dear to see "something of life," and the Bowery is the great magnet that attracts, for there he can lose himself. Cut loose from every restraining influence, he joins the motley crowd which with unceasing tramp, day and night, year in and year out, surges past our Mission. Often the young wanderer is suddenly arrested by the sound of music. Hundreds of men within our walls are singing, and their voices repeat the words of some familiar hymn. He goes in, led never touched opium since, for he gave his heart to God and attends our meetings regularly.

MRS. SARAH J. BIRD

Among the requests for prayer sent up to me, I found those words, "Pray for me. I am not worthy, but I have a mother." As I was kneeling by the side of a broken-hearted penitent, his only cry to God was, "Save me, oh save me, for my mother's sake!" As I was talking to a crowd of rough fellows in a lodging house one day, one of the men said, "Won't you sing the song, 'Jesus, Lover of My Soul?' for my mother always sung that when anything troubled her." Memories of home soften the most hardened hearts. The little prayers taught the child before tucking him into his bed are never forgotten. A big strong man found that his life depended upon his yielding to a terrible operation. As the surgeons gathered about him in the hospital, the nurse said he commenced the only prayer he knew, "Now I lay me down to sleep," then lost consciousness, but as soon as the ether

A "PRAYER SERVICE" IN THE KITCHEN OF THE BOWERY MISSION

by curiosity; he is tired and lonely in this world of sin without, and thinks he will sit down and rest a moment. The hush of prayer and the earnest faces he sees touch a chord which makes him think of home. He is surprised by the hearty grasp of a friendly hand. Our Superintendent puts his strong arm about him and urges him to accept our shelter from the fierce temptations raging without. Here he finds a little suggestion of family life, a cordial brotherhood. We have a custom of frequently taking a cup of coffee together, not as a charity, but more as a little love-feast, that we may join hearts and hands more closely, and better learn how to bear one another's burdens.

Last Sunday, a manly face attracted me; he was eagerly listening to the story of a wayward life. Soon he arose, and said, "I left my home, 3,000 miles away, two years ago. I have never written to my mother since I have nothing good to say of myself. Last week news came to me that my mother was dead." And overcome with deep feeling he asked us to pray that God would forgive him. One night, as I was entering the Mission, a young man, waiting for me, passed me a letter from his mother, saying, "She loves me still, although I am living in an opium den. I only come here for my mail." I took him in to the Gospel service, and seated him close by my side, and he has passed away he took up the words of the prayer just where he had left off. He told me when I saw him afterward, that if he could afford it he would put this little prayer over every bed in that hospital.

One Sunday morning I was led to speak to a stranger near me. This was his story: While a student at Cambridge University, his father died. Money came to him, and he ran away from college "to go around the world." At the end of three years he found himself sitting in the Bowery Mission, homeless and starving. We sent tidings to his mother, and soon there came a cablegram providing money for his return, with these words, "Forgiven; come home." He left us by next steamer, and to-day is a Christian merchant in his native town. His mother told me by letter that the very Sunday her boy was saved in the Bowery Mission she was sitting in her pew in church; and as her pastor spoke of the power of prayer, her heart was full of bitter unbelief, for she had prayed for three years for her prodigal son, and still he wandered she knew not where. But our God was faithful to answer her prayer, although her boy was at that moment thousands of miles away.

Oh, dear Bowery Mission! Could I put upon paper the terrible confessions I have heard, or the agonizing cry of the penitent, every mother in our land would beseech God to send us means to carry on the Christian war against those powers of evil which are so rampant here in this City of Destruction.

Taking the Census

THE twelfth census of the United States will be taken during the month of June. The work of preparation for the census has been prodigious and the tabulating of the results will be many times as serious. The details to be gathered are numerous: so much so, that many persons will doubtless feel aggrieved over the number of inquiries put to them. But the faithful answers to these many questions are absolutely indispensable if the census returns are to be of any value. The questions should not be resented nor should the enumerator be regarded as officious when he asks names and ages and nationality, occupation and other particulars of the residents in any house. A great many agricultural details and details of manufacturing concerns will be sought, including the values of machinery, utensils, and equipment of all kinds as well as products. These must be furnished, a serious penalty being incurred for refusal to answer. All particulars furnished the enumerator he is bound to keep secret. The law positively forbids his imparting any facts reported to him to any person whatsoever, save the official authorized to receive the same. One need not fear that any facts reported will be furnished to the assessor, for instance. The seal of secrecy is upon all persons engaged, no matter how, directly or indirectly, in the census taking.

Refusal to admit a census enumerator to one's house or office, or upon the farm is illegal, but enumerators are expected to observe all possible courtesy and tact, and where they do so they are hardly likely to arouse opposition. The enumerator will wear a badge and carry his official commission with him, and will be well able to convince most householders that he is what he represents himself to be. Already sneak thieves wearing some sort of a badge have sought by its use to gain admission to houses in order to practice their nefarious vocation. Any householder, or person who in the householder's absence, may answer the enumerator's call, is justified in seeking assurance that the caller is not an impostor.

When the work is over the enumerators will no doubt have some lively memories of aggravating householders as well as of courtesies received from others, and of many mirth-provoking experiences in the performance of their duties. Meanwhile, the results of their labors will be waited for patiently by all intelligent Americans, the more so by those who appreciate the great value of such statistics as the census will produce. It is by such figures that we are enabled to see what progress we are making as a people, and to compare our advance with that of other nations. Hence the common interest in correct statistics, and the importance on the part of all called upon to answer the census enumerators' inquiries of giving full information.

SPRING DAYS AT MONT-LAWN

HOUSEMOTHER AND TEACHERS RECEIVING MANY LETTERS FROM LITTLE WAIFS ANTICIPATING AN OUTING THERE

OUR MAIN BUILDING AT MONT-LAWN

Three cheers for the Home on the Hudson!
Three cheers for the Home on the Hill!
Three cheers for the kind friends who send us
We give with a hearty good-will!

—Our Fresh-Air Children's Song.

MONT-LAWN is being made ready for its little guests. The news has gone abroad in the tenements, and there is great joy among the children of the poor. The recent spell of hot weather, when the mercury ran higher probably than ever before at the same season, had the effect of intensifying interest on the part of tenement mothers and their little ones in the question of some reprieve from the awful heat of sweltering courts and alleys in torrid days to come. It has been a delight on the part of all engaged in this good work to assure the anxious poor that the tenement children will be as faithfully remembered in this as in past seasons.

Housemother Collins is already at the Home, seeing to its thorough renovation. From top to bottom, it is being made fresh, clean and sweet for the children, the large majority of whom never know what a fresh, clean, sweet home or a pure home life is except when at Mont-Lawn. The ancient papering which has done duty for so many years, is coming down, and walls are being treated to a clean and wholesome dress of whitewash. The good old markee tent, under which our little ones have breakfasted, supped and dined for summer after summer, and which has weathered many a storm and survived many a rip and tear, is of necessity being replaced by a new one. The platform over which it stood has been so worn by the thousands of childish feet that have tramped merrily over it at mealtimes must go, too, and another must need be built.

"There is," said the housemother, "a feeling almost of regret in tearing down the old plastering, old paper, old boards and old tent that have done such good service. They seem to say by their very outworn condition, 'Ah, we know how many dear children have been here.' But this pulling off the old and putting on the new makes me think of the resurrection: I feel that we are going to do here a better work than ever for God. Please tell the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the kind friends who have co-operated so faithfully and so long with us in helping the children of the poor, that we want them to make the Home the subject of special prayer this summer." Particular pains will be taken to make the chapel services especially attractive; the children have been on the hearts of Housemother and teachers all winter; they have studied free-hand drawing in the intervals of labor so that they might illustrate the Sunday School lessons on the blackboard, and one young teacher has been making a special study of songs for the children.

We feel encouraged to persevere in this work; God has wonderfully blessed it. "Is any impression for good that can be made in ten days in any degree lasting?" is sometimes asked by those who are interested in the moral and spiritual as well as physical benefits wrought. Time is answering in some measure this question, to which only eternity can make full reply. The moral tone of whole families and communities has been changed for the better through the influence of a single child, or a company of children who have been taken from them for vacations at Mont-Lawn. Some of the boys and girls who came to us seven years ago, little half-heathen tots, are now studying for the missionary field. A batch of letters has been handed in at this office by our housemother, who asked that great care be taken of them, saying, "They are priceless treasures to the teachers who have received them during the winter from children in her charge at Mont-Lawn last summer." Simple scrawls were they, telling of home troubles, of success or failures at school, or in little industries; telling, too, of moral and spiritual struggle, and showing all through childish faith and love. Poor little men and women! Many of them have so much in their home (or homeless) lives to kill hope and faith, that its resurrection, or preservation, seems a miracle; but with God's help, all things are possible.

Dec. 27, 1899.—My Dearest Friend. I am very unhappy since I came home, but I ask the Lord to forgive me, and I know he will, too. I work at three dollars a week. I cannot forget you, no, never. I never forget you in my prayer. I am so homesick. Last night I cried very badly. I know the Lord will help me. Your dear friend, WILLIAM.

Jan. 9, 1900.—My Dearest Friend. O, how I wish I was up there! Because Papa said I must get out of the house. He said if I do not get out in a week, he would put me out altogether. I was very sick in bed for two weeks and four days. I just able to get around a little bit. I very unhappy, indeed, at home. I miss you very much indeed. I asked the Lord to forgive me, and so will you. I cried very badly last night in wishing I was up there. I am sure you are very dear to me, indeed. You are my dear friend. I love you. I mus hurry with my letter because the headache is coming on again. I wish I was by you. I cried very badly last night in wishing I was up there. If I could see you once more, you dear friend. May God open way we may meet again. Your child, WILLIAM.

Be strong in the Lord (in great letters).

Jan.—Mamma did not look for any place yet. I wish I was up there. Day before yesterday I walked from One Hundred and Forty-eighth Street to Forty-second Street, looking for work an didn't get any at all, and I was very tired that night. I walked from eleven in the morning till five o'clock in the evening. I miss Nyack very much. Mamma has not been feeling well.

Your dear friend, WILLIAM.

Be strong in the Lord (capitalized).

Are you not glad, friends of children, that this child is finding help, and that my brother away. Pippi says he like to stay in the asylum because they are good to him. He wants to stay till June and he can go to Nyack. You will help Pippi to be a good boy.

Joseph Denelfo enclosed a specimen of his work upon which he had spent infinite pains—all he had to offer, poor little man!—and enlarged upon his anxiety to go to Mont-Lawn this summer. He also leads in a joint letter from a number of Elm street tots, who say:

We wish summer will be here soon, so as we could have a good time and some of the Nyack fresh air. Some of us is always sick. Our Sunday School teacher says we are all expected to be there this summer. With lots of love, Joseph, Fredie, Frank, Louis and others. P. S.—Frank and Fredie takes me for a bookkeeper and a letter-writer, because I am going to be one.

One little scrawl says just this: "God be with you till we meet again." Hundreds of letters are being received by every one connected with the work containing just the eloquent plea: "May we come to the country this summer?"

Kind letters of inquiry are received at this office from friends of children all over the Union, asking how they may help in this good work. Three dollars will send a waif to the Home for ten days, this small sum covering cost of transportation, food, shelter, clothing, medical and caretakers' attention; $6 will send two; $9 three; $12 four; $15 five; and for $35 twelve little ones can be made happy. To bands of King's Daughters, Dorcas and other sewing societies, we may mention the fact that the children often come to us pitiably ragged. When packages of garments are opened for distribution they should see the little expectant faces grow bright when pretty pink or blue dresses or blouses are revealed and distributed; and there is unbounded joy when dingy dark rags and tatters are replaced by these clean, gay garments. While, child-like, they love bright colors they are not fastidious. Oh, no! they will be thankful, kind mother, for garments your children have outgrown. Our children are from four to twelve years of age. Clothing should be sent prepaid, to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, Nyack, N. Y.; contributions of money to this office. Prompt acknowledgments will be made in these columns.

O, wretched Cain!
"Where is thy brother?"
The Lord will ask again;
Will ask thee to explain,
O, modern Cain!
"Where is thy brother?"

Where is thy brother
To whom comes whiskey's bane,
With all its wretched train
Of griefs and pain?
Where is thy brother:
The one whom you disdain?
I beg of thee explain,
Thou modern Cain,
Where is thy brother?

Where is thy brother
Who struggles, but in vain

DECORATION DAY

...See Illustration on First Page...

WE are indebted to our Southern friends for the beautiful custom of devoting one day in each year to strewing with flowers the graves of our soldier dead. Before the close of the Civil War the women of the South began the practice, and have kept it up ever since; naming the day "Memorial Day." The Southerners observe April 27, of each year, for placing their loving memorial of fragrant and beautiful blossoms on the tombs of their heroes.

A similar observance was inaugurated in various parts of the North, shortly after it began in the South. The custom speedily found favor, and on May 5, 1868, General John A. Logan, then Commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, issued an order fixing May 30, of that year, for the appropriate decoration of the graves of our Northern soldiers. There has been no Federal legislation appointing such a day, but many States have very properly made it a legal holiday. Since the Spanish-American War, renewed interest has been aroused in the beautiful custom, as, alas! there have been many new graves to adorn. As the practice shows a nation's gratitude, so well earned, and is calculated to incite patriotism, the occasion is worthy of an honored place on our calendar of sacred days. North and South have not infrequently united in decorating the graves of those who, when alive, were found in opposing ranks. Over the graves of the blue and gray, their living comrades, now knowing only one flag, unite in their tribute to their common dead, and pray the same prayer for the life and prosperity of our country.

Fair be the blossoms which, on our Memorial Day,
With grateful memories and loyal hearts we lay
Upon the silent graves alike of blue and gray,
And tombs of those who, later, flung their lives away
For liberty's sweet sake.

"The Lady of the Caskets"

MANY comments have been made by the secular press on the story of the lady who has just died, and who had won for herself the above title. She was buried in a casket, costing $50,000, beside her husband reposing in one of like value. The mausoleum, which constitutes their last resting-place, cost $500,000. It has walls five feet thick, and massive gates with double locks as security against grave robbers; knockers on the doors are of pure gold and worth a fortune in themselves. On the coffins are gold medallions valued at $500 each. Thirteen years ago, while her husband, Dr. Hiller, was alive she had these caskets made. She sent all over the world for fine woods; planks from the big redwoods of California, for which she had paid $1,000, were cast aside; wood from the cedars of Lebanon, costing $1,500, was discarded after purchase; rare teakwood and cedar shared the same fate. "At last," as she related by herself, "I sent to the far South, and, after infinite pains, procured mahogany planks enough to build the sarcophagi and the caskets." She designed her grave clothes; her outer robe of corded silk, adorned with 5,000 English daisies embroidered by skilled artists of France, garnished with 500 yards of hand-made lace, fastened with 500 silver hooks made for the purpose, cost $20,000, and the garments beneath, $5,000.

This poor rich woman's morbid passion for splendor in death, according to her own account, came about thus: "We lived frugally; first our ambition was to own a million dollars; when we had that safe, two, three, four and five millions led us on. Everything seemed to come our way; all we touched turned to gold. But our little ones—we had twenty-three, fourteen of them twins—pined away and died in early life. Not one lived to give joy to my heart, sunshine to my home. Seeing we were not likely to have offspring to perpetuate our name and fortune, I spoke to my husband about being preserved in costly caskets under a lasting mausoleum. He told me to carry out any idea I might have." Poor childless woman! her monument is but a perishable memorial after all; with all its magnificence it has no place in the hearts of men. Yet she might have built herself a memorial that would have enshrined her name in the loving thoughts of thousands. A hospital where the sick might be healed, a mission where the weak and sinful might be saved, a church where God would be worshiped; or, best of all, for the bereaved mother a home where little friendless children of the poor might find love and Christian keeping.

The Oldest Postmaster

ROSWELL BEARDSLEY, of North Lansing, N. Y., is the oldest postmaster in the service of the United States government. He was appointed in 1828, and has faithfully performed his duties ever since. A friend (Mr. C. C. Johnson) has forwarded to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the photograph of Mr. Beardsley, which appears in this column.

ROSWELL BEARDSLEY, P.M.

The Post Office Department recently reorganized its rural delivery system and it is now greatly improved. New rural delivery routes have been organized and postmen now deliver mails every day at every farm house all over the new district.

Florence Nightingale's Birthday

THE eightieth anniversary of this noble lady's birth was recently celebrated. Miss Nightingale has lived for many years past in a quiet house in West London. Every room is filled with tokens of esteem showered on her by governments and individuals of the Old and New Worlds. Her health has never been good since her return from her famous work in the Crimean war, but she has never ceased altogether from humanitarian labor. For many years she personally superintended the Florence Nightingale School for Nurses in London. This school, as the public is aware, was established by Miss Nightingale with the fund of $250,000, which the women of England raised as a gift to their modest little countrywoman, who, after saving the lives of so many sick and wounded soldiers, had traveled from the Bosphorus to England to avoid the public notice that she otherwise would have attracted. To this fund every soldier in the army eagerly contributed a day's pay. Miss Nightingale's latest work consists of two books on nursing. Her advice, sought by the war departments of all countries, has been the basis of modern hospital and ambulance work in war. Though the daughter of an Englishman, she was born in Florence, Italy, and was named for that city.

An India Famine "Spot" Box

AN offering for the India Famine Relief fund from a Brooklyn home suggests a method of raising small funds that could easily be adopted in many another home. In the home referred to a mite box is kept upon the dining-room table, into which a cent is dropped for any spot that appears on the table cloth during meal time. A "tip over" of tea, coffee, milk, etc., involves a contribution of five times that amount to the box. The plan was suggested by two little girls in the family, who on coming out of church one Sunday, picked up a piece of missionary literature that told forcibly the story of the famine. Since then a sharp lookout has been kept for "missionary spots." The little fund has been augmented in other ways. The various members of the household offered their services in various directions, and patronage was solicited. Buttons were sewn on garments for a cent apiece, stockings were mended for one cent upward, gloves and ribbons cleaned, ladies' boots polished, bicycle tires inflated, etc. A generous supply of postage stamps and postals was laid in, to be sold to any member of the household willing to deposit an extra cent in the missionary box, for the convenience of making the purchase without the necessity of going to the drug store to do so. Little by little the box grows heavy. It is to be opened weekly, and great or small the contents will go to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD India Famine Relief fund.

Surely other homes will adopt this simple plan, especially when so small a sum as two cents will keep a man alive for a day, and perhaps by prolonging a life, make it possible for one more soul to hear the glad news of Eternal Life.

Church Choirs Helping India

SOME time ago a movement was started in Auburn, N. Y., by Secretary Chas. G. Adams, of the Auburn Business Men's Association, with the object of inducing church choirs throughout the country to aid the India relief movement. How the movement has succeeded in Auburn is told in the following letter:

Editor "Christian Herald."

I have endeavored to get you to bring to the attention of the different choirs in the different cities the plan of giving choir concerts for the India Relief Fund. We started one in the Central Church here; our receipts were $142. Three others have been given: the Baptist Church, receipts $67; Disciples (a small church), $36; the Second Presbyterian, $92, making over $300 raised by choir concerts alone, with practically no expense and requiring but little effort. The churches were all packed.

Churches which could not give concerts endorsed the scheme, and took up collections and were stirred to do this by the concerts in other churches, so the $300 represents one part of what Auburn churches have contributed. I have tried to bring this matter before the choirs in other cities. I do not know whether other places have taken up the matter or not. I cannot reach them personally, but suggest if you favor the scheme that you urge it in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

There are some 250 cities in the United States. If they will do on an average as well as Auburn, over $75,000 can be raised this way. No more can be done in this line in Auburn—we have done our duty. I hope you will see your way clear to advocate it that it may start the good work in other cities.

CHAS. G. ADAMS.

"ENTER INTO THY CLOSET"

Matt. 6: 6.

I HAVE a viewless, cloistered room
Within me, open every day,
Where, though my feet may join the throng,
My soul may enter in and pray.

No human step, approaching, breaks
The blessed stillness of the place;
No shadow steals across the light
That falls from my Redeemer's face.

When I have banished wayward thoughts
Of sinful works the fruitful seed,
When folly wins my ear no more,
The closet door is shut indeed.

To be relieved of a disease that has for a decade infected the system and to feel relief from agonizing pain that has been almost constant during this long period of time, is an event in a man's life, and it is but natural that he should be enthusiastic in his praise of the remedy that brought about these happy results.

Mr. Jeremiah Sand, Justice of the Peace at Turin, Lewis Co., N. Y., joyously tells of his remarkable release from Rheumatism by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. He says:

"I was afflicted with rheumatism for nearly ten years and had about given up hope of ever being relieved. For four years I was under the care of a physician, and during my entire sickness employed four different doctors. The pains in my arms and shoulders were so severe as to nearly drive me crazy. Beside these there was a sharp, darting pain in the region of the heart which always left me prostrated.

"One day I read an advertisement in a newspaper which stated that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People would relieve rheumatism, and I at once began taking the pills. I found relief from my pains before I finished the first box. I continued taking the pills for over a year when I was entirely free from rheumatism, and have been so ever since. I have great faith in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I recommended them to Mrs. Ivan R. Budd, who was suffering from nervous dyspepsia and she was entirely relieved by their use.

Peace Lilies

A Memorial Day Story..

PAT FORD and Billy Bradley were fast friends. Pat's full name was Patrick Henry Culpepper Ford, and his grandmother always called him Patrick Henry. But his new schoolmates at once cut it down to "Pat."

Patrick Henry and his grandmother, hailing from the South, had but lately come to Beechdale, and as they seemed to be in comfortable circumstances, people wondered why they chose the lonesome little cottage by the old graveyard when there were two or three nice houses in the village to let.

But by and by it was discovered that Patrick Henry's grandfather was buried in the graveyard; and straightway Billy's grandfather, old Captain Bradley, and two or three others of the Grand Army veterans began to hark back to the war, and at last they ciphered it out that the old lady's husband was Robert Ford, a southern captain who was brought to Beechdale from Camp Douglas for burial. Captain Bradley himself was on duty in Camp Douglas at the time, and he recalled the fact that he wrote a letter for the poor fellow a few days before his death, to his wife down in Memphis, begging her to come to him. He was so low then that the doctor said it would do no good; but she reached the camp the night before he died, bringing with her a bright little chap about eight years old; and when she begged leave to bury her husband in some quiet country graveyard, the Captain told her of Beechdale, his own home, a small village twenty miles away from the city, with a "burying ground" where the wild flowers covered the graves and the birds sang in the forest trees.

"I came on with her myself," said the Captain, "and Parson Brown being away, I got old Elder Simmons to go with us to the grave to say a prayer. To think of it's being over thirty years ago! I don't know now as she'll recollect me, but I guess we'll have to go and see her, Phebe." Phebe was Billy's mother.

But Patrick Henry and Billy waited for no calls to be exchanged. They fell in love with each other the very first day that the little Southerner appeared in school, and though that was nearly eight months ago, they had not yet had a falling out.

Patrick Henry's mother was dead, and his father—the little lad that came from Memphis to Camp Douglas when Captain Ford was dying—was connected with an enterprise that made it necessary for him to spend most of his time in South America. And when he wrote that he would probably have to stay there two years more, at the least, Patrick Henry's grandmother decided to leave her Southern home and move to Beechdale. Living was cheaper at the North, and there was no school for Patrick Henry within walking distance of the old plantation. Besides, she had a longing to be near that lonely grave in the little Northern burying ground.

Billy felt sorry for Pat. Any boy without a mother, he said to himself, was to be pitied. Grandmothers were very nice—he had two of his own—but they weren't quite the same as one's real mother.

"I'm going to give you half my lilies to put on your grandpa's grave," he had said to Pat, early in the spring. "They're coming up thick as hops, and they'll all be out by Decoration Day."

The bed of lilies of the valley was Billy's own property, and he kept a close watch on it from the time the first green leaf unrolled until the slender stems were hung with silvery bells; and now Patrick Henry was equally interested in it. Billy's promise to share with him having given him something like a feeling of partnership.

"Grandma 'll be right glad of 'em," he told Billy, "for we haven't any flowers started yet." And they decided to keep it a secret and surprise her with them on Decoration Day."

"And we'll put flags on, too," said Patrick Henry, eagerly, "same as we did down in Memphis. Grandma's got one she brought on purpose."

"Course, we always put flags on," said Billy. "It wouldn't be 'Decoration' without the flags."

Billy's Grandfather Carter was buried in the lot adjoining Grandma Ford's, and this gave the boys a chance to do a good deal of talking while raking up the dead leaves and resodding the mounds; and as they were too much absorbed in what they were doing to remember that the two soldiers sleeping so quietly had not fought under the same colors, everything for the time went smoothly.

But on Memorial Day there was a strange happening. They had spent most of the morning in gathering lilies and arranging them, with Mrs. Bradley's help; and then, after each had devoured a generous square of gingerbread, Patrick Henry ran home to his dinner, with the understanding that he was to meet Billy in the graveyard at one o'clock, sharp.

"Guess I'll take an extra flag along," said Billy to his mother, "for fear Patsy might forget his." And when on reaching the cemetery with the basket of lilies and roll of bunting he found that Patrick Henry was not there, he thought that it would do no harm to put the flag on Captain Ford's grave without waiting for him; they would divide the lilies when he came, and he had just finished settling the standard to his satisfaction when he saw Patrick Henry and his grandmother coming up the walk. The old lady carried a small roll that looked like a flag.

"They'll be surprised to find that there's one there already," he said to himself, as he hurried to the next lot to put one on his Grandfather Carter's grave.

But when a moment later he turned to join them, he was amazed to see Patrick Henry angrily pulling up the little banner, while the grandmother, looking flushed and hurt, was trying with her trembling hands to put in its place—Billy had to stare hard to make sure that he was right—a faded Confederate flag.

"That isn't our flag," cried Patrick Henry defiantly. "My grandfather died for the Confederacy, and he shall have his own flag over him!" and hurling the Stars and Stripes to the ground, he faced Billy with flashing eyes.

Billy was at once on his mettle. Patsy had insulted "Old Glory," and the next minute the fiery young patriots were rolling together on the grass in a mad tussle.

"Stop, boys—stop!" entreated the delicate little old lady. "It isn't worth while to fight about it now." But the battle was on, and neither boy was willing to yield an inch. Not even the sound of martial music and the long procession marching to the beat of the drum could bring them to their senses. But suddenly, while the fray was at its hottest, a tall, dark-bearded man stepped between them.

"Robert, Robert," cried the grandmother, joyfully.

"It's my father" shouted Patrick Henry. But Billy only dug his fists the deeper into Patrick Henry's ribs.

"What's all this?" asked the tall man, releasing grandmother Ford, whom he had caught up in his arms; and it was only by main force that he succeeded in separating the angry champions.

"He's insulted the flag," cried Billy.

"'Twasn't our flag," protested Patrick Henry. "'Twasn't the flag my grandfather fought and died for."

"See here, Pat, my boy," said the newcomer, drawing Patrick Henry to his side and taking the insulted flag from Billy, who had picked it up and was trying to shake off the dirt that clung to it; "you don't know what you are doing. Except for this flag, I should no doubt be to-day a prisoner." And then he went on to say that, owing to the war between Spain and Cuba, his business enterprise had become blocked for the present, and finding that he could accomplish nothing by remaining, he had lost no time in starting for home. It was a trading vessel from Brazil bound for New York on which he had taken passage, and there chanced to be on board several Cubans who wished to be landed at Havana. But before they could come to anchor they were overhauled by a Spanish warship, and the American flag was all that saved them.

"It is like a mother's protecting arm around her children, that Star-Spangled banner, Pat," he said, with his hand on the boy's shoulder. "It means liberty and safety for all beneath its folds, and if your grandfather were living to-day I am sure he would bid you honor it. Thank God for the Stars and Stripes!" And reverently touching his lips to the little flag, he placed it on his father's grave.

By that time the procession, marshaled by Captain Bradley, had reached the entrance, and Billy, seizing the basket of lilies, began putting wreaths and garlands on the Confederate soldier's grave.

"You dear boy!" cried Grandmother Ford, quite unprepared for such courtesy, especially after so fierce a passage at arms.

"Oh, half of 'em are Patsy's, anyway—if he'll have 'em, now we've quarreled," faltered Billy.

"Billy!" cried Patrick Henry, plumping down on his knees and getting an arm around his friend, "course I'll have 'em. You're mighty good to give 'em to me, after my being so mean. And Billy," he whispered, snuggling closer, "s'pose we bury that other flag, and then we shan't ever fight over it again, because after this your flag—the flag that saved my father from being made a prisoner—is going to be my flag."

The Confederate flag was lying where it had fallen in the struggle, and, taking it up, the boy pushed it gently under the fresh turf on his grandfather's grave and drew a garland of lilies over it.

Grandmother Ford started forward with a quick protest.

"No, no, mother," interposed her son. "Let us leave it where it is. It has had honorable burial—and I would to God there were some lily of peace that could bring all those who are at discord to as happy an understanding as these lads seem to have reached. Look, mother!" And he pointed to the two boys, who, with the basket between them, were hastily laying the remainder of the lilies on the Northern patriot's grave.

HEART DISEASE.

Some Facts Regarding the Rapid Increase of Heart Troubles.

Heart trouble, at least among the Americans, is certainly increasing, and while this may be largely due to the excitement and worry of American business life, it is more often the result of weak stomachs, of poor digestion.

Real organic disease is incurable; but not one case in a hundred of heart trouble is organic.

The close relation between heart trouble and poor digestion is because both organs are controlled by the same great nerves—the Sympathetic and the Pneumogastric.

In another way also the heart is affected by the form of poor digestion, which causes gas and fermentation from half digested food. There is a feeling of oppression and heaviness in the chest caused by pressure of the distended stomach on the heart and lungs, interfering with their action; hence arises palpitation and short breath.

Poor digestion also poisons the blood, making it thin and watery, which irritates and weakens the heart.

The most sensible treatment for heart trouble is to improve the digestion and to insure the prompt assimilation of food.

This can be done by the regular use after meals of some safe, pleasant and effective digestive preparation, like Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, which may be found at drug stores, and which contain valuable, harmless digestive elements in a pleasant, convenient form.

It is safe to say that the regular, persistent use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at meal time will cure any form of stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach.

Rheumatism and Gout

A prominent physician writes:

DEAR SIRS;—Replying to yours on the use of TARTARLITHINE as a remedy in the treatment of gout, I will say that I have used it in the treatment of about a dozen cases with results that are a little less than wonderful. The characteristic feature of its action is the rapidity with which patients improve under its use. An improvement is noticeable within 24 hours. One of the most striking cases was that of a physician suffering from gout, muscular rheumatism and frequent bilious headaches. I prescribed Tartarlithine, and in one week there was absolute disappearance of all of the uric acid manifestations. The nervous irritability disappeared, and he stated that he had done the best week's work which he had accomplished in years.

Tartarlithine is supplied in bottles containing 50 doses at $1.00 and can be obtained of all druggists or post-free by mail. Pamphlets with Testimonials sent FREE.

These Questions Will be Answered July 4

1. What does the expression, "the Lord's day," in Rev. 1: 10, imply?
2. From what reputable institutions in the United States can degrees in art, science and literature be secured by correspondence?
3. What is the origin of the expression, "to take a person down a peg or two?"
4. In what way should our churches be sustained financially? Are "ecclesiastical entertainments" permissible as a means of raising money for church support?
5. Is a preacher justified in introducing politics into his sermons?
6. Why do we make the rule to walk on our right hand side, rather than on our left, when on a thoroughfare?
7. What is the origin of the term, "the three R's," as applied to the studies of reading, writing and arithmetic?
8. May we suppose that the author of the Messianic Psalms was conscious of their application to the Messiah? Did he at all understand their prophetical character?
9. Who was the author of the expression, "murder will out"?
10. What are the so-called seven Bibles of the world?

Questions of the Week

1 New York is to have a Hall of Fame, in which ultimately several scores of America's immortals are to be enshrined. What ten sons has the nation whose title to a place in such a temple it would unqualifiedly agree to recognize?

The following names have received the most numerous mention in reply to Question No. 1: George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, U. S. Grant, Daniel Webster, Benjamin Franklin, H. W. Longfellow, Thomas Jefferson, Ralph W. Emerson, Washington Irving, Samuel F. B. Morse. John D. Meese has nine of these names in his list. No other correspondent has so many. EDITOR MAIL-BAG.

2. What causes the blue appearance of the sky?

A colorless ray of sunlight passing through a prism is refracted and separated into a number of colored rays. Now the atmosphere is known to contain myriads of floating dust motes and other particles of inconceivable smallness, which act as prisms to the rays of light. The shorter blue waves are broken and reflected not only by the larger motes, but by those which are too small to reflect the longer yellow and still longer red waves. Thus when a ray of sunlight passes through the atmosphere, more of its blue waves than of its yellow and red are reflected to the eye, consequently the blue appearance of the sky.

C. V. CLIPPINGER.

3. What authority does the Church of Rome claim for denying to her laity the use of the cup in the mass, which in that body takes the place of the Protestant communion service?

The early church, for ages, and the Greek and Protestant churches of our times, follow the examples of the apostles and Christ in distributing the bread and wine to all communicants. Roman Catholic authors say that the Roman church restricts the cup to the officiating priests, for fear that some portion of the Lord's body (made such by transubstantiation) might be desecrated, and that when Jesus said: "Drink ye all of this," he did not mean all communicants; but that the priests and apostles were to drink all of the wine. The Hussite war had for its object the delivery of both bread and wine to the laymen.

ADA L. MCJUNKIN.

4. What is meant by the command of the Saviour "Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations" (Luke 16: 9)?

The reading of the Revised Version is: "Make to yourselves friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when it shall fail, they may receive you into the eternal tabernacles." The Lord teaches here the true use of worldly riches, called "the mammon of unrighteousness" because the unrighteous worship it. With it, by means of it, from the power and influence it gives you, "make to yourselves friends," as in I. Tim. 6: 18; Heb. 13: 16; Ps. 112: 9; Prov. 19: 17. And when it fails—as it must when we die—"each deed done for God with this mammon becomes a friend to greet us as we enter the eternal world"—"the everlasting habitations."

G. E. KRAUTH.

5. Christ teaches us to pray, "Lead us not into temptation." Since it is impossible for our heavenly Father to tempt any man to evil, what is the necessity for such a prayer?

The Greek word "peirasmos," which is translated "temptation" in the Authorized Version, means properly "trial" or "affliction," and not "temptation" in the sense in which that word is now used. The idea contained in this and the following clause is, "(If it be thy will), bring us not into affliction, but (if thou dost see fit to allow affliction to come upon us) deliver us from evil"—i. e., give us power to endure and overcome. R. F. CLARK.

A FALLEN MONARCH OF THE CALIFORNIA FORESTS

This specimen of the Sequoia gigantea, the largest trees in the world, was cut down in Mariposa Grove, Yosemite Valley. A stage filled with passengers and drawn by six horses rode safely along the trunk. Some of these great trees grow to a height of 400 feet, and a circumference of over 100 feet.

6. By which is a person more influenced, by heredity or environment?

By environment. No doubt persons inherit diseases and bad dispositions as far back as the "seventh generation," but this is nothing compared to the surroundings—the examples—which, at times, cannot be avoided for good or evil. The worst character may be reclaimed by proper environment; while on the other hand, the very elect may be dragged down and destroyed by the example of the wicked.

JEFF. D. FULTS.

7. Who is the author of the words, "Knowledge by suffering endureth, and life is perfected," and what is the meaning of the sentiment?

The quotation is as follows:

Knowledge by suffering entereth;
And Life is perfected by Death!

It is in the last stanza of "A Vision of the Poets," by Elizabeth Barrett Browning. The sentiment is easily discernible. Suffering teaches us much that cannot be learned in any other way. Life is perfected by death because through death we reach the consummation of God's designs in our lives. We must put off the mortal before we can put on the immortal. The teaching of the poet is by no means new. Long years before she wrote, the Apostle Paul had given utterance to the sentiments she expresses; and one who wrote long before Paul, says: "Before I was afflicted I went astray;" showing that he, too, had learned by suffering. S. MARSHALL.

8. Is the exemption of places of religious worship from taxation reasonable, and if so on what grounds?

It is reasonable because the stability and welfare of any community are greatly enhanced by the presence of churches. Their moral effect is very great, and the indirect public financial benefit derived from churches and the work carried on in connection with them, far more than offsets the taxes from which they enjoy exemption. J. E. CARTER.

A correspondent says: "California is the only State in the Union that taxes churches and it has the poorest church buildings in the country. One church in San Francisco has to pay over six thousand dollars annually as its property tax. Churches should be among the finest buildings of cities and towns, and this is so in the States where God's houses are not taxed. The General Conference of the M. E. Church in session at Chicago, were petitioned by the California members to try to secure the passage of a State constitutional amendment prohibiting the taxation of church edifices and parsonages. EDITOR MAIL-BAG.

9. At what age or period of his earthly life did Christ fully comprehend the import of his mission into the world?

No one can say with absolute assurance of being correct. The mystery of the union of the divine and human in Christ is beyond human comprehension. At the age of twelve years we find him saying to his mother: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" What scope that "business" then assumed in his mind we cannot say. It is not blasphemous to think of Christ as becoming so thoroughly man that he laid aside the divine attribute of prescience and in his incarnation walked by faith in God, learning only the mystery and full purpose of his mission at the time of his baptism. But to say that there is absolute proof that Christ did not anticipate his death and know the purpose of it long before would be unwarrantable assertion. The leading of Christ by the Holy Spirit into the wilderness would seem to imply some kind of revelation as to his earthly mission, and may possibly be taken as confirming in part the view that Christ at this time became fully conscious of the great work he was to do. J. E. BROWN.

10. When was the telescope invented and which is the most powerful telescope in the world?

There is little, if any proof, that the Greeks and Romans and the Arabian astronomers were in possession of the telescope or its equivalent, although such claims have been made. It is likely that Roger Bacon had tolerably clear ideas as to the practical possibility of constructing telescopes, and that Leonard Digges had access to some unpublished MSS. of Bacon, and by their aid constructed some form of telescope. But prior to 1600, the telescope was practically unknown. In October, 1608, Hans Lippershey & Zacharias Jansen, spectacle makers, in Middleburg, Holland, and James Metius, of Alkmaar, brother of Adrian Metius, the mathematician, produced an instrument with which one "could see at a distance," and sought from their government protection of their rights as its inventors. Galileo, hearing of the discovery, studied the optical principles and made independent discoveries that enabled him to produce a telescope, which he first used Jan. 7, 1610. He thereby discovered three of Jupiter's moons. Keppler, Huygeno and Sir Isaac Newton are names of note in telescope producing. The Yerkes telescope in the observatory on Lake Geneva, Wis., has been considered the most powerful telescope yet built. It has an object glass forty inches in diameter, exceeding by six inches the diameter of the Lick telescope, California. The total weight of telescope and mountings is seventy-five tons. But news comes from Paris of a still more powerful telescope, which visitors to the Exposition in that city will be able to see. The general scientific verdict on this latest large telescope will be awaited with interest. E. BARNES.

Miscellaneous Questions

Inquirer, Helena, Mont. We shall be happy to mail to any address a comprehensive statement of the causes of the present famine in India, showing the extent of the responsibility of the British Government, and what it is doing to relieve the suffering.

Happy Mother, Utica, N. Y. I have three happy, healthy children. I want to do something for poor waifs of the slums this summer, as a thank-offering to God. I hear you do a great fresh-air work. Can I help?

Indeed you can. We are glad to have such thank-offerings. This will be the seventh season of our fresh-air work at Mont-Lawn, Nyack-on-the-Hudson, where about 2,000 children of the tenements—the poorest we can find—are given every season an outing of ten days each. The cost of one child's outing, including food, shelter, car and boat transportation back and forth, medical and caretaker's attention, is only $3; $6 sends two; $9, three; $12, four; for only $36, twelve children may be made happy for ten whole days. Not only children, but their hard-working, overburdened mothers are relieved. We seek to impart spiritual, as well as material benefits, and thousands of children are being improved in every way through this excellent charity. Contributions of money should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York; clothing (prepaid) to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, Nyack, N. Y. Children are between four and twelve years of age. Garments of every kind, hats and shoes are acceptable. All gifts will be acknowledged in this paper.

Here is an opportunity for some of our good friends to do a kind act in supplying these unfortunates with good religious reading matter.

A SNAP-SHOT OF THE BUSINESS SECTION OF CAPE NOME—MORE THAN HALF THE BUILDINGS IN SIGHT ARE SALOONS

Give us Hospitals or we shall die like sheep"...

A Plea From the Cape Nome Gold Fields

Vice and Liquor Everywhere and Sickness Increasing...

THE latest news from Cape Nome, the new Alaskan Eldorado, for which a stampede equal to that of the Klondike seem to be on, will be of interest to our readers; and we present to them with peculiar pleasure the following story, told at this office by Rev. Loyal L. Wirt, founder of the St. Bernard Congregational Church, reading-room and hospital at Nome, and projector of many enterprises looking to the spiritual advancement of Alaska. Mr. Wirt left Cape Nome January 8 and reached New York May 7, coming as fast as dogs, snowshoes, canoe, sloop, steamer and rail could bring him. 1,250 miles were over a desolate waste of snow and ice. The traveler knew, when he bade his wife and children good-by that he could not hear from them again in less than six months; knew the journey he was undertaking to be one of great peril, yet he felt that it was the Lord's command he should acquaint the Church in the East with the conditions at Cape Nome. Here is a condensed record of the situation:

"Each of the various branches of our work as it got under way during our first busy months at Cape Nome made friends for the cause and we were practically an active working church before the subject of organization was mentioned. Toward the end of the year a general desire was expressed for a closer union. On New Year's night, after the Christian Endeavor and praise service were over, the Church of Nome, the only church for whites north of the Yukon, was organized in our chapel, which was crowded to overflowing.

"Our 'Hospice of St. Bernard,' as it now stands, is an institutional church doing a three-fold work: 1. The church, with Sunday and mid-week service, Christian Endeavor society, Sunday school, pastoral visitations and charitable work. 2. Free Christian club-rooms, furnished with good literature, stationery, writing-tables and providing amusements of various kinds. 3. A hospital, where the sick and suffering may receive aid. Similarity of situation and work to that of its famous Alpine prototype suggested the name of this institution, in which mediæval methods are replaced by those of modern science and of Protestantism. St. Bernard dogs were never more successful in the rescue of human life than our less beautiful, but more enduring Malamutes, the pure Eskimo.

"Our first place of worship was in a rented house, built for a saloon. Our library-chapel, in which we now meet, was given us by a reclaimed backslider; it cost $4,500. You would think it a poor structure. The price of lumber is fabulous at Nome. Our hospital, recently erected, accommodates fifty patients, and has a staff of physicians and trained nurses. When I went to Nome last August, the miners waited on me in a body and begged me to assist them in getting a hospital. Hundreds of sick men were lying unattended in their miserable dug-outs or cabins. So heartrending was the outlook that I adapted my mission work to it. I went to Seattle determined to get these men a hospital and returned with lumber and furnishings, and the miners built the house free of charge. Up to the time I left 125 men had been nursed back to life—a record of only two months. No one is ever turned away as long as there is an inch of space in wards or halls. Those who are able, pay a moderate charge; those who cannot pay (the large majority) are as tenderly cared for as if they could. Since the day of its opening the hospital has been full to overflowing.

"There were 3,000 people in Nome when I left. Within the next two months there will be 40,000. If with 3,000 in camp our hospital could not meet demands, how would it be with 40,000? Thousands will not find the gold they seek; they will suffer for food, shelter, nursing, and many will die.

"Whiskey men are enterprising; saloons are springing up everywhere; dance halls multiply. Shall the church be laggard? Through Christian hospitals we can save thousands, spiritually as well as physically; in Christian hospitals we can lead the souls of the dying to Christ. Alaska wants the hospitals. I have deeds to plots of ground in the centre of three towns in the Cape Nome region, given me by their commissioners as I passed through on my way to the Pacific with these words: 'For God's sake, get us a hospital, or we shall die like sheep next summer. Get the lumber; we will build.' The architect's drawing reproduced here, is the plan of each of five hospitals, which, with the help of God's people, I propose to erect in as many large centres growing up along the Behring Sea. The plan embraces a chapel and reading-room to be conducted like that at Nome. These institutions will do more than you can dream to save our boys from the saloons. The reading-room at Nome is crowded morning, noon, and night. There, and in the church Home, kept open by my wife and her co-workers, hundreds of miners have their only glimpses of home-life. If any readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD wish to help in this good work they can reach me by addressing Rev. Loyal L. Wirt, United Charities Building, New York City. LOYAL L. WIRT."

Heroes and Heroines of Common Life

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, II. Timothy 2: 3: . . . } Thou therefore endure hardness.

HISTORIANS are not slow to acknowledge the merits of great military chieftains. We have the full-length portraits of the Cromwells, the Washingtons, the Napoleons and the Wellingtons of the world. History is not written in black ink, but with red ink of human blood. The gods of human ambition do not drink from bowls made out of silver or gold, or precious stones, but out of the bleached skulls of the fallen. But I am now to unroll before you a scroll of heroes that the world has never acknowledged; those who faced no guns, blew no bugle-blast, conquered no cities, chained no captives to their chariot-wheels, and yet, in the great day of eternity, will stand higher than some of those whose names startled the nations: and seraph, and rapt spirit, and archangel will tell their deeds to a listening universe. I mean the heroes of common, every-day life.

In this roll, in the first place, I find all the heroes of the sick-room. When Satan had failed to overcome Job, he said to God "Put forth thy hand and touch his bones and his flesh, and he will curse thee to thy face." Satan had found out that which we have all found out, that sickness is the greatest test of one's character. A man who can stand that can stand anything. To be shut in a room as fast as though it were a Bastile. To be so nervous you cannot endure the tap of a child's foot. To have luscious fruit, which tempts the appetite of the robust and healthy, excite our loathing and disgust when it first appears on the platter. To have the rapier of pain strike through the side, or across the temples, like a razor, or to put the foot into a vise, or throw the whole body into a blaze of fever. Yet there have been men and women, but more women than men, who have cheerfully endured this hardness. Through years of exhausting rheumatisms and excruciating neuralgias they have gone, and through bodily distress that rasped the nerves, and tore the muscles, and paled the cheeks, and stooped the shoulders. By the dim light of the sick-room taper they saw on their wall the picture of that land where the inhabitants are never sick. Through the dead silence of the night they heard the chorus of the angels.

The cancer ate away her life from week to week and day to day, and she became weaker and weaker, and every "good-night" was feebler than the "good-night" before, yet never sad. The children looked up into her face and saw suffering transformed into a heavenly smile. Those who suffered on the battle-field, amid shot and shell, were not more heroes and heroines than those who, in the field-hospital and in the asylum, had fevers which no ice could cool, and no surgery cure. No shout of a comrade to cheer them, but numbness and aching and homesickness—yet willing to suffer, confident in God, hopeful of heaven. Heroes of rheumatism. Heroes of neuralgia. Heroes of spinal complaint. Heroes of sick-headache. Heroes of life-long invalidism. Heroes and heroines! They shall reign for ever and ever. Hark! I catch just one note of the eternal anthem: "There shall be no more pain!" Bless God for that!

In this roll I also find the heroes of toil, who do their work uncomplainingly. It is comparatively easy to lead a regiment into battle, when you know that the whole nation will applaud the victory; it is comparatively easy to doctor the sick, when you know that your skill will be appreciated by a large company of friends and relatives; it is comparatively easy to address an audience, when in the gleaming eyes and the flushed cheeks you know that your sentiments are adopted; but to do sewing, when you expect the employer will come and thrust his thumb through the work, to show how imperfect it is, or to have the whole garment thrown back on you, to be done over again; to build a wall, and know there will be no one to say you did it well, but only a swearing employer howling across the scaffold; to work until your eyes are dim and your back aches and your heart faints, and to know that if you stop before night your children will starve. Ah! the sword has not slain so many as the needle. The great battlefields of our Civil War were not Gettysburg and Shiloh and South Mountain. The great battlefields were in the arsenals and in the shops and in the attics, where women made army jackets for a sixpence. They toiled on until they died. They had no funeral eulogium, but, in the name of my God, this day, I enroll their names among those of whom the world was not worthy. Heroes of the needle! Heroes of the sewing-machine! Heroes of the attic! Heroes of the cellar! Heroes and heroines! Bless God for them!

In this roll I also find the heroes who have uncomplainingly endured domestic injustices. There are men who, for their toil and anxiety, have no sympathy in their homes. Exhausting application to business gets them a livelihood, but an unfrugal wife scatters it. He is fretted at from the moment he enters the door until he comes out of it. The exasperations of business life, augmented by the exasperations of domestic life. Such men are laughed at, but they have a heart-breaking trouble and they would have long ago gone into appalling dissipation but for the grace of God. Society to-day is strewn with the wrecks of men, who, under the northeast storm of domestic infelicity have been driven on the rocks. There are tens of thousands of drunkards to-day, made such by their wives. That is not poetry. That is prose. But the wrong is generally in the opposite direction. You would not have to go far to find a wife whose life is a perpetual martyrdom. Something heavier than a stroke of the fist; unkind words, staggering home at midnight and constant maltreatment which have left her only a wreck of what she was on that day when in the midst of a brilliant assemblage the vows were taken, and full organ played the wedding march, and the carriage rolled away with the benediction of the people. What was the burning of Latimer and Ridley at the stake compared with this? Those men soon became unconscious in the fire, but there is a thirty years' martyrdom, a fifty years' putting to death, yet uncomplaining. No bitter words when the rollicking companions at two o'clock in the morning pitch the husband dead drunk into the front entry. No bitter words when wiping from the swollen brow the blood struck out in a midnight carousal. Bending over the battered and bruised form of him, who, when he took her from her father's home, promised love and kindness and protection, yet nothing but sympathy and prayers and forgiveness before they are asked for. No bitter words when the family Bible goes for rum and the pawnbroker's shop gets the last decent dress. Some day, desiring to evoke the story of her sorrows, you say: "Well, how are you getting along now?" and rallying her trembling voice and quieting her quivering lip, she says: "Pretty well, I thank you, pretty well." She never will tell you. In the delirium of her last sickness she may tell all the other secrets of her lifetime, but she will not tell that. Not until the books of eternity are opened on the throne of judgment will ever be known what she has suffered. Oh! ye who are twisting a garland for the victor, put it on that pale brow. When she is dead the neighbors will beg linen to make her a shroud, and she will be carried out in a plain box with no silver plate to tell her years, for she has lived a thousand years of trial and anguish. The gamblers and swindlers who destroyed her husband will not come to the funeral. One carriage will be enough for that funeral—one carriage to carry the orphans and the two Christian women who presided over the obsequies. But there is a flash, and the opening of a celestial door and a shout: "Lift up your head, ye everlasting gate, and let her come in!" And Christ will step forth and say: "Come in! ye suffered with me on earth, be glorified with me in heaven." What is the highest throne in heaven? You say: "The throne of the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb." No doubt about it. What is the next highest throne in heaven? While I speak it seems to me it will be the throne of the drunkard's wife, if she with cheerful patience endured all her earthly torture. Heroes and heroines!

I find also in this roll the heroes of Christian charity. We all admire the George Peabodys and the James Lenoxes of the earth, who give tens and hundreds of thousands of dollars to good objects. But I am speaking now of those who, out of their pinched poverty, help others—of such men as those Christian missionaries at the West, who proclaim Christ to the people, one of them, writing to the secretary in New York, saying: "I thank you for that $25. Until yesterday we have had no meat in our house for three months. We have suffered terribly. My children have no shoes this winter." And of those people who have only a half loaf of bread, but give a piece of it to others who are hungrier; and of those who have only a scuttle of coal, but help others to fuel, and of those who have only a dollar in their pocket, and give twenty-five cents to somebody else: and of that father who wears a shabby coat, and of that mother who wears a faded dress, that their children may be well apparelled. You call them paupers, or ragamuffins, or emigrants. I call them heroes and heroines. You and I may not know where they live, or what their name is. God knows; and they have more angels hovering over them than you and I have, and they will have a higher seat in heaven. They may have only a cup of cold water to give a poor traveler, or may have only picked a splinter from under the nail of a child's finger, or have put only two mites into the treasury, but the Lord knows them. Considering what they had, they did more than we have ever done, and their faded dress will become a white robe, and the small room will be an eternal mansion, and the old hat will be exchanged for a coronet of victory, and all the applause of earth and all the shouting of heaven will be drowned out when God rises up to give his reward to those humble workers in his kingdom, and to say to them: "Well done, good and faithful servant."

You have all seen or heard of the ruins of Melrose Abbey. I suppose in some respects they are the most exquisite ruins on earth. And yet, looking at it I was not so impressed—you may set it down to bad taste—but I was not so deeply stirred as I was at a tombstone at the foot of that abbey—the tombstone placed by Walter Scott over the grave of an old man who had served him for a good many years in his house—the inscription most significant, and I defy any man to stand there and read it without tears coming into his eyes—the epitaph: "Well done, good and faithful servant." Oh! when our work is over, will it be found that because of anything we have done for God, or the church, or suffering humanity, that such an inscription is appropriate for us? God grant it!

Who are those who were bravest and deserved the greatest monument—Lord Claverhouse and his burly soldiers, or John Brown the Edinburgh carrier and his wife! Mr. Atkins, the persecuted minister of Jesus Christ, in Scotland, was secreted by John Brown and his wife, and Claverhouse rode up one day with his armed men and shouted in front of the house. John Brown's little girl came out. He said to her: "Well, miss, is Mr. Atkins here?" She made no answer, for she could not betray the minister of the Gospel. "Ha!" Claverhouse said, "then you are a chip of the old block, are you? I have something in my pocket for you. It is a nosegay. Some people call it a thumbscrew, but I call it a nosegay." And he got off his horse, and he put it on the little girl's hand, and began to turn it until the bones cracked, and she cried. And they heard the child's cry, and the father and mother came out, and Claverhouse said: "Ha! it seems that you three have laid your holy heads together, determined to die like all the rest of your hypocritical, canting, snivelling crew; rather than give up good Mr. Atkins, pious Mr. Atkins, you would die."

John Brown fell upon his knees, and began to pray. "Ah!" said Claverhouse, "look out, if you are going to pray; steer clear of the king, the council, and Richard Cameron." "O Lord," said John Brown, "since it seems to be thy will that I should leave this world for a world where I can love thee better and serve thee more, I put this poor widow-woman and these helpless, fatherless children into thy hands. We have been together in peace a good while, but now we must look forth to a better meeting in heaven; and as for these poor creatures, blindfolded and infatuated, that stand before me, convert them before it be too late; and may they who have sat in judgment in this lonely place, on this blessed morning, upon me, a poor, defenceless fellow-creature, may they in the last judgment find that mercy which they have refused to me, thy most unworthy, but faithful servant. Amen."

He rose and said, "Isabel, the hour has come of which I spoke to you on the morning when I proposed hand and heart to you; and are you willing now, for the love of God, to let me die?" She put her arms around him, and said, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord." "Stop that snivelling," said Claverhouse. "I have had enough of it. Soldiers do your work. Take aim! Fire!" and the head of John Brown was scattered on the ground. While the wife was gathering up in her apron the fragments of her husband's head—gathering them up for burial—Claverhouse looked into her face and said, "Now, my good woman, how do you feel now about your bonnie man?" "Oh!" she said, "I always thought weel of him; he has been very good to me; I had no reason for thinking anything but weel of him, and I think better of him now." Oh, what a grand thing it will be in the last day to see God pick out his heroes and heroines. Who are those paupers of eternity trudging off from the gates of heaven? Who are they? The Lord Claverhouses and the Herods and those who had sceptres, and crowns, and thrones, but they lived for their own aggrandizement, and they broke the heart of nations. Heroes of earth, but paupers in eternity. I beat the drums of their eternal despair. Woe! woe! woe!

But there is great excitement in heaven. Why those long processions? Why the booming of that great bell in the tower? It is coronation day in heaven. Who are those rising on the thrones, with crowns of eternal royalty? They must have been great people on the earth, world-renowned people. No. They taught in a ragged school. Taught in a ragged school! Is that all? That is all. Who are those souls waving sceptres of eternal dominion? Why they are little children who waited on invalid mothers. That all? That is all. She was called "Little Mary" on earth. She is an empress now. Who are that great multitude on the highest thrones of heaven? Who are they? Why they fed the hungry, they clothed the naked, they comforted the heart-broken.

What harm can the world do you when the Lord Almighty with unsheathed sword fights for you? I preach this sermon for comfort. Go home to the place just where God has put you, to play the hero or the heroine. Do not envy any man his money, or his applause, or his social position. Do not envy any woman her wardrobe, or her exquisite appearance. Be the hero or the heroine. Did you ever hear the experience of that old man: "I have been young, and now am old, yet I have never seen the righteous forsaken, or his seed begging bread." Get up out of your discouragement, O! troubled soul, O! sewing woman, O! man kicked and cuffed by unjust employers, O! ye who are hard beset in the battle of life, and know not which way to turn, O! you bereft one, O! you sick one with complaints you have told to no one, come and get the comfort of this subject. Listen to our great Captain's cheer: "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the fruit of the tree of life which is in the midst of the Paradise of God."

What would Jesus do in Vacation?

THE FEEDING OF THE FIVE THOUSAND ∴

BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

International Sunday School Lesson for June 17: John 6: 5-14 | Golden Text, Matt. 6: 11: "Give us this day our daily bread"

WHAT wonderful works of God and man a modern dinner table represents, if we would only pause to think! Surely it would be a case of "think and thank." "Who gives you bread?" said the teacher. "Mother." "And who gives it to mother?" "The baker." "And who gives it to the baker?" "The miller." "And who gives it the miller?" "The farmer." "And who gives it to the farmer?" "The ground." "And who gives it to the ground?" "GOD." Animals and men cannot eat mineral substances, but plants can. They are wonderful laboratories for turning stones into food for man and beast. But God takes man into partnership in creating food, and a mere root is developed by human cultivation into the potato. Man has worked with God in transforming many a weed, even poisonous weeds, as in the case of the tomato, into delicious food. Vegetable foods are now so manifold that many count it no hardship to eat nothing else, and surely in summer it is the fittest food. In the laboratory of animal life vegetables are transformed into flesh. Even flesh can be improved by man through breeding and feeding. And what a history of divine providence and human inventions, especially by transportation and preservation, is written in the variety of foods upon our tables to-day! Minnesota furnishes us with bread, Massachusetts with fish, Illinois with beef, California with oranges, Turkey with figs, Barbary with dates, Brazil with coffee, India with spices; while Ireland supplies the linen and England the cutlery. God made the world in the rough, but gave a share of creatorship to man, who has changed well nigh the whole surface of the world, not only morally and socially, but physically also, to a great degree, the very desert being tranformed by irrigation and by changes of rainfall induced by ploughing and planting.

RUINS AT BETHSAIDA

The Miracle of Millions Fed If we look from our tables to the growing fields and ponder the miracle of God feeding fourteen hundred millions of human beings, and countless billions of animals and birds and other creatures, giving to each his "daily bread," we shall be lost in wonder, love and praise. Great difficulty has recently been experienced in feeding our army in Cuba and England's army in South Africa. These armies are as nothing to the hosts that God feeds. Let us praise God for the yearly miracle of seed-time and harvest, and allow none of this gift of God to be misused.

Working With God in Vacation How timely for June is this story of what Jesus did when he had gone for a vacation into the hills by the lakeside! "Come ye apart and rest awhile," he had said to his fellow-workers. They had just returned from tours of spiritual harvesting (Matt. 10: 11: 1, 12, 13). It had been no easy work. They had cast out demons and healed many sick and spent their energies also in fighting off the "wolves" that Christ had said would hang upon their paths, disguised in the wool of Pharisaic piety. Returning to Capernaum, they found Christ busier yet. Crowds were passing on their way to the great festival of the Passover at Jerusalem. "There were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat." That sounds like our own busy days, though some of us have not been busy in the same kind of work as absorbed the apostles and their Master. Christ took his band of workers across the lake and up into the hills overlooking it to rest. But the people, eager to hear his words and see his miracles, watching the course of his boat, ran from Capernaum along the lake shore, crossed the Jordan at the ford two miles from the lake, passed through "Fishertown" (Bethsaida Julias) and gathered a mile beyond in the grassy plain of Batiheh, which lies between the lake shore and the hills which Jesus had climbed. He saw them with "compassion" in the meadow below like scattered "sheep not having a shepherd, and he welcomed them and began to teach them many things and to heal their sick." (We must put together the four gospel accounts or use a consolidated gospel to get all the facts of the story. See Matt. 14: 13-21; Mark 6: 36-46; Luke 9: 10-17; John 6: 1-15. While one reads the story from John, pausing at each verse, let others who have the other accounts in hand add whatever more is told by them.) In our vacations let us, too, "welcome" opportunities to do good; to feed the hungry, to help the sick, to teach unshepherded souls. No man should "take his work as a dose," especially not his Christian work. Work was a part of the Edenic joy. Only overwork and bad work are a "curse." If we delight to do God's will we shall not count that doing as one of the things from which we ever need a vacation. Even in the hills and by the lakeside we shall "welcome" the providence that brings in our way opportunities to be "workers together with Him." With what joy the writer remembers how one "May Day" in Central Park, New York, when walking out for rest, he came on one of the young men of his flock, and sitting down on a park bench amid the merry sounds of childhood's laughter, led him into the gladness of a new life in Christ. Certainly the walk was not the less restful for that opportunity improved.

Jesus Cares for Our Bodies Whence are we to buy bread that these may eat? The other gospels tell us that it was at evening that Jesus tested the faith of Philip with this question. "He himself knew what he would do." The apostles had first suggested that Jesus should send the multitudes away to the villages for supper and lodging. But he said: "They have no need to go away; give ye them to eat." This was again a test of faith, but it showed also a care for our bodies and an interest in our daily bread. The very reason why Jesus was in the hills was that the tired bodies of his fellow-workers and his own might be recreated to return with new strength to loving service. It was estimated that two hundred days' wages would buy only the lightest sort of a lunch for so many—five thousand men, and probably as many more of the women and children. Jesus bade the apostles search for whatever food might be found in the crowd that they might buy and divide around. They found only a lad, perhaps a little pedler boy, with five barley loaves—five thin loaves like pancakes, of ten inches diameter, but hard as a board, made of barley, bran and all, with no other ingredients but salt and water—and two small, dried fishes. This seemed hardly worth reporting. "There is a lad here," they said, "who hath five barley loaves and two fishes; but what are these among so many?" That suggests one great universal lesson of this story, namely, that the beginning of success in working with God is a deep sense of the insufficiency of human resources. First self-distrust, then trust in God. First, "no confidence in the flesh," then supreme confidence in Christ. First, "without me ye can do nothing," then, "I can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth me." Humility is the deep foundation of every lofty life. Moses, when called of God to deliver Israel, cried out: "Who am I that I should go?" Any one who had thought himself worthy of such a charge would by that very egotism have proved himself unworthy. "When I am weak, then am I strong." "What is that in thine hand?" It was neither sword nor sceptre, but only a shepherd's rough stick. But under God's blessing it became mightier than either. Moses, the meekest man, came to be the greatest of human characters—his name joined with that of Christ in heaven's song of Moses and the Lamb.

A DUTCH ARTIST'S CONCEPTION OF THE FEEDING OF THE MULTITUDE

Bring them hither to me. That proclaims the second great lesson—Consecration. The lad's despised loaves and fishes proved sufficient when brought to Christ and blessed by him. Christian history is full of parallels. When David was a lad he brought to God, not five loaves and two fishes, but five pebbles and his sling, and with God's blessing they wrought deliverance for Israel. Later, when David was called to help God feed hungry hearts in all ages with psalms of consolation, he said, "My soul is even as a weaned child." It is the habit of great men in all ages to have this feeling that they are but ill-equipped children in the presence of the great work they are called to do. Solomon, at nineteen, the very period when young men are usually wiser in their own estimation than ever afterward, being called to the throne of Palestine, exclaimed, "I am but a little child." Talents as well as loaves multiply at the touch of Christ. After all, enthusiasm and earnestness have done more for the world than talent. The "graces" that are offered to all are mightier than the "gifts" of the few. That is one lesson of Mr. Moody's life. Many a preacher who knew more of grammar knew less of the Bible and less of the living Christ. If you have greater talents—music, eloquence, influence, wealth—you may be still more useful it you heed the call of Christ: "Bring them hither to me."

Word Picturing He gave to the disciples to set before them. This suggests the third great lesson of this story, namely: All kinds of talents are needed in Christian work. We are now ready to make a word picture of the miracle. "There was much grass in the place." In this green meadow and on the lower slopes of the hills, the apostles, at the word of Christ, arranged the multitude to be fed, in "ranks," literally, in flower beds. That one word is a flashlight photograph of the whole scene. So it seemed to Peter when he had gone back to Christ for more orders after this seating of the multitude was completed, as he looked from the hillside upon the orderly and picturesque multitude. When he told his secretary, Mark, the story to put into the second Gospel, he said in his vivid way, "They sat down by flower beds in fifties and hundreds." We know not just where the miracle of multiplication occurred, but the word "gave," being in the imperfect sense indicating continued action, suggests that the bread and loaves multiplied in his hands.

Do you wish more particulars of the distribution? We know enough of the apostles by this time to see how their varied talents were used. Of course, Peter came first for a supply of food to give away, not because he was above the others in office or rank, for he never was, but because he was the most enthusiastic of the apostolic group; and he hurries around, distributing faster than others, and with his partiality for the old prophets to whom he was kindred in spirit, he proclaims that in this scene there is a fulfilment of the prophecy, "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd." James, comes next, everybody deferring to him except Peter. He moves about more slowly, careful that none shall be overlooked, and reminding every group in his partiality for the old law, that the miracle of the manna is being repeated by One, who fulfils Moses' promise of a prophet like unto him. After these, Philip and Andrew hasten to Christ, a flush of shame in their faces and their eyes cast down, because, despite Christ's earlier miracles, they had expressed misgivings about the loaves. They are eager to atone for their doubting words by helpful deeds. Then comes Matthew, the consecrated business man, who gives the mathematics of the miracles as he goes about—how few loaves there were at the start; how many have been abundantly fed. Among the last comes John, too absorbed in thinking of the meaning of the miracle to be in haste to act, but, finally, taking the loaves absently in his hand as he gazes, almost forgetting the hungry multitude, into the divine face of Christ. Then he goes about telling of the loving Father who gives not only the bread of miracle, but the daily bread as a token of his love. Last of all, comes Thomas, the doubter, looking all about to find the secret of this multiplying food, if he may, and pressing his thumbs into the bread to see if it be real, and not a phantom, that he holds in his hand.

For every variety of talent God has a use, not alone inside the church, but also in the hills and by the lakes of our summer wanderings.

"Gather up the fragments." Regard for little things is one of the marks of greatness, both in God and man. We should waste neither food, nor money, nor time, not even in vacation. Let us make the most of every hour, even in recreations by choosing the best. And many a spare moment, with no loss of rest, may be devoted to self-culture and doing good.

Around the World with Josiah Allen's Wife

CHAPTER XXVII.

Samantha Visits a Princess

THE palace stood in beautiful grounds and is a noble-lookin' building. We wuz met at the entrance to the garden by four handsome native girls with beautiful silk dresses on, handsome turbans, satin slippers and jewelry enough for a dozen wimmen.

They took our hands, each on us walkin' between two on 'em, for all the world as if we wuz prisoners, till we got to the gates of the palace, and here two black males, dressed as rich as a president or minister, met us, and four more gayly dressed female slaves.

These girls took Miss Meechim's cape and my mantilly and laid 'em away. Then we went through a long hall and up a magnificent marble staircase, with a girl on each side on us agin jest as if we wuz bein' took to jail. We then went into a large beautiful room where the Princess' Lady of Honor wuz tryin', I spoze, to be jest as honorable as she could be. But to my surprise she handed us the first thing some coffee and pipes to smoke. But such a pipe never entered Jonesville. Why, the pipe stem was six feet long, amber and gold, diamonds and rubies. Good land! it wuz most enough to get a perfessor and a member of the W. C. T. U. to smokin'. But I wuzn't to be enticed; I sort o' waved it off graceful and drinked a little coffee, which wuz good, and if you'll believe it the little holders that held our cups wuz all covered with diamonds. Then six more slaves, jest as pretty, with jest as fine clothes and with as many jewels, came to tell us the Princess would see us. And we went with them through room after room, each one seemin'ly more elegant than the others, till we reached the door of a great grand apartment, and here the Princess wuz surrounded by more slaves, dressed handsomer than any we'd seen yet.

Royal Hospitality

She come forward to meet us and led the way to a beautiful divan, where we sot down. Here they offered us some more of the beautiful jeweled pipes agin, and agin I stood firm and so did Miss Meechim, but the Princess smoked a little. But the tobacco wuz perfumed so delightfully that there wuz no tobacco smell to it.

Then coffee wuz passed agin in a jeweled cup and agin I sipped a little on't, thinkin' like as not it would keep me awake it wuz so strong, but knowin' that I had got to be polite anyway in such a time as this.

She talked quite good English and we had a pleasant visit with her, and anon she took each on us by the hand—for all the world they acted as if we wuz infants and couldn't walk alone—and led us through the magnificent rooms with lofty mirrors, furniture covered with costly Persian cloth embroidered with gold and silver, great rugs of the most exquisite color and texture, mounds of flowers, baskets and vases everywhere running over with them, makin' the air sweet with their perfume.

In one room there wuz no winders, the walls bein' made of glitterin' mirrors sot in gilded frames, light coming down through stained glass in the gilded ceiling.

On the Princess' toilet table wuz a large gold tray holdin' a basin of perfumed water, and white silk towels embroidered in gold and silver.

I remembered my crash and huck-a-buck towels and thought to myself I didn't know what she would do if she ever come to see me, unless I took one of Josiah's silk handkerchiefs for her to wipe her hands on. But concluded I would do that if she ever paid my visit. And I thought the minute I got home I would paint the bowl of the pipe we had used for tizik, a pale blue or pink, and dry some extra fine mullen leaves and catnip blows, they smell real sweet to me, and I knew they would be good for her bronkial tubes anyway. And I laid out to make up in a warm welcome what we lacked in luxury.

Oriental Magnificence

Well, the last room we went into we wuz served in tiny cups with a delicate drink. Lemonade. I guess it wuz, or orange and fruit juice of some kind. It wuz served to us in jeweled cups and we had gold embroidered napkins. Here the Princess thanked us for our visit and retired, followed by the slaves who had gone with us through the palace.

And we went down the staircase with a girl on each side on us jest as we went up, so if Miss Meechim and I had had any mind to break away and act, we couldn't, and went to our carriage waited on jest as when we come. Miss Meechim said as we started back:

"Did you ever see the like? Was you prepared to see such magnificence, Josiah Allen's wife?"

And I told her I wuz partly prepared, for I had read the Arabian Night's Entertainment.

"Well," sez she, "it goes fur beyend my wildest dreams of luxury."

When we got back to the tarven we found that Robert Strong had been delayed by a visitor and wuz jest startin' for Heliopolis, and Miss Meechim and I bein' all ready we turned round and went with 'em.

Heliopolis hain't so grand lookin' as its name. It is a little Arab town six miles from Cairo. The low houses are made of mud and nasty inside, I believe; they don't look much like Jonesville houses. The oldest and greatest college once stood here. Here, too, wuz the hant of that immortal bird, the Phenix, who raised himself to life every five hundred years. (Josiah don't believe a word on't, and I don't know as I do.) But we do spoze that wuz the very place where Joseph married the daughter of Mr. Potiphar, doin' dretful well, it wuz spozed by her folks, but he wuz plenty good enough for her, I think, and so Josiah duz.

And right in this neighborhood Alexander the Great marched round and camped on his way to Memphis. So you can see it wuz interestin' in a good many ways.

But the Virgin's Tree wuz what we wanted to see. It is a fig sycamore; its trunk is twenty feet in diameter and its branches spread out and cover a great space. But its size wuzn't what we went to see. Under this tree Joseph and Mary rested whilst they wuz fleeing to Egypt from them that sought the young Child's life. Our Lord himself had been under this very tree that wuz bendin' over me. My emotions wuz such that I didn't want any on 'em to see my face; I went apart from 'em and sot down on a little seat not fur off from the fence that protects this tree from relic hunters. And I had a large number of emotions as I sot there lookin' up into the green branches.

MEETING THE PRINCESS' LADY OF HONOR

I wondered how Mary felt as she sot there. She knowed she wuz carryin' a sacred burden on her bosom. The Star that had guided the wise men to the cradle of her Baby had shone full into his face and she'd seen the Divinity there. Angels had heralded His birth; the frightened king looked upon Him as one who would take his kingdom from him, and an angel had bidden them to take the Child and flee to Egypt.

The Holy Family in Egypt

And how happy Joseph and Mary wuz as they sot down under this tree. All their journey over the weary rocky roads, over the mountains, through the streams and the valleys, and over the sandy desert they dassant rest, but wuz lookin' behind 'em all the time as they pressed forward, expectin' to hear the gallopin' steeds of the king, and to hear the cruel cries of his blood-thirsty soldiers. Why, just think on't: every other baby boy in the country put to death jest to be sure of makin' way with the child that she held to her bosom. How would any mother have felt; how would any mother's heart beat and soul faint within 'em as they plodded away on a donkey, knowin' that the swiftest horses of the king wuz mebby follerin' clost behind? But it wuz all past now; under the shade of this noble old tree Mary sot down, happiness in her tired eyes, ontold relief in the weary heart on which the Child leaned.

I believe they laid down there under the starry heavens and went to sleep, mebby the Star shone down on 'em as they slep', seein' they wuz safe now and Herod couldn't touch 'em even if he wuz clost to 'em.

Egypt, blessed be thy turf and thy skies forever more, since thou hast sheltered the Lord!

And while back in Jerusalem the bloodthirsty soldiers wuz rushin' to and fro seekin' for the young Child that they might destroy him, and in his palace King Herod lay in troubled sleep under the close-drawn curtains of the royal couch, slaves watchin' outside the room, slaves watchin' his fearful thorn-strewn pillow, the little Child that he feared and sought to destroy, slept with the clear midnight sky bendin' over his sweet slumber, its matchless blue curtain looped up with stars, hung with the great silver night lamp of the crescent moon. His bed-chamber the broad plains and mountains and valleys of the world which should yet own his peaceful sway. His guard the shining angels that had flown down to herald His coming on the fields of Bethlehem. Sleep well, little Child, with thy kingdom outstretched about thee, the hull grief-smitten world, upon which thou wast to lay thy hands and heal its woes and wounds. The divine clothin' itself in the sad garments of humanity that it might lift it up into heavenly heights.

Miss Meechim Has Doubts

Well, we stayed there quite a spell, Robert I could see felt a good deal as I did and so did Dorothy; I read in her sweet eyes the tender light that meant many things. But Miss Meechim had doubts about the tree. She looked all round it, and felt of the low, droopin branches and looked clost at the bark. She is a great case for the bark of things. Miss Meechim is, you know some be. They will set their microscopes on a little mite of bark and argy for hours about it, but don't think of the life that is goin' on underneath. The divine vitality of truth that animates the hidden soul of things. They think more of the creeds, the outward husks of things than the inside life and truth. Miss Meechim said with her eye still on the bark, that no tree could live two centuries and still look so vigorous.

But I sez, "Mount Sinai looks pretty firm and stiddy, and the Red Sea I spoze looks jest about as red and hearty as it did when the Israelites crossed it."

She wuz examinin' the bark through her eye glasses, but she said mountains and seas could stand more than a tree. And I said I guessed the hand that made a tree could keep it alive.

And I knew that it didn't make any difference anyway. This wuz the road they come and they had to rest anyway and it stood to reason they would rest under a tree, and I felt that this wuz the tree, though it might have been another one nigh by. And while Miss Meechim's mind was all taken up lookin' at the bark of that tree, my mind wuz full of this great fact and truth, that the Child wuz saved from its enemies. And while the kingdom of the wicked king has been covered and lost from sight under the sands of time for centuries, the kingdom of the Holy Child stands firmer to-day than ever before, and is broadening and widening all the time, teaching the true brotherhood of man, and fatherhood of God. This is the great truth, all the branching creeds and arguments and isms, they are only the bark.

UNDER THE "VIRGIN'S TREE"

Nigh by the tree stands a tall piller sixty-four feet high, covered with strange writin'. As I looked at it I thought I would gin a dollar bill to have read that writin'. No knowin' what strange secrets of the past would have been revealed to me. But I couldn't read it, it is dretful writin'. Josiah sometimes makes fun of my handwritin' and calls it ducks' tracks, but I thought that if he'd seen this he'd thought that mine wuz like print compared to it. They say that this is the oldest obelisk in Egypt, and that is sayin' a good deal, for Egypt is full of former greatness old as the hills.

Beautiful Cairo!

Here in the East civilization begun, and gradual, gradual it stalked along towards the West, and is slowly, slowly marchin' on round the world back to where it started from, and when the round world is belted with knowledge and Christianity, then mebby will come the thousand years of peace, the millennium the Scriptures have foretold, when the lamb shall lay down with the lion and a young child shall lead them. I spoze the young child means the baby Peace that shall bime-by lead the nations along into the World Beautiful. And there shall be no more war.

Cairo is different from any other city under the sun, and after you've been there when you shet your eyes and see it agin in memory, the brilliant colorin' sheds its picturesque glow over the brilliant seen. The deep bright blue of the sky, the splendor of the sunlight, the dazzlin' white of the buildings, the soft mellow brown of the desert and the green of the tropical foliage always comes back to brighten the panorama.

And the crowds of people from all parts of the world, each dressed in his and her natural costume, every style of dress and every color under the sun. And the milds of bazars, little booths about ten feet square but all runnin' over with the richest embroideries, silken fabrics, gold, silver, amber and everything else gorgeous. Then there is the new part of Cairo, the broad, long streets lined with magnificent buildin's. The great Citadel of Cairo and the Alabaster Mosque up on a rocky height, six hundred feet above the city. The Citadel wuz built by Saladin in 1100, most a thousand years ago. Where is Mr. Saladin and his folks? and his dynasty? All forgot centuries ago, but the work he thought out is here still. The Mosque is the only building in the world built of alabaster; it wuz begun by Mahommed Ali, the great-grandfather of the Khedive. The alabaster looks like satin, amber and white color, mebby some of my readers have got a little alabaster box or figger that they set store by, it is so costly and fine. Then think of a hull buildin' three hundred feet square built of it. The ruff is uplifted by alabaster columns; the alabaster galleries are a hundred feet above the floor. The gilded dome can be seen twenty or thirty milds away. The view from the terrace in front is so beautiful that you don't want to leave it. The city lies before you and a long view of the Nile, rich gardens, green fields, towering palms, the pyramids standin' like ghosts out of the past, Memphis, oldest city of the world. Turn your head and there is the land of Goshen; how many times amidst the overwhelmin' cares of a Jonesville kitchen have we mentioned "Land of Goshen," but solemn now to look at and contemplate as the home of the patriarchs. Only two milds off down the Nile is the spot where Napoleon fought with the Mamelukes and won the Battle of the Pyramids. And jest under you as you look down, you see the ruff of the Egyptian Museum where the body of Ramesis lays, once rulin' with a high hand he and his folks, as many as a dozen of 'em, over all the land our stranger eyes looked down on. But now they are nothin' but a side show, as you may say in a museum.

Josiah wuz dretful took with the sights of shops on either side of the narrow streets of old Cairo and all sorts of trades bein' carried on there right out doors; goldsmiths and silversmiths makin' their jewelry right there before you, and Josiah sez: "I lay out to have a shop rigged out doors to hum and make brooms and feather dusters; and why don't you, Samantha; how uneek it would be for you to have your sewin'-machine or your quiltin'-frames in the corner of the fence between us and old Bobbett's, and have a bedquilt or a crazy blanket draped behind you on the fence. You could have a kind of a turban if you wanted to; I would lend you one of my bandannas, I'm goin' to wear 'em in my bazar when I rig one up, and my dressin'-gown, and I shall have Ury wear one and sandals. I can make some crackin' good sandals for us all out of shingles, and lace 'em on with colored ribbins. How dressy they will make me look. I shall lace my sandals on with yeller and red baby ribbin, them colors are so becomin' and make my complexion look fairer. We shall jest coin money out of my bazar, and I shall write to Ury to put in a piece of broom corn, and mebby we shall make jewelry; we could make some good mournin' jewelry out of coal and lam-black."

Josiah's New Idea

Well, I didn't argy with him, thinkin' most probable that he'd forgit it, but Arvilly, who wuz with us, sez: "I guess it would be mournin' jewelry in good earnest if you made it; I guess it would make anybody mourn to see it, let alone wearin' it."

"Wait till you see it," sez he.

And she sez, "I am perfectly willin' to wait."

"But I shan't set on the floor as they do here," sez he, "I am sorry for some of them poor old men that can't afford chairs, and I would be perfectly willin' to make 'em some stools if they'd furnish the lumber."

Sez I, "It's their way, Josiah, they like it."

"I don't believe it," sez he; "nobody loves to scrooch down flat with their legs under 'em numb as sticks." But right whilst we were talkin' we met a funeral procession. The head one had hard work to git through the crowd crying out:

"There is no deity but God! Mohammed is his apostle!" Then come some boys singin' a funeral him; and then the bier, borne by friends of the corpse and covered by a handsome shawl. Then come the hired mourners—wimmen—for I spoze they think they're used to mournin' and can earn their money better. 'Tennyrate, these screeched and wailed and tore their hair and beat their breast-bone as if they meant to earn their money. Then come the relatives and friends. Of course, they no need to have wep' a tear, havin' hired it done. But they did seem to feel real bad, they couldn't have wept and wailed any more if they had been hired to. Josiah sez:

A Touching Assurance

"Samantha, when I'm took, if you hire anybody to mourn get some better lookin' females than these. I had almost ruther die onlamented than to have such lookin' creeters weepin' over my remains; now some fair lookin' females such as sister Celestine Bobbett and she that wuz Submit Tewksbury——"

But I interrupted him by telling him truly that no hired tears would fall on his beloved face if I outlived him, and no boughten groans would be hearn. Sez I, "The tears of true love and grief would bedew your forward."

"Well," sez he, "it would be my wishes."

As we wended our way along we met several water-carriers with leather bottles, jest such a one as Hagar took with her and Ishmael out in the desert, and it wuz on this same desert whose sands wuz siftin' in about us every chance it had that she lay the child down to die and angels come and fed him. And, also, it bein' along towards night we met several shepherds; one wuz carryin' a tired lamb in his arms. They wuz patriarkal in appearance and dressed jest like the Bible pictures. I felt as though I had met Abraham or Isac onbeknown to them.

Another sight that impressed my pardner fearfully wuz the howlin' dervishes—we'd hearn about 'em a sight, and so we thought we would go and hear 'em howl. By payin' a little backsheesh (which is money) we got permission to attend one of their religious meetin's. There wuz a chief or Sheik, which Josiah always called a "shack"—and I d'no but he wuz well named—and about twenty or thirty howlers in long white robes. They made a low bow to the Shack and then knelt round him in a circle; then they bowed agin a number of times clear to the floor and begun to sing or pray. I d'no what you would call it, but the axents wuz dretful and the music that accompanied it harrowin' in the extreme. Then they got up and bowed agin to the Shack and begun to shake their heads and their arms and their feet rapid and voylent, all keepin' time to the music, or what I spoze they called music, their hair hangin' loose, their yellin' fearful, and then they begun to whirl like a top spinnin' round, faster and faster, whirlin' and howlin' and shriekin' till they couldn't howl or whirl any longer. Then the meetin' broke up as you may say, they formed a half circle agin round the Shack, bowed to the ground before him and fell down perfectly wore out on the floor. I should have thought they'd died. Why, I couldn't have stood it and lived nor Josiah couldn't; it wuz all we could stand to see it go on.

One day Miss Meechim and I visited an American Mission School for Arab and Egyptian children, and it wuz from one of these very schools that one of the Rajahs or native princes took his wife. She wuz a little donkey driver, and the teacher of the Mission, liking her and pitying her, got permission of her mother (a poor donkey driver of Cairo living in a mud hut) to take the child into her school. When she wuz about fourteen years old the Rajah, who had accepted the Christian religion, visited this school, and the little girl wuz teaching a class of barefooted Egyptian girls, sittin' on the floor about her.

Who can tell the mysteries of love? Like lightning it strikes where it will and must. Why should this Prince, educated in England, a friend of Queen Victoria, who had seen beautiful women all his days onmoved, why should he fall in love with this little girl, late a donkey driver in the streets of Cairo?

I d'no, but so it wuz, and he told the lady in charge of the school that he wanted to make her his wife. She wuz greatly surprised, and not knowin' he wuz what he said he wuz, asked him polite to go away and select some other bride. But the next day he come back, sent in his card and a autograph letter from Queen Victoria, and agin expressed his desire to marry the bright-eyed little Egyptian.

A Romantic Union

When the subject wuz broached to her she wep' and pleaded to not be sold into slavery, spozein' that wuz what it meant. But the Prince made her understand that he wanted her for his wife, and she consented to be educated in a fitting manner, and at last the weddin' took place at the home of the teacher.

The Prince took his wife to London where she wuz presented at Court, and makes him a good wife, so fur as I know, and they say she's dretful good to the poor; 'tennyrate the Prince must think a good deal of her, for he presented every year one thousand pounds to help on the school where he found his Princess. This story is true and is stranger than most lies.

I spoze that from that time on all the dark-eyed little Egyptian maids in that school wuz lookin' out anxiously to see some prince comin' in and claim 'em and make a royal princess of 'em. But one swallow don't make a spring; I don't spoze there has been or will be agin such a romance.

..THOUSANDS in INDIA SAVED from STARVING

Dr. Klopsch's Tour through the Famine Districts ... Missionary Testimony to the Life-Saving Effect of the Fund

Special Dispatch to "The Christian Herald."

BOMBAY, May 28. Dr. Louis Klopsch has just completed his tour of the Famine Districts in the Bombay Presidency, including the native states of Gujerat and Baroda. His investigation of the conditions in those sections has been most thorough. Everywhere he was confronted with the most shocking and revolting scenes. He found the famine camps stampeded by cholera and small-pox fugitives who had come from distant points of infection and are now scattering those diseases in all directions. Many are dying in the fields and ditches and along the roadside.

At Godhra, about 300 miles north of Bombay, there were 3,000 deaths from cholera in four days. Dr. Klopsch saw while there sixteen bodies incinerated, this method of disposing of the dead being general throughout the famine district.

Thousands Die of Cholera

At Donad, some fifty miles east of Godhra, he found a similar frightful condition of affairs, there having been 2,500 deaths also from cholera. The air of the place was stifling and strongly impregnated with the frightful odor of hundreds of decaying bodies which lay about unburied. The water was also impregnated with the poison from the carcasses, and everywhere the stench was indescribable and sickening. In the hospitals the death-rate as reported by the physicians was ninety per cent. No language can adequately describe the terrible condition of affairs in this section of India.

At Baroda, about seventy miles to the south of Godhra, Dr. Klopsch found in the poorhouse 1,200 natives who had been rescued from famine. The place was in a dreadfully filthy condition and showed a lack of system.

At Ahmedabad he found the water vitiated and a prolific cause of the spread of sickness. A terrible mortality prevailed among the cattle in that section, rendering them wholly unfit for food. In the poorhouse at Ahmedabad the death-rate was ten per cent. daily.

The Living with the Dead

Here he saw a new patient brought in and placed face to face with a dead man. The occupant of every fourth cot was already dead. The bodies of patients suffering from dysentery were not cleansed and the result was a frightful condition of affairs in the hospital, with millions of flies. The thermometer at Ahmedabad marked 115 degrees in the shade. He next visited the small-pox and cholera wards of Viramgan. All the patients were lying on the ground, there being no cots for their accommodation. In other respects the condition of affairs there was improving and hopeful.

Dr. Klopsch declares the stories of human bodies being devoured by vultures, dogs and jackals absolutely true. Dogs were seen in some of the districts running off with the limbs of children in their jaws.

The Worst Yet to Come

It is evident, Dr. Klopsch adds, that the India Government is doing its best to fight back the ravages of famine and disease. The native officials, however, are heartlessly indifferent, and the condition of a large part of India is, as a whole, the worst that has been known at any time during the century. There are sections in which whole families have been blotted out. The spirit of the people is broken down by suffering, privation and the plague. The distress to be seen on every side is heartrending, but it is to be feared that the worst is yet to come. This will be reached when the monsoon breaks and the torrential rains flood the relief camps and of the famine area, spreading disease, and especially cholera.

Dr. Klopsch has purchased one thousand hand plows, which will be given to the native agriculturists who have lost the oxen with which the plowing is usually done. He is now arranging for the purchase of 100,000 blankets to be distributed before the rainy season sets in. These are absolutely necessary in order to save life, as thousands are now sleeping on the bare ground. He has protested to the authorities against the employment of nursing mothers, sick women and delicate children on the relief works, such employment being in violation of the Famine Code. In this connection he has received an appreciative letter from Lord Northcote, Governor of Bombay, promising an immediate investigation of the employment methods now prevailing on the relief works.

The Inter-Denominational Missionary Committee are now engaged in the active work of distribution of relief funds, the $100,000 lately handed to them from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund having given a great impetus to the relief work. The Government, press and people of India are profoundly appreciative of the assistance rendered by the Christian people of the United States. It is quite clear, however, that all that has been done will count for little unless in the crisis more help is generously and quickly extended.

WILLETS.

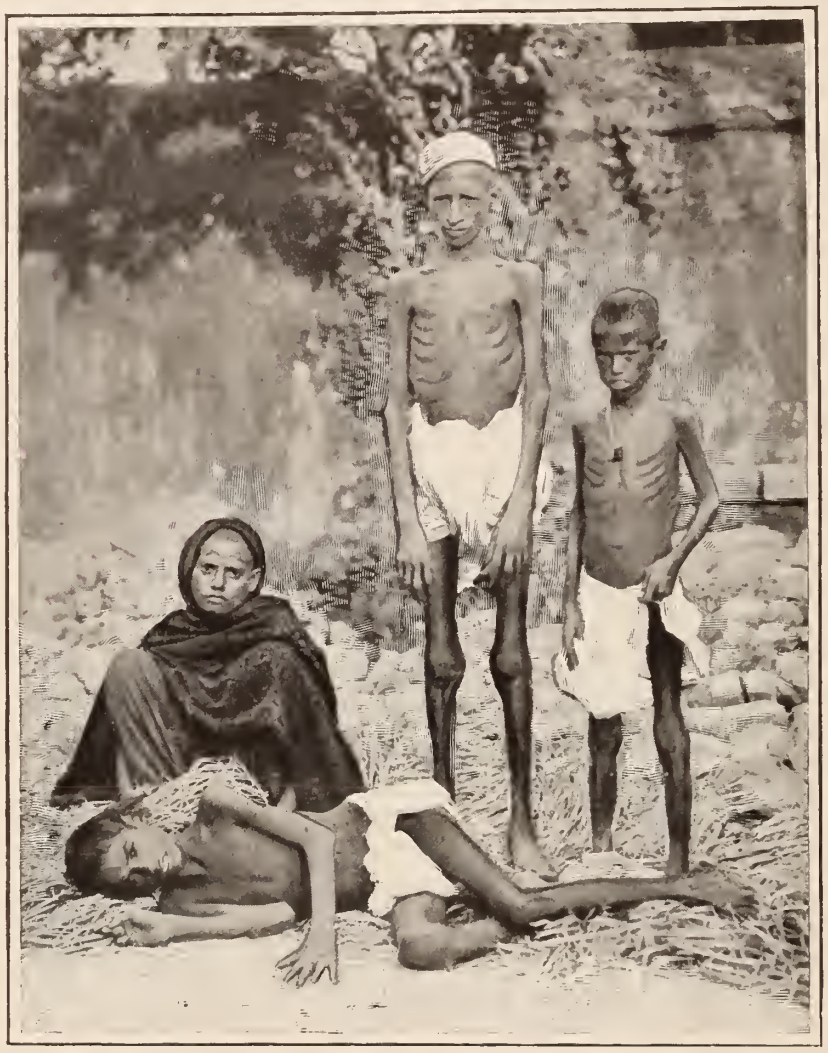
In the foregoing cablegram, just received before this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD goes to press, we are enabled to present our readers and to all the contributors of the Relief Fund, the first comprehensive statement of the famine conditions at the present time.

What the Fund Has Done

Dr. Klopsch's tour shows how terrible is the suffering, how great the need which prompted American generosity. It is a cause for great thankfulness that the gifts of our people are making such magnificent life-saving service possible. In the letter below, from one of the workers in the field, is shown the relief question from the missionary point of view, and expresses the gratitude that is everywhere felt in India for the aid extended by America.



FAMINE REFUGEES RECEIVED BY MRS. ADA LEE AT CALCUTTA

GUNTER, INDIA, April 24.

I write you in the midst of a sea of trouble. I estimate that by sending us $250 (the first payment from the fund), Dr. Klopsch has saved one hundred lives. He has actually saved them. Otherwise they would have died. If there is any comfort in this, let him and the contributors of the fund comfort themselves before God. I would be glad to see Dr. Klopsch face to face—the man who, all over India, has been keeping people from dying. I should say that a man who does that kind of godlike action ought to sleep well. Say to him that we have three hundred people here whom we are keeping alive through the fund. The money sent to us has been put to the best possible use. It has made a thousand hearts glad. What is before us we do not know. This we know: there are many hungry people who do not know where the next day's food is coming from. Anyhow his act and that of your contributors is a divine act, and some day all will see that it is so. Convey to all my thanks in behalf of the poor sufferers whom their charity has helped to keep body and soul together.

J. H. HARPSTER.

Dr. Colin S. Valentine, a physician who has labored for thirty-nine years in India, in a recent letter from Agra to his friend, Dr. Geo. D. Dowkontt, says: "Some of the details of the suffering surrounding us are truly heartrending. One medical missionary says that in a walk of about an hour he passed forty dead bodies in various stages of decomposition, partly eaten by jackals and vultures. On three other days, to avoid the shocking sight, he took different directions; but in each case he witnessed the same dreadful spectacles. The infant mortality is appalling.

Dangers Worse than Death

The condition of young Hindu widows is, if possible, worse, for wicked men and women, like birds of prey, hover about all the roads to pick up these unhappy creatures and lure them away to lives of misery and shame. I am arranging with the railroads to obtain for these girls free passage to refuges in other parts of the country. The British Government is feeding more than five millions of the sufferers at an enormous cost. Surely no Government in the history of the world was ever called upon to face so stupendous a problem."

Rev. G. N. Thomssen, of Bapatla, the Baptist member of our Inter-Denominational Committee, sends a list of the missionaries to whom the Baptist apportionment from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD remittance of $25,000 was sent. Mr. Thomssen adds: "This money came when we were just on the verge of despair. I, myself, had borrowed a thousand rupees, that we might feed the starving people around our mission. Dr. Clough, of Ongole, had spent over fifteen hundred rupees in employing men in deepening wells and in other work of public utility, besides several thousand rupees in the famine kitchen and in food for destitute people. Rev. John Newcomb of Cumbum was in urgent need of five thousand rupees to relieve the people around his station and other Baptist missionaries were in like case. It was impossible to turn a deaf ear to the piteous cries for food. The plaintive look of the children was especially distressing.

Aid Gladly Welcomed

There are Christian families in this condition, people who come to the Baptist missions and have been baptized. Something had to be done for them for Christ's sake; but we had not a cent left and were in despair, when your remittance came and made all our hearts glad. Please thank your readers for so generously responding to your appeals. They know not how many people they have saved from suffering and death. Even our native preachers and teachers were in want. Now all is changed. God's sun seems to shine more brightly because of the help we have received from you. Probably you never saw a person dying from starvation. Pray God you never may. It is a sight you could never forget. The Telugu region is five hundred miles by two hundred, and it has a population of six millions, of whom about fifty thousand are professing Christians. All these know that the gift is from the Christian people of America. They say: 'God bless the kind people who have had compassion on us in our affliction and may he bless, too, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD which made our need known.'"

Dr. W. O. Ballantine of Rahuri, writes: "We thank you most heartily for appealing on our behalf to the Christian people of America, and we thank them for the generous response to our appeal. Those who know most of the conditions here are agreed that this famine will be far ahead of the former one in intensity. It is certainly worse in our district. The scenes I witnessed the day before yesterday near the relief camp were enough to sadden the most hard-hearted. I pray God that more money may come speedily; otherwise vast numbers must perish."

The War in South Africa

CABLE reports from both British and Boer sources indicate that the invasion of the Transvaal has actually commenced. Lord Roberts' army crossed the Vaal on May 26, and pushed on toward Johannesburg from which it was then about forty miles distant. Threats still continue to be uttered that the mines will be blown up before the British forces can reach the town. President Kruger professes to be opposed to the destruction, but declares that he may be unable to prevent it. There appears to be no doubt that a small quantity of dynamite in skilful hands may destroy machinery worth millions of dollars and may close the workings of the mines for an extended period. The men who are advocating the destruction contend that justice demands it, inasmuch as the loss would fall upon the capitalists, who have caused the war and who have hitherto not suffered at all, having left the soldiery to bear the brunt of the loss. Wiser heads, however, foresee that eventually the Boers must sue for peace and would find the terms on which it would be granted much harder, if the capitalists were smarting under the wanton destruction of their property and were urging the British Government to inflict punishment for the act. The army of invasion is advancing in the shape of a crescent, the two horns of which, consisting of cavalry are ready to close up in advance of the centre at command, and so surround an opposing force. It is reported that Kruger has asked the burghers to vote on the question of continuing the war or suing for peace. The majority of them are desirous of saving their homes from seizure, but it is doubtful whether, even if they recognize the hopelessness of their cause, they would yield without another fight. It would be possible to continue the struggle for months by retreating to the Lydenberg hills, where they could occupy positions which could not be easily turned and from which they could harass a large army. People, however, who know the Boer character, predict that they will not adopt such a course, but will be glad to get back to their farms on the best terms they can make, when once Pretoria has been occupied. In England the approaching close of the war is hailed with joy, and the men who have returned from the scene of conflict have been welcomed with enthusiasm. The men of the Powerful, who left their ship and went to assist in the defense of Ladysmith, have had a great ovation. They were taken to Windsor, where the Queen personally thanked them for their valuable services. The men were evidently delighted with the honor. The time will come when those who have served the Prince of Peace on earth and have struggled and conquered in his cause will thus be welcomed by their Lord, who sees and knows now all that they are doing.

BOER LAAGER OUTSIDE MAFEKING—SCENE OF THE RECENT BATTLE

His Lord said unto him, Well done, good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will set thee over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord (Matt. 25: 21).

A Father's Faith

A press dispatch from Daytona, Fla., reports the departure of a well-known citizen for Colorado. In an interview with him prior to his departure, he gave a remarkable reason for his journey. He said he had a daughter fifteen years old who possessed clairvoyant powers. She had fallen into a trance in which she had seen a certain district in Colorado which had gold-producing soil. She described the section, its trees and natural landmarks and assured her father that within easy reach of the surface there was gold in large quantities. The father had such faith in his daughter's powers, that he has turned all his property into money, has disposed of his business and sold his household effects, so that he may go to Colorado, find that property and buy it. He said that he should not have placed so much faith in his daughter's direction if it had not been that as a well-digger he had profited by her help in finding water. She had told him on several occasions where to sink wells and in following her directions he had always been successful. There can be no doubt about the sincerity of the father's faith. In disposing of his property and taking that long journey he proved his confidence in his daughter's powers. Unhappily comparatively few show such faith in Christ, though he had Divine authority for his assurance of an infinite reward to all who put their trust in him.

Every one that hath left houses or lands for my name's sake shall receive a hundredfold and shall inherit eternal life (Matt. 19: 29).

The Legal Value of a Man

An appeal by a railroad company, in Colorado, has elicited from a judge of the Supreme Court a statement of the principles on which the legal mind bases its estimate of the value of a human being. The suit under review had been brought by two men, whose father, a banker's clerk, sixty-eight years of age, had been killed on the railroad company's premises. The evidence showed that there had been negligence on the part of the employees of the company, and this fact was practically admitted. The lower court, in which the case was tried, had given a verdict for four thousand dollars. The company claimed that such an amount was excessive and appealed to the higher court. In giving judgment in favor of the company, the justice called attention to the fact that the only basis for the claim of the sons, was that they had been deprived of their shares of money that their father might have earned, if he had not been killed. As at his age it was not likely that his savings, if he had lived, would have amounted to four thousand dollars, the verdict of the lower court could not be sustained. In other words, the value of a man must be estimated by his power to earn money. It is well for us that God has a different standard by which he estimates the value of a man.

I gave Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee, since thou wast precious in my sight (Isa. 43: 3).

A Wonderful Shell

There was a debate in the United States Senate on May 8, in secret session, which has a far-reaching significance. It arose on a proposal for the purchase of armor for ships and forts. The full details of the debate have not been disclosed, but the assertion is made on good authority that there was strong opposition to the purchase of the armor, for the reason that a shell had been invented which can pierce the thickest and strongest plates. We learn from information courteously furnished to this journal by Gen. Buffington, and Acting Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, T. C. Fenton, that the penetrating power of a projectile fired from the twelve-inch gun, which is the largest calibre, highest power gun in the naval service, is of twenty-four-inch Harveyized armor, and that at its maximum range of ten miles, it will quite pierce the same armor twelve inches thick. The British government, however, has a twelve-inch gun that has a range of fifteen miles, and a nine-inch gun with a range of twelve miles. The projectiles used in the larger gun weigh one thousand pounds, and give a muzzle velocity of 2,300 feet per second. The penetrative power of a shell may, it is now found, be vastly increased by covering its nose with a cap of soft steel containing graphite. When a shell so capped strikes the plate, the soft steel fuses and with the graphite forms a lubricant that enables the diamond-pointed shell proper to bore its whirling way through the armor plate. This is a remarkable discovery, but we have known the same principle to be applied with success in social intercourse. A pointed reproof, or unpleasant advice reaches the heart with greater effect, if its way is prepared by some kindly words which show that there is a good motive for the admonition.

MARINES AT WINDSOR

A soft tongue breaketh the bone (Prov. 25: 15.)

BRIEF NOTES

At the recent Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions forty-eight countries were represented and 115 Boards or Societies.

At the eighty-fourth anniversary of the American Bible Society it was stated that the number of volumes—Bibles, Testaments, and portions—issued last year was 1,406,801. During the eighty-four years of its existence the Society has issued 67,369,306 copies.

The American Tract Society celebrated its seventy-fifth anniversary recently by a meeting in the Madison Square Presbyterian Church, New York. The report showed that the sales were largely in excess of those of the previous year, and that the rentals from the building covered the expenses.

Temple College, of Philadelphia, has conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity on Rev. Robert F. Y. Pierce, the famous illustrator of the International Sunday School Lessons. The honor is bestowed "in recognition of theological scholarship and efficient public service as a minister of the Gospel."

The two new bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church elected at Chicago by the General Conference are Dr. J. W. Hamilton, of the New England Conference, and Dr. David H. Moore, of Cincinnati, formerly editor of the Western Christian Advocate. Two missionaries of India were also elected bishops.

Dr. Charles A. Dickey, of Philadelphia, was elected Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly on May 17 at its meeting in St. Louis, Mo. Rev. R. F. Sample, D.D., the retiring Moderator, in the course of his address said that the net increase in the membership of the Presbyterian churches last year was about nine thousand.

Dr. Talmage preached in London on May 27 to immense audiences. St. James's Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, and at the close of the service he had to address the crowd outside which had not been able to gain admission. Dr. Talmage says that the heartiness and enthusiasm of his reception both in England and Scotland have touched him deeply.

The Directors of the Gospel Tent, "Glad Tidings," recently held a meeting in New York City, and voted to resume tent work in the same place—Fifty-sixth street and Broadway—where the meetings were so successful last year. Mr. Wm. Phillips Hall, President of the Board, will assist in the support of the work. Rev. S. Hartwell Pratt was appointed Superintendent, and Mr. F. H. Jacobs, the well-known Gospel singer, will direct the music.

The official report of the work accomplished by the recent Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions is now in the hands of a special committee. The plan includes three parts: 1. The story of the conference, its inception, organization and conduct, and its place in the history of missions. 2. The contributions read before the conference, the addresses and discussions. 3. Appendices, including the complete programme, the organization and roll, a list of missionary societies, a summary of missionary statistics, a carefully prepared Bibliography of the best missionary books, and an index. The report will be published in two volumes of about five hundred pages each; price, $1.50, for both volumes; price to advance subscribers, $1 for the two. They may be ordered from the Publication Committee, Ecumencial Conference, 156 Fifth Avenue New York, Edwin M. Bliss, chairman.

STOCKADE AT PRETORIA, WHERE ENGLISH PRISONERS ARE CONFINED IN VERANDA CHAIRS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

ABOUT . . .

Preserving the Memory

AS people advance in years, they often experience a great deal of difficulty in remembering the happenings of the moment. The events of early life are firmly embedded in the mind, and as the present recedes, the past returns, so that they live over again the incidents and scenes of childhood and youth, while what they did and said an hour ago makes very slight impression. Early impressions are lasting because the brain is peculiarly sensitive when life is new, and the pathways in the brain's tissue are like freshly-made roads. Later tracks are more superficial and do not so deeply indent the mind.

All this, however, has to do with old age. There is a long period of middle life, extending in persons who remain well and strong, far on into the years, when they ought to be aware of no lapse of memory, and ought to be able to read study, and take in new stores as easily as in their school-days. If this is seldom the case, the reason is, not that memory is itself to blame, but because it is atrophied from lack of use. Tie up your right hand for three months, and it would have lost much of its cunning. Do not tax your memory at all, in the way of direct accumulation of knowledge for thirty years, and what can you expect of it?

If a woman, aware of a partial eclipse of her powers of study, of a partial failure of memory, will but set herself a daily task, first, as if she were again a child, and compel herself to learn this by heart, word for word, she will speedily discover that her memory is as ready as ever to be her obedient slave. If a habit of memorizing be formed and kept up through life, if poetry, texts of Scripture and passages from favorite authors be committed verbatim, when one is forty, fifty and sixty years old, she will acquire with as little difficulty whatever she chooses to learn, as she did when she was fifteen. Habit is everything in this matter.

Again, very few of us are really attentive to what is going on around us. We give a certain half-attention; we are slovenly as to details. We are not sharp and clear-cut and definite in what we remember. Attention is memory's obliging hand-maid.

By laws of association, which may become automatic in their working, we may recollect dates, numbers of streets, post-office addresses, and time-tables of the road. But much of this is luggage which memory should not be forced to carry. It may be given over to the porter who has a pencil and pad, to our little pocket memorandum book.

To recall names and faces readily, especially when one meets many people, is an affair of heaven-sent talent. It is just on the border of memory, not an inherent part of it.

The Fresh-Air Child

If you want a demonstration of what fresh air, sunshine, a regular life and happy play can do for a poor, sallow, half-starved, pale and scrawny child, you need go no farther than to Mont-Lawn, where the happy CHRISTIAN HERALD proteges go for their beautiful country outing every summer. The gain in looks and health is simply marvelous; it is like a visible miracle before one's eyes. In your desire to help the famine sufferers in India, do not altogether, dear friends, overlook the poor who are always with us, here at home—the little boys and girls of the tenements who suffer and pine for fresh air during our torrid summer heat.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—ADELA BENSON. Your little girl may learn to like books if her mother reads with her every day.

—EMLY. You do not need to call again, after attending an afternoon reception. Wear a pretty street costume and light gloves.

—G. B. D. For every reason treat your husband's parents with respect and be as cordial as you possibly can be, when they visit you. Surely you would not wish him to be an undutiful son.

—JENNIE. Why are you so disturbed? If your neighbor does not call upon you, it shows that her own concerns occupy her, and that she does not care to widen her circle. You might not find her agreeable if you knew her. In the meantime if you are ever to meet and become acquainted, the way will be made plain. Do not worry over such a trifle.

—FRIEND. You ask by what title an unmarried lady may be described, "old maid" being regarded as a disrespectful appellation. While the lady is still youthful, it is proper to speak of her as a girl. When she is mature, and has apparently resolved to spend her days as a single woman, she is rightly and honorably denominated a "spinster." Certainly she should not be spoken of as an old maid. Nobody defends that outworn style.

—LOUISE B. Mourning is much less rigid in its requirements than it used to be, but you are right in supposing that a widow ordinarily wears a veil. It may be of the stuff known as nuns' veiling. It need not be of crepe, which is extremely expensive and by no means durable. Only rich women can afford depths of crape. A thin face veil only should be worn, as heavy veils ruin the eyes, which are already weakened by weeping. Complimentary mourning, assumed for a relative by marriage for example, is not usually trimmed with crape. It is simply black, as to gown and hat, and is worn from three to six months.

"AWAY BACK EAST IN ILLYNOY"

BY EDWIN P. HAWORTH

Away back East in Illynoy
Where corn grows tall as apple-trees,
'N punkins big enough for a boy
To make a cart of, if he please—
Back there, in Illynoy, I say,
Is where they raised me, as a boy;
'N now 't I'm old and far away,
My mem'ry wanders back each day,
Away back East in Illynoy.

Away back East in Illynoy,
A man can easy earn his bread;
Not all this trouble to alloy
His pleasures and be-frost his head:
Away back there, I wish, my friend
Beyond these troubles that annoy,
That you would lay me at the end
In any spot that they may lend,
Away back East in Illynoy.

—From "Makin' Rhymes an' other Rhymes."

Delinquent Children

The Mother's Congress, with much wisdom, is giving thought to the problems of unfriended, ill-born and misdemeaning children. These come of the class which abets on the criminal, even if it does not actually belong to that, and such poor waifs and strays of society as delinquent children are, have never had a fair chance. If anything can be done for them, by judicious legislation, and by timely provision for their training, the mothers in council, intent on a larger maternity than that which is limited by the confines of the home, will try to secure it for the unfortunates; looking to their reclamation and best development. Nothing more practical has been suggested than this discussion, since first the nation's mothers met together in convocation.

Footstools and Other Rests

A woman who sits up straight in her chair and needs no cushion at her back, who never lolls and lounges, and never desires to put up her feet on another chair is rather an exceptional being. The ordinary woman needs a hassock under her feet, and is not disturbed by an easy chair in which to lean back and take her comfort. The luxurious household provides divans, pillows, and hammocks galore; and when the tired woman sits down, there is near by a stool to slip under her weary feet. I like to see sons and daughters observant and ready to push forward the best arm-chair, the most convenient hassock, and to put the best there is in the house at the disposal of father and mother. Father cares just as much as mother does for these tender little attentions, and they should always be given him without stint.

THE WEE MUSICIAN

HERE'S baby making music,
Sweet music, if you please.
The tune goes very merrily
With Ethel at the keys.

The house were very lonesome,
The days were very long,
If Ethel were not here to cheer
The hours with a song.

.. A Manila Seamstress ..

THE education in current geography is one advantage of our present expanding foreign relations. We know a great deal more about the Philippines than we did a half dozen years ago, and we care a great deal more, for interest keeps pace with acquaintanceship. A walk through a Manila street shows a good deal of the industry going on outside the shop doors. The wives and children of the owners carry on their work or play on the sidewalk, the boys often wearing Chinese dress, and the girls in native costume. The Tagala seamstress, sewing by hand or by the aid of her machine, does her work in public, as is shown in our picture, and very neat and thorough it is, besides being cheap. Our own home dressmaking costs a great deal more. A Manila street shows great variety of type: natives holding themselves erect, and bearing themselves with ease and grace, owing, in the women's case, to the childish custom of carrying burdens on their heads. Spanish and Chinese half-breeds abound, Spanish ladies are occasionally seen, and to the medley of coolies, sailors and natives of every caste, are now added the American soldier, the American sailor, and the American wife and child.

Would that we might say that we had carried no American vices there, no American saloon, no American rum. It is the deep and enduring disgrace of our flag, that under it, in the lands of the East, where our missionaries are striving to bring a Christian civilization, we are sending the "white man's fire-water," to make the misery greater, to arouse infamous passions, and to do the devil's work.

A SEWING CIRCLE IN THE CITY OF MANILA

The Bad Boy Problem

"Mamma, may I go to see Tom?" You answer: "No; Tom is a bad boy, I do not wish you to play with him." This way of setting the matter before your Charlie will do as much harm as Charlie's company; it is a cultivation of the "I am better than thou" spirit. Better say: "No; you and Tom do not help each other to be better boys."

OLD and YOUNG HELPING INDIA

Newspapers, King's Daughters, Sunday Schools, Child-friends Working ... A Prisoner's Mite ...

FEW stories of Christian effort are more full of inspiration and interest than that of America's present work for starving India. The letters that come to this office would warm the coldest, most unbelieving heart; they might convince an infidel that there is a God, whose love is shed abroad in the hearts of his people.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASS, SALEM, VA.

In the typewritten letter of the busy man of large affairs, in the scrawl of tender, childish hands the same beautiful spirit of Christian love and pity may be felt.

Mr. J. P. Chew, the proprietor of an Ohio paper, the Xenia Gazette, sends $100, collected by appeals through his paper. John T. Hearn, editor and publisher of the Carroll Free Press, Carrollton, Ga., sends $141.32, saying: "This is the result of an appeal in the Free Press and the work of a few devoted women who personally solicited subscriptions."

The Sunday School of the First Presbyterian Church of Hempstead, L. I., N. Y., has contributed $50 to the cause of India. Supt. P. B. Bromfield addressed the school, making an earnest plea for the famine sufferers, with the above result.

WILLIE HORSEMAN

The Local Famine Relief Committee, Detroit, Mich., have gotten an excellent work under way. Alex. McPherson, Treasurer, sent $500, the "first fruits." Rev. P. V. Jenners, Organizer of the Committee, writes on the 19th, "Our fund reached $1,000 to day — just a week since the first appeal appeared." The editors of the Detroit Free Press and the Detroit Journal are on the Committee, and are lending their influence to the noble undertaking.

Our mite-boxes are being heard from. The superintendent of Park Street Church Sunday School, Boston, Mass., writes:

I enclose $59.67, which with previous contribution, makes our Sunday School's gift to India $115.52; $41.53 of last remittance came through our mite-boxes. With one of these mite-boxes I received a note, saying, "After reading the little paper that was handed to me last Sunday, I felt as if I must do something for those poor suffering ones in India. I have interested others also. It has made me happy this week trying to do for them." A child contributing 99 cents to another box, made the money by selling papers and doing errands. May the sum we send be a blessing to many.

Miss Rose Woodhouse, Pa., suggests:

Since the crying need of the closing century seems to be help for famine-stricken India, it occurred to me that if Sunday Schools would make a special effort on Children's Day it would do much to insure the plan for saving India. The schools have only to act in concert to secure large results. The children would soon become enthusiastic in the work and the work would help them.

India's child-friends are not forgetting to reach forth hands of help to India's starving little ones:

Willie Horseman, $2.50: "I'm a little boy eight years old, and felt so sorry for the famine children, that I got a mite-box and collected $2.50, which I hope will be the means of saving some poor children."——Phyllis King, W. Va., $5.30: "I'm six years old; my little sister, Jessie, is four. Our great-grandmother, Mrs. Susan Armstrong, reads to us about the starving children. We got so sorry we collected this"——Miss Osceola Walton, Va., $2: "After reading about the famine, I showed the pictures to my Sunday School class and told them about the starving children; they at once wanted to help and began to bring their pennies and nickels."——Donald Wilson, Kansas, $1.50: "I send my money because I am so sorry for the starving."——"Little Phil and Bernard," Lincoln, Washington, send 40 cents.

M. J. Gallup, New York, $3.30. "Sixty-five cents of this was handed me by a dear little girl, who was very anxious and interested. She emptied her small pocketbook."

A letter from the State Penitentiary, Ore., reads:

I am a prisoner here. I enclose half my present capital, ten cents, to be used for the India famine sufferers. I hope I may be able some day to give ten thousand to as good a cause. This is my first self-denial; it won't be my last.

This must have been a sacrifice indeed:

Dear CHRISTIAN HERALD: Matilda and I sold our pet lamb and we are going to give the money to the poor sufferers in India. May God bless the gift. Matilda is ten years old and I am seven years old. Yours truly from Matilda and Mary.

Some little people are improving themselves as a tribute to India. We think the following a lovely way for others to win money for India. We hope to hear from hundreds of little contributors along this line, says Ruth Mary France.

I am a little girl seven years old. My grandma and aunt told me if I would stand 100 in my spelling, they would each give me ten cents. I send the twenty cents to help little children in India.

Nor is the South a laggard in this noble work. W. J. Graham, Chairman Local Relief, Greenville, S. C., sends $253 as a "small contribution to aid the starving." The sum was made up by citizens of Greers, Belton, Greenville, Cowpens, Coronaca, Saint Albans Traveler's Rest, by churches, Sunday Schools and King's Daughters. Mr. H. L. Baker sends $81 given by employees of the Whitecastle Lumber and Shingle Co., Whitecastle, La. Mrs. D. D. Johnson, Chairman Local Relief Committee, Concord, N. C., sends $106.18, "from the town of Concord, a sum raised by personal solicitation of ladies of Committee." J. D. Walker, Treas. Local Relief Committee, Sparta, Ga., working under Dr. Hobbs, sends $100, "given by Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians and others; expect to send another $100 and maybe $200." Dr. P. Winston sends $122.75, contributed Sunday night at a union meeting without reference to denomination, by the citizens of Farmsville, Va., to starving India."

DONALD WILSON

Rev. Thomas H. Wells sends $50 and writes:

Your perfect arrangements for the distribution of help to suffering India is a great satisfaction to donors and a subject of praise from many.

JESSIE AND PHYLLIS KING

A Radical Change

ONE of the most momentous changes that could have been made by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was made on May 23, when the Conference abolished the time limit. Hitherto the most distinctive peculiarity in the policy of the Methodist Episcopal Church as compared with that of other denominations, was the rule limiting the length of a pastorate. Originally no minister might remain in connection with a church more than one year. This limit was, however, afterwards extended to three years. In 1888 it was further extended to five years, and now it is abolished altogether. The pastors are still to be assigned to churches by the bishops, but there is now nothing in the law of the church to prevent a minister remaining, as in other denominations, pastor of the same church all his life.

The considerations which probably weighed with the Conference in making the change are not difficult to understand. A minister, knowing that he must in any case leave his church at a certain time, was not likely to plan any extensive movement for its upbuilding, as he might be succeeded by a minister of a different spirit, who might reverse all his methods. There was always a feeling among the more aggressive men that the harvest would not be reaped by the sower, and it requires a great deal of grace under those circumstances to make the sowing thorough and conscientious. There was also a sense of uncertainty in the churches. The officers and members could never foresee the kind of man who would be placed in their pulpit. With the best intentions and the most sincere desire for the prosperity of a church, the mistake was sometimes made of appointing a minister who could not work harmoniously with the church. There was, besides, a difficulty in finding men suitable for important charges. The square men would get into the round holes, and the churches suffered. Every appointment had the nature of an experiment, and although the experiment was safeguarded by a knowledge of the minister's record, there was always the possibility that he might not be able to do in one environment as successful a work as he had done in another. Then, too, there were cases in the large cities in which a change of pastor involved a change of membership. When the pastor was removed to another church in the same city, the people who had learned to love him and enjoyed working under his leadership were tempted to follow him to his new charge, and so the conditions of a church would be disturbed. Those, among other weighty reasons, doubtless led the Conference to abolish the time limit.

The effects of the change will, however, be watched with apprehension by many earnest Methodists. It ignores John Wesley's theory that as the church needs all the talents, and as no minister has them all, it is necessary to have a succession of ministers who each, in his respective way, will build up the church. It also takes from Methodism its distinguishing characteristic, and may lead to a closer relation between church and pastor that will not promote the loyalty of the church to the Bishop and the Conference.

Gems of GOSPEL ANECDOTE

A Group of Helpful and Characteristic Illustrations from Dr. Talmage's Latest and Greatest Work

IN the whole range of modern literature it would be difficult to find any book, or series of books, capable of affording a greater amount of pleasure and instruction than is to be found in the latest and greatest product of Rev. T. De Witt Talmage's prolific pen—the series of Twenty Volumes of Selected Sermons, just issued from the presses of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. These splendid volumes, which are the compacted literary and spiritual work of a lifetime, are rich in anecdote, allegory, spiritual imagery and illustration, grand and soul-moving in diction, and altogether incomparable and unique in their treatment of an endless variety of subjects that are of universal human interest. We give below a few anecdotes selected at random from several volumes, and these are examples of many hundreds of other anecdotes, all equally interesting and helpful to the reader:

God at the Helm I heard of a ship-captain who put out with his vessel with a large number of passengers from Buffalo, on Lake Erie, very early in the season and while there was much ice. When they were well out, the captain saw to his horror that the ice was closing in on him upon all sides, and he saw no way out from destruction and death. He called into the cabin the passengers and all the crew that could be spared from their posts, and told them that the ship must be lost unless God interposed, and although he was not a Christian man, he said: "Let us pray;" and they all knelt, asking God to come for their deliverance. They went back to the deck, and the man at the wheel shouted: "All right, Cap'n, it's blowing nor' by nor'west now." While the prayer was going on in the cabin, the wind changed and blew the ice out of the way. The mate asked: "Shall I put on more sail, Cap'n?" "No!" responded the captain. "Don't touch her. Some one else is managing this ship." Oh, men and women, shut in on all sides by icy troubles and misfortunes, in earnest prayer put all your affairs in the hands of God. You will come out all right. Some one else is managing the ship.—From Vol. I. of "Selected Sermons," by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage.

How a Burglar Was Saved In Sweden, a prima donna, while her house in the city was being repaired, took a house in the country for temporary residence, and she brought out her great array of jewels to show a friend who wished to see them. One night after displaying these jewels, and leaving them on the table, and all her friends had gone, and the servants had gone—one summer night—she sat thinking and looking into a mirror just in front of her chair, when she saw in that mirror the face of a robber looking in at the window behind her and gazing at those jewels. She was in great fright, but sat still, and hardly knowing why she did so, she began to sing an old nursery song, her fears making the pathos of the song more telling. Suddenly she noticed while looking at the mirror that the robber's face had gone from the window, and it did not come back. A few days after, the prima donna received a letter from the robber, saying: "I heard that the jewels were to be out that night, and I came to take them, at whatever hazard; but when I heard you sing that nursery song with which my mother so often sang me to sleep, I could not stand it, and I fled, and I have resolved upon a new and an honest life."—From Vol. V. of "Selected Sermons," by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage.

Rescued by a Mother's Song Many years ago a group of white children were captured and carried off by the Indians. Years after, a mother, who had lost two children in that capture, went among the Indians, and there were many white children in line, but so long a time had passed, the mother could not tell which were hers, until she began to sing the old nursery songs, and her two children immediately rushed up, shouting "Mamma! Mamma!" Yes, there is an immortality in a nursery song. Hear it, all you mothers, an immortality of power to rescue and save.—From Vol. I. of "Selected Sermons," by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage.

Devil's Music Tartini, the great musical composer, dreamed one night that he made a contract with Satan, the latter to be ever in the composer's service. He thought in his dream that he handed to Satan a violin, on which Diabolus played such sweet music that the composer was awakened by the emotion and tried to reproduce the sounds, and therefrom was written Tartini's most famous piece, "The Devil's Sonata," a dream ingenious but faulty, for all melody descends from heaven, and only discords ascend from hell. All hatreds, feuds, controversies, backbitings and revenges are the devil's sonata, are diabolic fugue, are demoniac phantasy, are grand march of doom, are allegro of perdition.—From Vol. I. of "Selected Sermons," by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage.

A Swearer Rebuked A military officer, very profane in his habits, was going down into a mine in Cornwall, England, with a Christian miner—for many of those miners are Christians. The officer used profane language while in the cage going down. As they were coming up out of the mine, the profane officer said, "If it be so far down to your work, how much farther would it be to the bottomless pit?" The Christian miner responded, "I do not know how far it is down to that place, but if this rope should break, you would be there in a minute." It was the Christian miner's opportunity. Many years ago a clergyman was on a sloop on our Hudson river, and hearing a man utter a blasphemy, the clergyman said, "You have spoken against my best friend, Jesus Christ." Seven years after, this same clergyman was on his way to the General Assembly when a young minister addressed him and asked him if he was not on a sloop on the Hudson river seven years before? The reply was in the affirmative. "Well," said the young minister, "I was the man whom you corrected for uttering that oath. It led me to think and repent, and I am trying to atone somewhat for my early behavior. I am a preacher of the Gospel, and a delegate to the General Assembly."—From Vol. IV., of "Selected Sermons," by Rev. Dr. Talmage.

Power of Little Things Little things decide great things. All that tremendous career of the last Napoleon hung on the hand of a brakeman who, on one of our American railways, caught him as he was falling between the cars of a flying train. The battle of Dunbar was decided against the Scotch because their matches had given out. Aggregations of little things that pull down or build up. When an army or a regiment come to a bridge, they are always commanded to break ranks, for their simultaneous tread will destroy the strongest bridge. A bridge at Angiers, France, and a bridge at Boughton, England, went down because the regiment kept step while crossing. Aggregations of temptations, aggregations of sorrow, aggregations of assault, aggregations of Christian effort, of self-sacrifices! Little causes and great results. Christianity was introduced into Japan by the falling overboard of a pocket Bible from a ship in the harbor of Tokio.—From Vol. I, of "Selected Sermons," by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage.

The Conqueror's Prize Alexander, when he heard of the wealth of the Indies, divided Macedonia among his soldiers. Some one asked him what he had kept for himself and he replied: "I am keeping hope." And that jewel I keep bright and shining in my soul, whatever else I shall surrender. "Hope thou in God." He will set back these oceanic tides of moral devastation.—From Vol. II. of "Selected Sermons," by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage.

An Infidel Answered An Arab guide was leading a French infidel across a desert, and ever and anon the Arab guide would get down in the sand and pray to the Lord. It disgusted the French infidel; and, after a while, as the Arab got up from one of his prayers, the infidel said: "How do you know there is any God?" And the Arab guide said: "How do I know that a man and a camel passed along by our tent last night? I know it by the footprints in the sand. And you want to know how I know there is any God? Look at that sunset! Is that the footstep of a man?" And by a similar process you and I have come to understand that this is the footstep of a God.—From Vol. IV. of "Selected Sermons," by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage.

DEATH INVADES the PILGRIM BAND

Our Christian Endeavor Party Saddened by Bereavement

Sight-seeing in Hebron, Jericho and at the Jordan.....

Special Correspondence of "The Christian Herald"

ON Monday, March 19, our Christian Endeavor Pilgrim party was conveyed to Hebron by carriage. Sleigh bells were in evidence, and the members of the 1900 Pilgrimage were in a happy mood, for the early morning air was bracing, and the rest of the Sabbath day had recuperated them. Soon, our minds and imaginations were at work, as the dragoman called attention to the points of interest. There was the well where the star appeared to the wise men after leaving Herod. To the right was Rachel's tomb; then to the left were the sealed fountain and Solomon's Pools. Philips' fountain was shown, where Deacon Philip is said to have baptized the eunuch. Thence to Hebron, fanatical, dirty, unattractive Hebron, with a population of eight thousand Mohammedans, who seem to hate the sight of Christians. Up, up a hill, the party were led in order to look very respectfully at the dome or roof covering the grave of Sara, in the Cave of Machpelah. The Christian and Jew are allowed to go only to a given point toward the entrance of the church, marked by a hole in the wall, where you may "send letters to Abraham." Subsequently we rode to Abraham's Oak, then back to Jerusalem.

REV. DR. J. D. COUNTERMINE ON HORSEBACK AND MRS. COUNTERMINE IN PALANQUIN

ENDEAVOR PILGRIMS

On March 20, the cavalcade of horsemen and women, seventy to eighty, started for Jericho. A strange-looking crowd, dressed in styles of all nations; riding in all ways, some ladies side-saddle, some man-fashion, with horses good, bad and indifferent; some trotting, some galloping, some going single foot: while riders rode gracefully and ungracefully, some sitting erect, like a prince; some bent like a jack-knife. But we all reached the inn of the Good Samaritan in such shape that we could lie down to luncheon. After a rest of an hour and a half we pursued the somewhat painful journey until from the hilltop we viewed the valley of the Jordan, the Dead Sea and the Hills of Moab. A horseback ride of twenty-two miles, and we entered camp, to occupy the tents which were made for Emperor William's party. On the following day the entire party rode by carriage and saddle to the Red Sea. Some bathed their feet, others took a swim, while others waited for their ducking on the way to the Jordan, by an April shower.

On arrival at the Ford of the Jordan we found a nice lunch already prepared. After luncheon, in spite of the rain, some went for a boat ride on the Jordan, some stepped around in the mud, some took water from the Jordan in canteens, while others gathered together under the tent in order to keep dry. Finally the clouds lifted, the sun shone brightly, and we returned to Camp Jericho.

On Thursday, March 22, we broke camp, mounted our steeds and returned to Jerusalem by the way of Elisha's Spring. As Mt. Olivet appeared in the distance, we repeated the Traveler's Hymn, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord" (Psalm 121). As we neared Jerusalem, news reached us that one of our members, Captain Thomas Wilson, was very sick at the Grand New Hotel. On arrival, he was unconscious, and a few moments later it was announced that he was dead. A sad hour for our party, but who can measure the cup of woe experienced by his wife and children? Special prayer was offered for them Thursday evening, and on Sunday evening a memorial service was held.

On Monday, March 26, fifty pilgrims on horseback started on a camping tour through Palestine to Beirut, Syria. The cavalcade consisted of 79 horses, 61 mules, 10 donkeys, 34 muleteers, 14 horsemen, 12 waiters, 2 cooks, 2 assistant cooks, 2 dragomen, 3 helpers, and 1 conductor, Charles Zerilli, Cook's trusted agent, who takes the party through to England.

The fifty pilgrims on horseback and Mrs. Dr. Countermine, of Kansas, and Mrs. Dr. Young, of Matawan, N. J., in palanquins, were accommodated in camp by twenty-two beautiful tents (made for Emperor William and his party), two large dining tents and two lunch tents. At noon, as we approached our resting-place we saw two tents flying the American and British flags. On arrival we found a nice lunch ready and at sundown, as we entered camp, we found tents up and our baggage awaiting us.

At the hill Scopas, we took a parting view of Jerusalem. As we drew near to Bethel, Rev. Dr. Chapman and wife, Rev. Dr. Gregg, Rev. Dr. Blackburn, Rev. C. S. Mason, Miss Bierhouse of Vincennes, Ind., and Miss Cameron, of New York city, took a side trip to Ramallah where the Friend's Mission is located. Their schoolbuilding is a two-story one and is of stone. It is neat, airy and clean, and contains 26 scholars and 5 teachers. Here we found a Christian Endeavor society, composed of 23 members, 19 of whom are taking the C. E. Bible course studies.

A Leader Fallen

Dr. A. J. F. Behrends, of Brooklyn, Dies After a Career of Usefulness in Pulpit and Press

GRIEF, deep and widespread, has has been caused by the announcement of the death of Dr. A. J. F. Behrends, of Brooklyn, N. Y., which occurred on May 22. In the present stage of religious thought he was extraordinarily valuable as a writer and preacher, and his death is a loss to the churches. Dr. Behrends was a scholar of high standing; a man who could meet the assailants of orthodox theology on their own ground, and was able to expose the unsubstantial nature of the bases on which they constructed their forts of attack. He was a profound thinker and a terse and forcible speaker—a man of vigorous personality, with a clear conviction of the pertinency of the Gospel message to the need of our own times. The church has urgent need of such men at this time, and can ill afford to lose one of them.

THE LATE DR. A. J. F. BEHRENDS

Dr. Behrends was a native of Holland, and was in his sixty-first year. He came to this country with his parents when he was five years of age. He was living in Southern Ohio in 1857 when the great revival passed like a wave over the land. He was then eighteen years old, intelligent and well-read beyond most young men of his set. He was brought to Christ in that great harvest and united with a Baptist church. He almost immediately began to prepare for the ministry. Entering Denison University, he studied hard, and in 1862 he graduated and went to Rochester Theological Seminary for his divinity studies. In 1865 he graduated and the same year became pastor of the Baptist Church of Yonkers, N.Y. Thence, after eight years successful labor, he accepted a call from the First Baptist Church, of Cleveland, O. During his work there, his mind underwent a change which eventually led to a change in his denomination. In March, 1883, he accepted a call from the Central Congregational Church of Brooklyn, N. Y., and to the end of his life continued its revered and beloved pastor.

The immense congregations which filled the great edifice under Dr. Behrend's ministry were a testimony to his power as a preacher. It was no uncertain sound that came from that pulpit. A clear, forcible, logical presentation of the truth was made in a resonant voice, with the vigor and energy of a man who believed profoundly in the doctrines he enunciated.

Dr. Behrends did not confine his studies to theology. Philosophy, ethics, science and history were added to his critical reading of the Bible and theological works. This gave his sermons and books and lectures living interest and enriched them with illustrations and beautiful imagery. He was a hard worker both in his study and in his pastorate, and seemed to have a happy faculty of turning every hour of the day to account. One of his latest works, The Old Testament under Fire, showed how deeply he had delved in the literature of the time.

A GOOD COMPLEXION

Depends on Good Digestion.

This is almost an axiom, although usually e are apt to think that cosmetics, face pow-rs, lotions, fancy soaps, etc., are the secrets r securing a clear complexion. But all these e simply superficial assistants.
It is impossible to have a good complexion less the digestive organs perform their work operly; unless the stomach, by properly esting the food taken into it, furnishes an undance of pure blood, a good complexion impossible.
This is the reason so many ladies are using uart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they omptly relieve any stomach trouble, and ey have found out that perfect digestion eans a perfect complexion, and one that does t require cosmetics and powders to enhance beauty.
Many ladies diet themselves or deny them-ves many articles of food solely in order to ep their complexion clear. When Stuart's yspepsia Tablets are used no such dieting is cessary. Take these tablets and eat all the od wholesome food you want, and you need ve no fear of indigestion nor the sallow, ll complexion which nine women out of ten ve, solely because they are suffering from me form of indigestion.
Bear in mind that beauty proceeds from od health, good health results from perfect gestion and we have advanced the best gument to induce every man and woman to e this splendid remedy a trial.
Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found in ug stores and costs but 50 cents per package.
If there is any derangement of the stomach bowels they will remove it, and the resultant ects are good digestion, good health and a ar, bright complexion.

Mr. Oliver Salmons, of Glenfield, Lewis Co., N.Y., a veteran of Company K, of the Fifth New York Heavy Artillery, has reached the advanced age of 80 years and is enjoying the best of health, but to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People he owes both his health and longevity. He came out of the war with a weakened constitution and for twenty years suffered terribly from rhumatism, which led to other complications that threatened his life and it was at this critical time that the tide of disease was turned. The story as told by Mr. Salmons himself follows:

"Twenty years ago I was taken with rheumatism which was induced by exposure while in the army. Later this trouble was complicated by diabetes and my suffering was intense. There was an excruciating pain in my shoulders and limbs, also a darting pain in my back. I could not sleep or work on account of the pain.

"I was under the care of physicians and took their medicines but the treatment did me no good.

"About two years ago a friend living at Greig recommended that I try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and I did so. I had taken the pills but three or four days when I found that they gave me relief. The rheumatic pains ceased, and to my surprise I found that the pills were also relieving the diabetes. I took the pills for over a year and was entirely relieved of both troubles.

"I am now 80 years of age but am strong, have a good appetite and feel first class, all of which I attribute to the good qualities of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People."

Abiding in Christ*

The Vine and its Branches a Symbol of Union Between Christ and his People

VERY significant were the words addressed by Christ to his disciples, when we remember that they were uttered in the full knowledge of approaching death. They are not words of farewell, not the commands of a leader whom they were to see no more; but words implying perpetual union, a closer union than they had ever enjoyed or conceived. It is not the union of a teacher with his disciples, though that may be very close; nor the union of friend with friend, though that may be very intimate; but a union so vital that it is like the branches of a vine, which draw all their life from the stem and die if they are separated from it. It is that truth often forgotten, often obscured, which explains the survival of Christianity. The great artists have been fond of picturing Christ as a child or Christ on the cross, but neither conception truly represents the relation of Christ to his church. It is not the Christ in human form that we need to dwell upon, nor yet the Christ in some far-away heaven seated at the right hand of God; but a Christ living, present, so in touch with his people that they are dwelling in him, sustained by him and dependent on him for all they are and all they do. As there is no independent life in the branches of a vine, but only the essential life that reaches them through the stem, so the power and the love and the holiness of Christ pass into his people and make them Christlike.

How true this idea is, every thoughtful Christian must have realized, yet it is difficult to find any imagery adequate to express it. A feeble comparison may be found in a business relation. A merchant in New York, let us say, has long had profitable transactions in London. These have grown until he deems it wise to have an agency in that city. He accordingly sends his son, a mere lad, to open a London house and in future he will conduct the business. He has full power to act for his father and to represent him in all ways. It is easy to understand how he would be regarded. All his power would be derived from his father, all his business responsibility would rest upon his father; without his father's wealth and position he would be nothing. His business-standing abides in his father, and is dependent upon him. So the Christian's spiritual life depends on Christ, and without him he can do nothing. We cannot explain how it is, but we know it as a glorious, potent fact.

This truth suggests many considerations. The first is the process of emptying. He that would abide in Christ and would have Christ abide in him, must get rid of much that would make the union uncongenial. If a man were expecting his pure-minded mother to visit him and he was in the habit of associating with people of loose life, he would take care that none of them came to his house while she was in it. Their very presence would be an insult to her. So if the presence of Christ is desired in the heart, there must be no malignity there, no impatience, no evil desires or lusts. They must be expelled and Christ who pities us and knows how inadequate our strength is for this cleansing, gives us his own power. Abiding in him we draw strength from him for all that we need. Again there is the thought of fruit-bearing. That is what the vine is for. But how can we bear fruit? Christ knew our difficulty and answers. "The branch cannot bear fruit of itself." So with the divine life proceeding from him, the branch becomes productive. And then there is the solemn thought that thrills us with caution and holy fear: that if the branch does not abide in the vine it withers. Its life, the spiritual life that renders it useful, depends on its union. Then, too, the branches that do abide in the vine must expect pruning. They spread and trail and their exuberance looks beautiful, but the knife comes, some sharp discipline is applied and the branch looks maimed, but the motive for the cutting is not capricious: it is done for a purpose, "that it may bring forth more fruit."

IT IS quite generally believed, particularly by large consumers and practical painters, that Pure White Lead is the best paint. It is because of this belief that manufacturers of the so-called White Leads, mixtures of Whiting, Barytes and Zinc, brand them "White Lead," "Pure White Lead," etc., etc. You can avoid these by making sure that the brand is right.

FREE For colors use National Lead Company's Pure White Lead Tinting Colors. Any shade desired is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving full information and showing samples of Colors, also pamphlet entitled "Uncle Sam's Experience With Paints" forwarded upon application.

ABBEY'S SALT is pleasant—pleasant to take and pleasant in its effects. ABBEY'S SALT, which is made from the salts extracted from the juices of Fresh Fruits, will positively prevent Constipation, Dyspepsia, Torpid Liver, Biliousness, Flatulency, Unpleasant Breath, Sick Headache, or any of the evils which follow in the train of Constipation. Nothing else as good—nothing else like it! Thousands swear by it. Physicians endorse it. You should use it—at once!

ABBEY'S Effervescent SALT.

Dr. John Cooper, New York, states: "ABBEY'S SALT only requires to be known to be appreciated. Those to whom I have recommended it speak very highly of it."

Dr. John Hays, Cincinnati, O., states: "I have obtained excellent results from ABBEY'S SALT in cases of Constipation, and believe it is unequalled as a mild and efficient laxative."

ABBEY'S SALT is not only a Spring remedy, but as a remedy for the ills of Spring it is absolutely without an equal. ABBEY'S SALT is put up in three sizes. The 25c. size is the usual trial size; the 50c. size will relieve a severe case of Dyspepsia or Constipation; while the $1.00 size is the economical size.

ABBEY'S SALT is sold in drug-stores only, in many cities and towns, but if your druggist does not keep it, either size will be sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Artistic Monuments in White Bronze COST NO MORE THAN PLAIN ONES

Marble is entirely out of date. Granite soon gets moss-grown, discolored, requires constant expense and care, and eventually crumbles back to Mother Earth. Besides it is very expensive.

White Bronze is strictly everlasting. It cannot crumble with the action of frost. Moss-growth is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Then why not investigate it? It has been adopted for nearly one hundred public monuments. We have designs from $4.00 to $4,000.00. Write at once for free designs and information. It puts you under no obligations. We deal direct and deliver everywhere. Over $28,000 worth of work sold to Christian Herald readers in the last few years.

These Questions Will be Answered July 11

1. Which are the five most important bridges in the world?

2. What is the origin of the word "laconic" and its derivative, "laconism?"

3. In what respect was Cyrus the anointed of the Lord? We read in Isaiah 45:1: "Thus saith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus, whose right hand I have holden." Was Cyrus a good man?

4. Christ, speaking of the faith that removes mountains, adds, "Howbeit this kind goeth not forth but by prayer and fasting (Matt. 17:21). Does this mean literal prayer and abstinence from food?

5. Christ says: "When ye pray say, Lead us not into temptation." James says: "My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations." Why this difference in injunction between the Lord and one of his followers?

6. What is the latest computation as to the population of the earth and how is it divided among the continents and islands?

7. How may we harmonize God's three requirements as set forth in Micah 6:8, "to do justly, to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God" and Paul's answer to the jailer (Acts 26:32), as setting forth the way of salvation?

8. Is there any reason to believe that the twelve disciples of Christ raised the dead before their Master was crucified?

9. Since Porto Rico is now United States territory, is there any good reason why the same privileges enjoyed by the United States in general, should not be enjoyed by the people of that island?

10. Different authorities give different dates in Hebrew history. What are its leading dates from the call of Abraham to the birth of Christ, according to the best reputable authority?

Questions of the Week

1. What was the shortest year ever known in the history of this country and of England?

1751, which was about nine months long. In that year the English Parliament passed an act changing the beginning of the legal year from the latter part of March to January 1. This act gave January, February and March to 1752, which three months would otherwise have formed the last quarter of 1751. Nearly all other important European countries made this change earlier, so that, for many years previous to 1751, dates between Jauuary 1 and March 24 fell on a different year in England and her American colonies than in most other countries. GEO. S. DUNN.

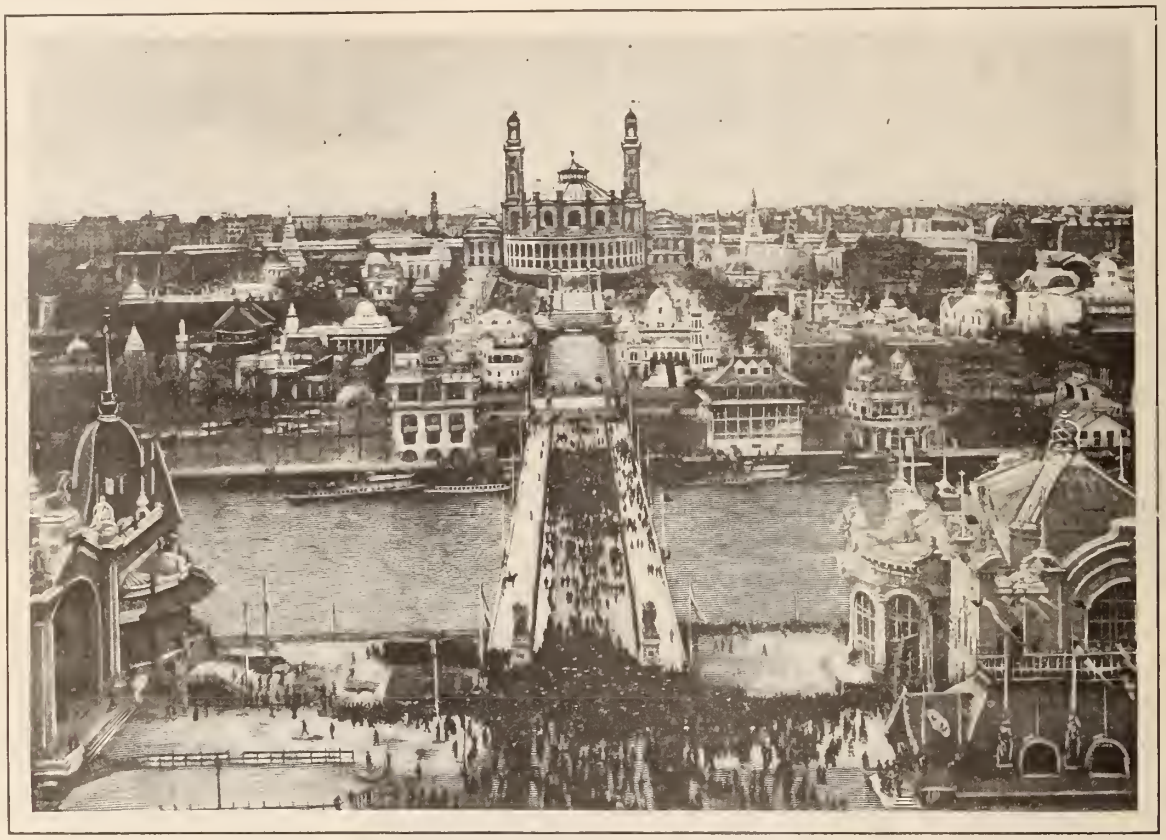
1752 was the next shortest year because, in order to reconcile the difference between the Gregorian and the English calendars, which amounted to eleven days, and to adopt the Gregorian calendar thereafter, Parliament ordered that the day following September 2d should be accounted the 14th of that month. Thus that year was robbed of eleven days.
EDITOR THE MAIL-BAG.

2. A young lady asks: "How may I, as a member of the Epworth League, best prepare myself to respond when called upon to pray? What helps, if any, may I properly use?"

Get your heart right with God. Read frequently the devotional part of the Bible. Pray much in secret. Study well the lesson of the week, and get your mind full of the subject. Then pray as the Spirit gives you utterance. You will under such circumstances experience little difficulty in praying, and your prayer will be to the point, and will prove helpful to you and inspiring to others. W. P. ANDREWS.

3. When did the custom of burying the dead with their head towards the West originate, and what was the reason for the custom?

The earliest Christian churches faced eastward. Baptism was also performed with the face toward the east; and it became a recognized custom in burials to place the feet toward the east or their heads toward the west. There are various reasons assigned by the early writers for this turning toward the east. Tertullian says that since people must worship toward some quarter of the heavens, they chose that which led them to Christ by symbolical representation. Furthermore, the east was considered the most honored part of the creation, the source of light and brightness, the scene of Christ's birth, of his ministry and his ascension, as it will be the scene of his second coming. The dead were accordingly so buried, that on rising at the resurrection, they might immediately face the scene of Christ's glory. VISTA MCDONALD.



THE INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION, PARIS, FROM THE SEINE

This photograph was taken from the celebrated Eiffel Tower, toward the Trocadero, and shows the crowds of spectators. The view presents the bewildering display of buildings in and around the Exposition with their noble towers, domes and graceful minarets.

4. Should the efforts of our missionaries be confined to giving the Gospel to the "heathen," or should the work be so far extended as to give the "heathen," in addition to the Gospel, the educational benefits of our own land?

The testimony of the missionaries is that education wonderfully helps Christianity. Among other things said at the recent Missionary Conference in New York were these: "Only education can overcome the gravitating pull upon the converted heathen of old superstitious ideas of nature and the world." "The best converts we have are those who have enjoyed the benefits of secular education."
S. E. GEDDS.

5. Is there anything inconsistent with a Christian's membership in a secret society?

It depends upon the character of the society, on the nature of its oath, on its motives, purposes and rules, and upon the attitude its Christian members come to assume towards Christ's Church and towards the world outside the secret society. If selfish exclusiveness is inculcated, or the object of the society is illegal or is contrary to the principles of Christianity, then Christians cannot too emphatically decline to have anything to do with it. One need not be any less of a Christian because he is a member of some secret organizations. The suggestion that Christ's words, "In secret have I said nothing," are intended against secret organizations is wrong. Christ said things in secret to his disciples on certain occasions. By the words quoted he means that his doctrines had been propounded in public. There was nothing held back that could possibly affect his state as a prisoner under arrest (see John 18:19). S. FORD.

6. Admitting that it would be well to have uniform marriage and divorce laws throughout the country, by what means may we most reasonably hope to secure such laws?

By means of the pulpit, the platform and the press, so that the people may be influenced. National, state, congressional, district and municipal organizations of workers will be needed. National and State legislators must be so constantly and urgently besieged in favor of uniformity in marriage and divorce laws that their co-operation will be assured. Once such a course is adopted, hundreds of valuable suggestions will make themselves heard. R. T. HARRIS.

7. Is it right to use intoxicants as medicine?

If any substitute is possible, no! If medical skill decides that no substitution is possible, then yes. Fortunately, our physicians are using less and less intoxicants in their remedies every year. A long-buried taste for alcoholic drinks has frequently been resurrected or an original taste for them created by the use during sickness of intoxicants, for which non-intoxicant remedies might have been substituted. E. HEYWOOD.

8. What is the Christian duty of a wife and mother as to the support of her family, when she is married to a man who is physically and mentally able to support them, but refuses to do so?

It is her duty to support her children so far as she is able, while seeking by word of mouth and by example to persuade her husband to do his duty. If any of her children are old enough to earn something toward the family's support, the mother is certainly justified in deciding whether to put the children at work or not. If the man has means, the wife should seek by legal methods to secure an allowance from him when all other efforts to persuade cease to move him. M. A. BROWN.

9. Who was the author of the Golden Rule and whence its name?

To Confucius and others the negative sentiment of the golden rule is attributed: "Do not unto others what you would that others should not do to you." Christ's rule is both positive and negative: "Do" and "Do not." Morever, Christ gives us the power to fulfil this law, as no other teacher ever did or could. It is called golden, because of its high character and worth. H. A. WISE.

10. How can we make our free land laws more actively operative in reducing the pauper population of our great cities?

By colonization: dividing tracts of land into equal portions, and combining farming and village life, agriculture and manufacture. A community thus situated, who would agree to love and help each other, very soon would learn "how not to be poor." One square mile of land can be so divided that thirty-two families may obtain a comfortable living from the products of it. The cost for land, stock, tenements and utensils, together with six months' or even one year's provision need not exceed $25,000, the interest of which, at five per cent., would be less than $40 a year for each family. WM. H. PRITCHETT.

Miscellaneous Questions

W. S. R., LeRoy, N. Y. Is it right to hold political meetings in the church under the guise of temperance?

It must depend wholly on the conditions of the case. We can readily conceive of circumstances which make it incumbent upon a faithful pastor to take active cognizance of political conditions, as when a community is struggling to rid itself of the rule of men who are prostituting public office and outraging all decency by their notorious acts. Such conditions might well furnish themes for the pulpit. On the other hand, the pastor who drags partizan politics into his church, not for the purpose of serving God or the people, but merely to make capital for a particular set of politicians, degrades his sacred office and does not rightly comprehend his calling.

W. A. M., Cincinnati, O. Can a lawyer live a Christian life and be a Christian?

He can, decidedly, and many of the ablest lawyers have been distinguished for their Christianity. In its true sense, "law is the perfection of reason" (Sir Edmund Coke). "Our human laws are but the imperfect copies of the eternal laws, so far as we can read them." "Nothing is law that is not reason" (Sir John Powell). Law is defined as "a system of rules and regulations recognized by men and nations as giving them intercourse." From the time of Moses, the great law-giver, until now, the making of laws has been one of the most honored and most important of public functions. Like all other professions, however, that of the law is crowded with charlatans, and it is often degraded to the level of a mercenary, conscienceless calling. The Christian lawyer has to encounter this mercenary spirit everywhere, even in practice before the highest courts. To stand such a test successfully his Christianity must be of a very stanch type, indeed. It is the degradation of a noble profession by the class referred to that has given the law a reputation for trickery and chicanery that is not deserved.

J. S. J., Baltimore. Is there anything in the teachings of the Christian religion opposed to cremation of the body after death instead of burial?

The early Christians invariably buried their dead, although the practice of cremation prevailed very generally throughout the Roman Empire. The Christians (as Eusebius, Augustine, and Jerome have explained), regarded the body of the believer as an instrument or vessel of which the Holy Spirit had made use, and this view together with their faith in the resurrection doubtless led to the adoption of interment. While there is no special injunction in the Scriptures against cremation, the Christian view as to the most suitable method of disposing of the body remains unchanged and the custom of interment is universal in Christian lands.

H. L., Radnor, O. Write to Biglow & Main, publishers, N. Y.

F. J. R., Schenectady, N. Y. Send to the Smithsonian Institute, Washington, D. C.

H. C., Kansas. Write to the Congressman from your district for all information on the subject.

Seeker of the Truth, Salem, N. J. Yes, it was so in the days of Moses, but not now. See Matt. 10:32; Luke 6:47 and 12:8; John 3:15, 16, and 12:46, and 6:37; also Rom. 9:33, and 10:11, and 10:13.

J. F. B., Del Rey, Calif. 1. We have no data on the subject. 2. The characterization of Mr. Sheldon's book to which you refer is wholly unjust. 3. Yes. 4. No. The whole question is one for the individual conscience.

Luanna A. B., Harwinton, Conn. We know of no special legislation against chain letters, but they are regarded almost universally as a nuisance and such correspondence, being used by swindlers, has sometimes been stopped in the mails by the Postal authorities.

W. I., C., Port Hope, Mich. We think you do right in taking exercise and all needful measures to ensure vigorous health. To neglect these precautions and to permit yourself to degenerate physically is in itself a sin. The body should be kept in the best condition possible to enable the individual to perform the duties before him faithfully and to the best extent of his ability.

They Minister to Soul and Body

A NOTABLE GATHERING OF MEDICAL MISSIONARIES FROM MANY LANDS IN CONFERENCE IN NEW YORK

ONE of the most interesting and impressive meetings of the recent Ecumenical Missionary Conference in New York was the gathering of medical missionaries at a reception and luncheon in Calvary Baptist Church. A number of them were induced to stay for a few minutes at the doors of the church in order that a photograph of a group might be taken. That photograph, through the kindness of Dr. Geo. D. Dowkontt, who arranged the reception, we are able to publish on this page. Deeply significant is the picture, and one of inestimable value. A few months ago the men and women which compose that group were widely scattered over the earth's surface. Some of them were in India, others in China, others in Japan, others in Turkey, others in various parts of Africa. From their fields of labor they came to New York for a few days, and after a brief rest they will soon be dispersed again, probably never more to be brought together in this world. It was well that such an assembly should not separate without a permanent pictorial record being made. They are the successors of the little band whom Jesus sent forth "to preach the kingdom of God and to heal the sick." They are rendering a double service to the people of heathen lands, and in ministering at once to soul and body are bestowing a benediction of life as well as of immortality on the benighted people.

None know so well as these missionaries how true is the Scripture that the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty. It was the sight of what the sick people of heathen lands have to endure at the hands of pretenders to the ministry of healing, that led the men and women who were there preaching the Gospel to gain a medical education, so that they might at least alleviate some of the suffering. They found that the remedies in vogue would have been simply ludicrous, if it had not been that they entailed agony and often death on the poor patient. In Corea, for example, the regular prescription for anæmia, is a jelly made from the bones of a man recently killed. For catarrh, boiled chips from a coffin that has been let down into the grave. In China, where diseases of the eye are prevalent, the usual treatment is the application of a lotion concocted from boiled monkey's feet, pork and alcohol. In India, the same disease is treated by putting in the eyes a powder composed of a donkey's tooth ground and mixed with charcoal. In Africa, resort is usually had, in cases of sickness to the witch-doctor, whose business is to find out the person who has bewitched the sufferer and to exorcise the demon who is afflicting him. Incantations, horrible noises with drums, and the most revolting cruelties to the sick person are adopted. Diseases which might be cured by simple remedies, were aggravated by these horrible devices, and many died, while others lingered in life-long suffering.

Already at the beginning of the nineteenth century the knowledge of the bitter need of heathendom had led two famous missionaries—John Thomas, an Englishman, and Theodore Vanderkemp, a Dutchman—to make a study of pathology that they might render help to the bodies as well as save the souls of the people in their respective fields. A decade later Pearson, of China, had qualified as a physician, but Thomas was dead, so that then there were only two medical missionaries in the world. In 1820 the number had not increased, for though Dr. John Scudder had gone out two years before, Dr. Vanderkemp had been summoned to his reward. In the fourth decade ten medical missionaries were sent out—eight from Great Britain and two from the United States. In 1850 the number had grown to thirty-nine. The churches had begun to realize the advantages of combining the two functions of the missionaries, and more of the missionaries had perceived the value to them in their work of a knowledge of medicine. Many of them came back to study in our medical colleges, and many of the new men postponed their departure until they had taken a medical degree. Thus from year to year the number grew until at the present day it is estimated that fully seven hundred men and women who have passed a medical examination are now laboring in the foreign field.

Several organizations have been founded to aid in this beneficent work of training prospective or actual missionaries for medical work. In 1841, chiefly through the efforts of Dr. Peter Parker, the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society was organized. In 1878 a similar society was formed in London and in 1881 Dr. Geo. D. Dowkontt organized a society in New York. Other institutions working mainly through regularly constituted medical colleges have been founded to aid missionaries in securing a medical education. From all of them men have gone to heathen lands, with their double means of blessing. Not a few, after years of beneficent labor, have laid down their lives. Among those whom Dr. Dowkontt assisted in training in his New York institution were Dr. Sumner, who died in Africa, and Dr. Hall, who went to Corea and on the battlefields of that country devoted himself so compietely to the succoring of the sick and wounded that his own health broke down and he died before he could be brought home. A list of the consecrated men and women who have thus laid down their lives was hung on the walls of the building in which the medical missionaries met in New York, and the list which was by no means complete, contained over one hundred names. Of these fifty-four were natives of Great Britain, fifty of the United States, three of Canada and eight of various European lands. One hundred and eight were men and seven were women. They died in China, India, Africa, South America and the islands of the Pacific; their bones now lie among the people for whom they labored; silent memorials of the love with which Christ fills the hearts of his people.

In the group shown in the photograph are many whose names have long been famous in missionary annals. Dr. R. H. Nassau has a triple distinction. As a missionary preacher in Northwest Africa his work was most successful; as a physician he did a grand and beneficent work, and finally his services in translating the Word of God into the language of the people were of inestimable value. Dr. Sophie E. Johnson's work has been done at Jhelum, India. Dr. F. P. Lynch has labored on the Congo; Dr. A. C. Bunn in China; Dr. and Mrs. Luther in Burmah; Dr. Mary P. Eddy in Syria and Turkey, the only woman who ever held the Sultan's license to practice medicine in his dominions. Dr. Pauline Root's field is Madura, India; Dr. Borchgrevink's, Madagascar. Dr. Mary Bryan and Dr. Orissa Gould are from India, as is also Dr. E. Sargood Fry. Dr. Clinton F. Rife is from Micronesia, Dr. O. R. Avison from Corea, and Mrs. F. Krecker from Japan. Truly a noble gathering of men and women whose lives are consecrated to the two grandest of all occupations—those of ministering to sufferers in body and pointing the way of salvation to all who are afflicted in soul. There are many spheres in which such men and women might have won more fame and certainly many in which they could have accumulated more money; but when they enter the presence of their Master, in whose steps they tread, we cannot conceive of any of his servants who will be more cordially welcomed.

This Year at Northfield

THE Northfield Conferences of 1900 will be marked by two prominent features among the many that year by year have served to make these meetings the powerful and inspiring occasions they have proved.

First will be the missionary feature. This has long been an essential part of the Student and Young Women's Conferences, especially June 29 to July 23. It was at Northfield that the Student Volunteer Missionary uprising began. To Northfield have come some of the leading missionary workers from all parts of the world. This year, four of the veteran missionary heroes of the world will bring to the Conference the weight of an average experience of fifty years of service—an aggregate of two hundred years of missionary work—Rev. J. G. Paton, from the New Hebrides; Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, from China; Dr. William Ashmore, from China; Dr. Jacob Chamberlain, from India. Coming for the Student Conference, June 29 to July 9, these missionaries will remain for the Young Women's Conference, July 13-23.

The second characteristic will be a Memorial one. Of the many classes affected by Mr. D. L. Moody's influence none felt it more powerfully and enduringly than the Student class. The memory of Mr. Moody's relations with them as a friend and advisor-general in Christian service will be evident in these Conferences. Not with depressing effect, but with power to move to deeper self surrender and intenser activity in service. Leading Christian workers have been engaged as speakers.

The city, town and Railroad Associations of the Eastern United States and Canada will hold a Conference during the dates June 29 to July 9. This Conference will unite with the Student Conference in the morning and evening platform-meetings in the auditorium. Some of the topics to be considered are:

1. The need of more of the evangelistic spirit among our associations. 2. Hindrances to a mighty work of God among the young men of our communities. 3. The master passion of Mr. Moody's life and its message to the associations of to-day. 4. The prayer life of the Apostolic Church. 5. The power of the Spirit of God in Christian life and service. 6. Obedience to the last command of Christ.

Accommodations during this time may be secured at the Northfield Hotel and in Northfield itself for others than delegates, to whom the privileges of the platform and Round Top meetings are open.

The Seminary Buildings are used for Conference guests during the General Conference for Christian Workers in August. "Camp Northfield" will open June 28, and with enlarged accommodations offer again an inviting outing-place whither young men may come for part or all of their vacation.

Red Letter Days

DEAR EDITOR:—I am very much pleased with the Red Letter Testament. The red lettering is as attractive as a series of illustrations. My children are constantly looking at it. Parents, if you want to mark a "red-letter day" in the lives of your children, get them a Red Letter Testament.

Bestormed Galilee

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Mark 4: 39: . . . . .

And he arose and rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still.

THERE in Capernaum, the seashore village, was the temporary home of that Christ who for the most of his life was homeless. On the site of this village, now in ruins, and all around this lake, what scenes of kindness and power and glory and pathos when our Lord lived here! I can understand the feeling of the immortal Scotchman, Robert McCheyne, when, sitting on the banks of this lake, he wrote:

It is not that the wild gazelle
Comes down to drink thy tide,
But he that was pierced to save from hell,
Oft wandered by thy side.

Graceful around thee the mountains meet,
Thou calm reposing sea;
But ah! far more, the beautiful feet
Of Jesus walked o'er thee.

I can easily understand from the contour of the country that bounds this lake that storms were easily tempted to make these waters their playground. This lake, in Christ's time, lay in a scene of great luxuriance: the surrounding hills, terraced, sloped, groved; so many hanging gardens of beauty. On the shore were castles, armed towers, Roman baths, everything attractive and beautiful—all styles of vegetation in smaller space than in almost any other space in the world, from the palm-tree of the forest to the trees of rigorous climate. It seemed as if the Lord had launched one wave of beauty on all the scene, and it hung and swung from rock and hill and oleander. Roman gentlemen in pleasure-boats sailing this lake, and countrymen in fishing-smacks coming down to drop their nets, pass each other with nod and shout and laughter, or swinging idly at their moorings. Oh, what a beautiful scene!

It seems as if we shall have a quiet night. Not a leaf quivered in the air; not a ripple disturbed the face of Gennesaret; but there seems to be a little excitement up the beach, and we hasten to see what it is, and we find it an embarkation. From the western shore a flotilla pushing out; not a squadron of deadly armament, nor clipper with valuable merchandise, nor piratic vessels ready to destroy everything they could seize, but a flotilla, bearing messengers of light and life and peace. Christ is in the stern of the boat. His disciples are in the bow and amidships. Jesus, weary with much speaking to large multitudes, is put into somnolence by the rocking of the waves. If there was any motion at all, the ship was easily righted; if the wind passed from starboard to larboard, or from larboard to starboard, the boat would rock, and by the gentleness of the motion putting the Master asleep. And they extemporized a pillow made out of a fisherman's coat. I think no sooner is Christ prostrate, and his head touched the pillow, than he is sound asleep. The breezes of the lake run their fingers through the locks of the worn sleeper, and the boat rises and falls like a sleeping child on the bosom of a sleeping mother.

Calm night, starry night, beautiful night! Run up all the sails, ply all the oars, and let the large boat and the small boat glide over gentle Gennesaret. But the sailors say there is going to be a change of weather. And even the passengers can hear the moaning of the storm as it comes on with great stride, and all the terrors of hurricane and darkness. The large boat trembles like a deer at bay among the clangor of the hounds; great patches of foam are flung into the air; the sails of the vessel loosen, and in the strong wind crack like pistols; the smaller boats, like petrels, poise on the cliffs of the waves and then plunge. Overboard go cargo, tackling and masts, and the drenched disciples rush into the back part of the boat and lay hold of Christ, and say unto him: "Master, carest thou not that we perish?" That great Personage lifts his head from the pillow of the fisherman's coat, walks to the front of the vessel, and looks out into the storm. All around him are the smaller boats, driven in the tempest, and through it comes the cry of drowning men. By the flash of the lightning I see the calm brow of Christ as the spray dropped from his beard. He has one word for the sky and another for the waves. Looking upward, he cries: "Peace!" Looking downward, he says: "Be still!" The waves fall flat on their faces, the foam melts, the extinguished stars relight their torches. The tempest falls dead, and Christ stands with his foot on the neck of the storm. And while the sailors are bailing out the boats, and while they are trying to untangle the cordage, the disciples stand in amazement, now looking into the calm sea, then into the calm sky, then into the calm Saviour's countenance, and they cry out: "What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him?"

The subject, in the first place, impresses me with the fact that it is very important to have Christ in the ship; for all those boats would have gone to the bottom of Gennesaret if Christ had not been present. Oh, what a lesson for you and for me to learn! Whatever voyage we undertake, into whatever enterprise we start, let us always have Christ in the ship. All you can do with utmost tension of body, mind and soul, you are bound to do; but, oh! have Christ in every enterprise.

There are men who ask God's help at the beginning of great enterprises. He has been with them in the past; no trouble can overthrow them; the storms might come down from the top of Mount Hermon, and lash Gennesaret into foam and into agony, but it could not hurt them. But here is another man who starts out in worldly enterprise, and he depends upon the uncertainties of this life. He has no God to help him. After a while the storm comes, tosses off the masts of the ship; he puts out his life-boat and the long-boat: the sheriff and the auctioneer try to help him off; they can't help him off; he must go down—no Christ in the ship. Your life will be made up of sunshine and shadows. There may be in it arctic blasts or tropical tornadoes; I know not what is before you, but I know if you have Christ with you, all shall be well. You may seem to get along without the religion of Christ while everything goes smoothly, but after a while, when sorrow hovers over the soul, when the waves of trial dash clear over the hurricane-deck, and the decks are crowded with piratical disasters—oh, what would you do then without Christ in the ship? Take God for your portion, God for your guide, God for your help: then all is well; all is well for time, all shall be well forever. Blessed is that man who puts in the Lord his trust. He shall never be confounded.

But my subject also impresses me with the fact that when people start to follow Christ they must not expect smooth sailing. These disciples got into the small boats, and I have no doubt they said: "What a beautiful day this is! How delightful is sailing in this boat! And as for the waves under the keel of the boat, why, they only make the motion of our little boat the more delightful." But when the winds swept down and the sea was tossed into wrath, then they found that following Christ was not smooth sailing. So you have found it; so I have found it.

Did you ever notice the end of the life of the apostles of Jesus Christ? You would say if ever men ought to have had a smooth life, a smooth departure, then those men, the disciples of Jesus Christ, ought to have had such a departure and such a life. St. James lost his head. St. Philip was hung to death on a pillar. St. Matthew had his life dashed out with a halbert. St. Mark was dragged to death through the streets. St. James the Less was beaten to death with a fuller's club. St. Thomas was struck through with a spear. They did not find following Christ smooth sailing. Oh, how they were all tossed in the tempest! John Huss in a fire; Hugh McKail in the hour of martyrdom; the Albigenses, the Waldenses, the Scotch Covenanters—did they find it smooth sailing? But why go into history when we can draw from our own memory illustrations of the truth of what I say? A young man in a store trying to serve God, while his employer scoffs at Christianity; the young men in the same store, antagonistic to the Christian religion, teasing him, tormenting him about his religion, trying to get him mad. They succeed in getting him mad, and say: "You're a pretty Christian!" Does that young man find it smooth sailing when he tries to follow Christ? All who would live the life of the Christian religion must suffer persecution; if you do not find it in one way, you will get it in another way. But be not disheartened! Take courage. You are in a glorious companionship. God will see you through all trials, and he will deliver you.

My subject also impresses me with the fact that good people sometimes get frightened. In the tones of these disciples as they rushed into the back part of the boat, I find they are frightened almost to death. They say, "Master, carest thou not that we perish?" In all ages very good people get very much affrighted. It is often so in our day, and men say, "Why, look at the bad lectures; look at the various errors going over the Church of God; we are going to founder; the Church is going to perish; she is going down." Oh, how many good people are affrighted by iniquity in our day, and think the Church of Jesus Christ is going to be overthrown, and are just as much affrighted as were the disciples of my text. Don't worry, don't fret, as though iniquity were going to triumph over righteousness. A lion goes into a cavern to sleep. He lies down with his shaggy mane covering the paws. Meanwhile the spiders spin a web across the mouth of the cavern and say, "We have captured him." Gossamer thread after gossamer thread, until the whole front of the cavern is covered with the spider's web, and the spiders say: "The lion is done; the lion is fast." After a while the lion has got through sleeping; he rouses himself, he shakes his mane, he walks out into the sunlight; he does not even know the spider's web is spun, and with his roar he shakes the mountain. So men come spinning their sophistries and scepticism about Jesus Christ; he seems to be sleeping. They say: "We have captured the Lord; he will never come forth again upon the nation;" Christ is overcome forever. His religion will never make any conquest among men." But after a while the Lion of the tribe of Judah will rouse himself, and come forth to shake mightily the nations. What's a spider's web to the aroused lion? Give truth and error a fair grapple, and truth will come off victor.

But there are a great many good people who get affrighted in other respects; they are affrighted about revivals. They say: "Oh! this is a strong religious gale; we are afraid the Church of God is going to be upset, and there are going to be a great many people brought into the church that are going to be of no use to it;" and they are affrighted whenever they see a revival taking hold of the churches. As though a ship captain, with five thousand bushels of wheat for a cargo, should say some day, coming upon deck: "Throw overboard all the cargo!" and the sailors should say, "Why, captain, what do you mean? Throw over all the cargo?" "Oh," says the captain, "we have a peck of chaff that has got into this five thousand bushels of wheat, and the only way to get rid of the chaff is to throw all the wheat overboard." Now, that is a great deal wiser than the talk of many Christians who want to throw overboard all the thousands and tens of thousands of souls who are the subjects of revivals. Throw all overboard because they are brought into the kingdom of God through great revivals, because there is a peck of chaff, a quart of chaff, a pint of chaff! I say, let them stay until the last day; the Lord will divide the chaff from the wheat.

Do not be afraid of a great revival. Oh that such gales from heaven might sweep through all our churches! Oh for such days as Richard Baxter saw in England, and Robert McCheyne saw in Dundee! Oh for such days as Jonathan Edwards saw in Northampton! I have often heard my father tell of the fact that in the early part of this century there broke out a revival at Somerville, N. J., and some people were very much agitated about it. They said: "You are going to bring too many people into the church at once;" and they sent down to New Brunswick to get John Livingston to stop the revival. Well, there was no better soul in all the world than John Livingston. He went and looked at the revival; they wanted him to stop it. He stood in the pulpit on the Lord's Day, and looked over the solemn auditory, and he said: "This, brethren, is the work of God; beware how you try to stop it." "Well," said the people after the service, "I guess you had better send Livingston home; he is making the revival worse." Oh for gales from heaven to sweep all the continents! The danger of the Church of God is not in revivals.

Again, my subject impressed me with the fact that Jesus was God and man in the same being. Here he is in the back part of the boat. Oh how tired he looks! what sad dreams he must have! Look at his countenance; he must be thinking of the cross to come. Look at him; he is a man—bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh. Tired, he falls asleep; he is a man. But then I find Christ at the prow of the boat; I hear him say: "Peace, be still;" and I see the storm kneeling at his feet, and the tempests folding their wings in his presence; he is a God. If I have sorrow and trouble, and want sympathy, I go and kneel down at the back part of the boat, and say: "O Christ! weary One of Gennesaret, sympathize with all my sorrows, Man of Nazareth! Man of the Cross!" A Man, a Man! But if I want to conquer my spiritual foes, if I want to get the victory over sin, death and hell, I come to the front of the boat, and I kneel down, and I say: "O Lord Jesus Christ, thou who didst hush the tempest, hush all my grief, hush all my temptation, hush all my sin!"

I learn once more from this subject that Christ can hush a tempest. It did seem as if everything must go to ruin. The disciples had given up the idea of managing the ship; the crew were entirely demoralized; yet Christ rises, and the storm crouches at his feet. Oh yes! Christ can hush the tempest. You have had trouble. Perhaps it was the little child taken away from you—the sweetest child of the household, the one who asked the most curious questions, and stood around you with the greatest fondness, and the spade cut down through your bleeding heart. Perhaps it was an only son, and your heart has ever since been like a desolated castle; the owls of the night hooting among the fallen arches and the crumbling stairways. Or all your property swept away, you said: "I had so much bank stock, I had so many Government securities, I had so many houses, I had so many farms—all gone, all gone." Why, sir, all the storms that ever trampled with their thunders, all the shipwrecks, have not been worse than this to you. Yet you have not been completely overthrown. Why? Christ says: "I have that little one in my keeping. I can care for him as well as you can, better than you can, O bereaved mother!" Hushing the tempest. When your property went away, God said: "There are treasures in heaven in banks that never break." Jesus hushing the tempest.

There is one storm into which we will all have to run. The moment when we let go of this world and try to take hold of the next, we will want all the grace possible. Yonder I see a Christian soul rocking on the surges of death: all the powers of darkness seem let out against that soul—the swirling wave, the thunder of the sky, the shriek of the wind, all seem to unite together; but that soul is not troubled; there is no sighing, there are no tears; plenty of tears in the room at the departure, but he weeps no tears—calm, satisfied, and peaceful; all is well. By the flash of the storm you see the harbor just ahead, and you are making for that harbor. All shall be well, Jesus being our pilot.

Into the harbor of heaven now we glide;
We're home at last, home at last.
Softly we drift on the bright, silv'ry tide,
We're home at last.
Glory to God! all our dangers are o'er,
We stand secure on the glorified shore;
Glory to God! we will shout evermore,
We're home at last.

EXTERIOR OF THE ROYAL PALACE AT PEKIN

CHINA'S REIGN OF TERROR

The "Boxer" Hordes Overrunning the Empire, and Slaying Foreigners
The Powers Land Troops to Protect the Embassies ... Missionaries in Peril

STARTLING news comes from China. The rebellious faction, known as "The Boxers," who lately took the field in force and defeated the government troops, are now marching upon Pekin, the capital. The rebels have an immense army, which is reported to be constantly growing in numbers. They have announced their determination to slay or drive every foreigner out of China. As there are many missionaries, including a number of Americans, in the districts where the disturbances are now going on, it is feared that they may have fared badly at the hands of the fanatical hordes who constitute the rebel army. Hundreds of refugees are arriving at Pekin, where they are seeking the protection of the foreign consulates. The British and Belgian engineers on the Luhan Railway are in imminent peril, and a party of Belgians and French was surrounded by over four hundred Boxers south of Tien-Tsin; nine were killed. Many railroad cars, tracks and depots have been destroyed, and native employees murdered. In view of the serious nature of the situation, the Diplomatic Corps at Pekin has called for immediate assistance from the various governments, and the United States, Great Britain, Germany, Russia, France and Japan have promptly ordered their warships now in Chinese waters to land marines at Tien-Tsin, the port of Pekin, for the protection of their respective embassies and of the lives and property of foreigners in China generally. Japan was the first power to land a force of marines. A French gunboat and two German warships at Taku also made arrangements to take similar action. The United States cruiser Newark also landed a force, and Rear-Admiral Kempf made her the flagship of the United States Asiatic Squadron, which has at the present time a powerful fleet in Asiatic waters.

Meanwhile, the most disturbing rumors are reaching Pekin. It is reported that a number of Belgians at Feng Tai have been cut off by the Boxers, and that a party of missionaries at Pao Ting Fu are also among the victims of the rebels. A Church of England missionary named Stevenson is reported killed and another named Norman has been made prisoner. It is greatly feared that the Boxers, whose motto is "Death to all foreigners," will not hesitate to deal with the missionaries as they have lately dealt with the native Christians, unless relief quickly comes. United States Minister Conger, our representative at Pekin, has cabled the State Department at Washington, that the Boxers are now threatening Pekin; that all the foreign legations are guarded; and that nine Methodist converts have been murdered at Pa Chow. He will only use our naval forces for defensive purposes and will act independently of other nations. Other advices indicate a probability of the fall of Pekin, should an attack by the rebels be made in sufficient force, as the imperial troops in the capital are demoralized. Russia is preparing to send a force of Russian troops to Pekin from Port Arthur. All the governments having important interests at stake will soon be represented by powerful fleets of warships in Chinese waters, awaiting events.

It is understood throughout the empire that the Dowager Empress is favorable to the Boxers, and that the formidable rebellion has been inspired from a source very near to the throne itself. Their Chinese name is I Ho Ch'uan, "the Fist of Righteous Harmony Society." At first anti-Roman Catholic, they soon became broadly anti-Christian and are now anti-foreign.

Great impetus has been given to the movement owing to the defeat of the government troops by the Boxers. The young Emperor was under the influence of Kang Yu Wei, an ardent reformer, who had a small but influential following among literary men. Kang preached China for the Chinese. He was a great student of Confucius, and believed that the best part of Western civilization could be grafted on to Confucianism. As much as any conservative Chinaman, he wished to get rid of all foreigners, but he said: "Keep them as long as they have anything to teach us, and then shove them out."

Under these conditions the foreign Powers, although desiring reforms in China, could not welcome Kang and his party in power, because in the end it would have meant the loss of such treaty rights and concessions as they had already forced from the Chinese government.

Then the Empress Dowager plotted to get the power into her own hands. Kang saw this and persuaded the young Emperor to take measures to defeat his mother's designs. The Emperor summoned General Yuan Shi Kai to Pekin, in order to ensure control of the Empress Dowager and force her to submit to the reforms which he proposed to carry out. The General, however, decided to cast in his lot with the Empress Dowager and she was soon informed of her son's conduct, which in China, where parents are worshiped, was a great sin. The Empress Dowager therefore confronted the Emperor and charged him with his misdeeds which he promptly and with tears confessed. She at once deprived him of all power and has since governed the empire herself.

The advisers of the Empress Dowager are bitter anti-foreigners. They claim that all China's troubles have come from outsiders and they would gladly surrender the benefits of foreign trade in order to get rid of the hated foreigners. This fact explains the lack of energetic measures by the government to supress the Boxers.

Each band of the Boxers is conducted by a "demonized" leader, who by the selection of an epileptic patient or by the aid of hypnotism, causes a medium to display wild and unnatural symptoms, or to utter wild and strange speech, this serving as a basis for the claim of the society to spiritual power. Soon the Boxers were drilling in hundreds of villages and were armed with broadswords and in some cases with firearms. Natives in both Catholic and Protestant churches were the first sufferers. Hundreds of native families were rendered homeless, many were killed, and in December last, in one district alone, the homes of two hundred families were looted and burned, all property confiscated and the victims forced to flee. Some were captured and held for ransom, while others were taken to temples and forced to kneel before heathen idols, but most of them were sheltered by missionaries.

Should each of the strong European powers decide to get all it can in China, the peace of the whole world might be threatened. God's people need now, more than ever, to make China a subject of special, earnest prayer, that out of the present troubles Divine wisdom and power may bring great good, and that China may yet discard her idols and be brought to acknowledge the true God.

Glimpses of Royalty off Duty

Emperors, Kings, Queens and Princes as they Appear in Citizen Roles

SEE ILLUSTRATIONS ON FIRST PAGE

MUCH as we may be attracted by the pomp of royalty, there is a stronger attraction in the every-day life and engagements of emperors, kings and princes, and their consorts; and the following glimpses of the home side of some of the best-known crowned heads of to day will find thousands of interested readers. It is the other side, the everyday, the home, the real life of these crowned heads and royalties that would attract the most attentive scrutiny.

The Prince of Wales is at his best at Sandringham, upon his private estate, where he is practically the unaffected country gentleman. Some newspaper men wrote to his private secretary for permission to view the stud there. They never expected that the prince would invite more than half a dozen at a time, but after glancing at the names, he handed the letter back to his secretary, saying: "Oh, let all come and make them welcome." Both the prince and princess are good riders and fond of horses. They are also great lovers of dogs. The prime favorite, however, is a wee Dandie Dinmont terrier, which belonged to their son, the late Duke of Clarence and is now taken care of by the prince himself. In private the lives of these people are very quiet and regular indeed, much like that of the average citizen.

Although the prince is said to be the most photographed personage in the world, his imperial nephew, Emperor William, of Germany, has a collection of six hundred differently posed portraits of himself. The emperor was recently photographed in civilian attire. He has never been seen in his capital, and rarely anywhere in his empire, except in uniform of one kind or another. He possesses the uniform of every regiment of the Prussian army, of a commanding officer in all Bavarian, Wurtemburg, Saxon, Baden and Hessian regiments, and as honorary colonel of regiments in Austria, Italy, Russia, England and Sweden he has a variety of military outfits. But the uniform of which he is most proud is that of an English admiral. One garment alone is missing in this outfit—a dressing-gown. Soon after the war of 1870, a manufacturer sent to the "old emperor" a costly dressing gown of gold brocade, which was returned with the brief message, "The Hohenzollerns do not wear dressing-gowns." William is a very early riser and plunges into a cold bath every morning. He has a good appetite and eats heartily; he is a great lover of beef. He has a "sweet tooth" for bonbons.

The Czar of Russia is a man of much reserve, speaking seldom and but very briefly. He rarely laughs and does not often smile. Of personal danger he has no fear, and said, soon after his accession, "I will live and die for Russia; how I die I care not." He drives out in a small, two-horse carriage, or walks in the park at Tsarkoe-Selo, generally accompanied by the Czarina, whom he seems to regard as his protecting angel. He rises late unless urgent business demands an early attention. He dislikes darkness and his chamber is always as brilliantly illuminated as a reception room. He suffers acutely from insomnia and frequently uses a sleeping draught. He has a remarkable memory, and months after he has given an order he will surprise his ministers by asking whether, and how, it has been executed. During the day the Czarina sits beside his desk sewing or embroidering. When a court official enters she prepares to leave the room, but the Czar invariably says, "No, my dear, you won't disturb us," and, laying his hand with gentle insistence on her arm, he draws her back to her seat. The Czar is somewhat of a faddist; collects and enjoys all caricatures of himself, is fond of mechanical toys, and rides a Parisian autocycle.

Most democratic of sovereigns is King Leopold, of Belgium. In Brussels he walks the streets and mingles with the crowd. He is generally accompanied by an aide-de-camp in private clothes. At Ostend he walks about the beach and sails in his yacht like the most unaristocratic of commoners. Not long ago an Englishman accosted him, just opposite his chalet, and asked him in somewhat poor French, what the building was. The King turned to his companion, the Count d'Oultremont, and said: "You know every inch of Ostend, what is that building?" "That? oh, that is the King's chalet." "Oh," said Leopold, "so that's it, is it? Given him by the Queen of England, they say. Pretty place, isn't it?" All three gentlemen walked together for a time and when at parting the tourist presented his card, asking a like favor in return from each of his companions, he learned to his surprise that he had been talking with the King. On the sands Leopold greets everybody, speaks to many, and gambols with the children, who have no idea that the elderly gentleman who buys them cakes and candies, is the King of Belgium.

Emperor Franz Josef of Austria and the late Empress were fond of walking, and, when away from the exacting demands of court etiquette, loved to be as far as possible like private people. The portrait on the first page was taken at Kissingen, only a few weeks before the assassination of the Empress. It is the last picture taken of the Empress and the government allowed a limited number to be printed after her death.

Samantha and the Sphynx

JOSIAH said that we must not leave Cairo without seein' Pharo. Josiah said he felt real well acquainted with him, havin' read about him so much. Sez he, "He wuz a mean creeter as ever trod shoe-leather and I'd love to tell him so."

They keep him in the Museum of Cairo now, a purpose, I spoze, to scare folks from doin' what he did, for a humblier lookin' creeter I never see, and hard lookin'; I don't wonder a mite at the bad things I've hearn tell on him; why, a man that looked like that wuz sure to be mean as pusley. He looked as if wuz bein' plagued now with every single plague that fell on him for his cruelty and I d'no but he is. I wonder that the Israelites got along with him so long as they did; Josiah wouldn't have stood it a week, he's that quick-tempered and despises the idee of bein' bossed round, and how Pharo did drive them poor children of Israel round; ground 'em right down to his terms, wouldn't let 'em say their soul wuz their own, worked 'em most to death, half starved 'em, wouldn't give 'em any rights, not a single right. But as I sez to Josiah, he got his come-up-ance for his heartless cruelty, he got plagued enough and drownded in the bargain.

He's a mummy now. Yes, as Josiah sez when he looked on him:

"You've got to be mum now, no givin' orders to your poor overworked hired help in your brick-fields, not lettin' 'em have even a straw that they begged for to lighten their burden. The descendants of them folks you driv round can stand here and poke fun at you all day and you've got to keep your mouth shet. Yes," sez he, "you've got to a place now where you can't be yellin' out your orders, you've got to be mum, for you're a mummy."

I didn't love to have Josiah stand and sass Pharo right to his face, but it seemed so gratifyin' to him I hated to break it up, and I felt towards him jest as he did, and Arvilly and Miss Meechim felt jest as we did about it; they loathed his looks, hatin' what he'd done so bad. But I thought from what I hearn Robert Strong sayin' to Dorothy that he had doubts about this being the real Bible Pharo, there wuz quite a lot of them kings by the same name, you know. But Miss Meechim hearn him and assured him that this was the very Pharo who so cruelly tortured the Israelites and who was drownded by the Lord for his cruelty, she she knew it by her feelings. And she said she was so glad that she had seen for herself the great truth that the Pharo spirit of injustice and cruelty wuz crushed forever.

But Robert said that Pharo's cruelty sprang from unlimited power and from havin' absolute control over a weaker and helpless class; he said that would arouse the Pharo spirit in any man. That spirit, he said, was creeping into our American nation, the great Trusts and Monopolies formed for the enrichment of the few and the poverty of the many; what are they but the Pharo spirit of personal luxury and greed and dominion over the poor?

I knew he was thinkin' of his City of Justice, where every man had the opportunity to work and the just reward of his labor, where Charity (a good creeter Charity is too) but where she stayed in the background, not bein' needed here, and Justice walked in her place. Where Justice and Labor walked hand in hand into ways of pleasantness and paths of peace.

"YOU'VE GOT TO BE MUM . . . FOR YOU'RE A MUMMY," SEZ JOSIAH

The Voice and its Message

He didn't say nothin' about his own doin's, it wuzn't his way, but I hearn him say to Dorothy:

"The Voice is speaking now to America as it did to Egypt, Let my people go, out of their helpless bondage and poverty into better, more just and humane ways, but America doesn't listen. The rich stand on the piled up pyramid of the poor, Capital enslaves Labor and drives it with the iron bit of remorseless power and the sharp spur of Necessity where it will. But there must be a day of reckoning; the Voice will be heard, if not in peace with the sword:

'For the few shall not forever sway
The many toil in sorrow,
We'll sow the golden grain to-day,
The harvest comes to-morrow.'"

But the greatest sight in Cairo and mebby the hull world, is the Pyramaids.

I d'no as I had so many emotions in the same length of time durin' my hull tower as I did lookin' at them immense structures. It don't seem as if they wuz made by man; they seem more like mountains placed there by the same hand that made the everlastin' hills. They say that it took three hundred thousand men twenty years to build the biggest one. And I don't doubt it. If I had been asked to draw up specifications I wouldn't have took the job for a day's work less. Why, they say it took ten years to build the road over which them stuns wuz brought from the Nile, and good land! how did they ever do it? No hands nor no machinery that we know anything about at the present day could move one of them stuns, let alone bringin' 'em from heaven knows where. They couldn't have been got into any boat, and how did they do it? I d'no nor Josiah don't. Mebby the sphynx knows, most probable she duz, but she's a female that don't git herself into trouble talkin' and gossipin'. Lots of wimmen would do well to foller her example.

From the first minute we got to Cairo and long enough before that we had lotted on seein' the pyramaids, Josiah had talked about 'em a sight, and told me time and agin that he did want to see the spink, he had got to see the spink.

Josiah's Ambition

Sez I, "You mean the sphynx, Josiah."

"Yes," sez he, "the spink; I'm bound to see that. I want to tell Deacon Henzy and Brother Bobbet about it; they crowed over me quite a little after they went to Loontown to see them views of the spink and the Pyramaid of Chops. You know I wuz bed-sick at the time with a crick in my back. I quess they'll have to quirl down a little when I tell 'em I've walked round the spink and seen old Chops with my own eyes."

"THE GREATEST SIGHT, MEBBY IN THE HULL WORLD IS THE PYRAMAIDS"

Well, I knowed lots of folks travel with no higher aim than to tell their exploits, so I didn't argy with him. And the hull party of us sot off one pleasant day to view them wonders; they're only six miles from Cairo. The Pyramaid of Cheops is higher than any structure in Europe; the Strassburg Cathedral is the highest—that is four hundred and sixty feet, and Cheops is four hundred and eighty feet high. Each of its sides is seven hundred and sixty feet long above the sand, and I d'no how much bigger it is underneath. The wild winds from the desert piles up that sand everywhere it can; it was blowin' aginst that pyramaid three or four thousand years before Christ wuz born, and has kep' at it ever sense; so it must have heaped up piles about it. The pyramaid is made of immense blocks of stun, and I hearn Josiah explainin' it out to Tommy. Sez he, "It is called Chops because the stun is chopped off kinder square."

But I interrupted, and sez, "Josiah Allen, this wuz named after Cheops, one of the kings of Egypt; some say it wuz his tomb."

Miss Meechim sez, "They say it took three hundred thousand men twenty years to build it." and she remarked further, "How many day's works this king did give to the poor, and how good it wuz in him!" And Robert Strong said:

"Their work has lasted while the king is forgotten; labor against capital, labor ahead."

Dorothy looked dreamily up onto the immense pile and said nothin'.

Arvilly said if she had a long white-wash brush she would advertise her book, the Twin Crimes, by paintin' a drunken man in a hovel beatin' his wife and children, whilst America wuz furnishin' him with the clubs, and the Wild and Warlike Deeds of Men in different wild and warlike attitudes.

And little Tommy wonnered if he could climb up on it and wonnered what anybody could see from the top.

And I looked on it and felt as if I could almost see the march of the centuries defile by its stubborn old sides, and I wondered like Tommy what one could look off and see from the top, gazing out acrost our centuries so full of wonders and inventions, into the glowin' mysteries of the twentieth century.

Robert Strong said that some thought it wuz built for astronomical purposes, for there is a passage down three hundred and twenty feet from the bed rock from which you can view the sky.

"And some think," sez Dorothy. "it wuz built to measure distances correctly, it stands true east, north, south, west."

And Miss Meechim sez, "I believe it wuz built for religious purposes: the interior passages have many stones and symbols that are a mystery to every one unless it is explained in this way."

Sez Arvilly, "I believe it wuz made to shet up folks in that got drunk and acted. Probable there wuz some even in that fur-off time that made fools of themselves jest as they do now, and old Chops built it to shet 'em up in, and mebby he wuz shet up in it, too; mebby he took to drinkin'. I wish I could have sold him the Twin Crimes; it would have helped him a sight, but I wuzn't born soon enough," sez she, sithin'.

Tommy stood back a little, lookin' up and seein' some people half-way to the top, lookin' like flies on the side of the meetin' house, said:

"I wonner, oh, I wonner who made it and what it wuz made for, and oh, how I do wonner how they ever got them big stones to the top."

And I sez to myself, "the child is wiser than any of us. He don't try to measure his weak surmises on them great rocks and problems but jest wonders at it all," and I thought I would foller his example, and I felt considerable better after I gin up.

Robert Strong and Dorothy and Arvilly clumb clear to the top, helped by Arab lifters and boosters. Arvilly and Dorothy wuz tuckered when they come down and they both said they wouldn't have undertook it if they had known what a job it wuz, but they said the view from the top wuz wonderful, wonderful! and I spoze it wuz, but I thought I would ruther hear 'em tell on't than to go through what they did gettin' up and down, and Miss Meechim, I guess, felt so too.

The other two pyramaids in this group wuz smaller than Chops and stood not fur away. The Sphynx stands about a quarter of a mild off, lookin' off towards the east, facin' the risin' sun. I wonder if she expects the sunrise of civilization to dawn ag'in into her sight. 'Tennyrate, she seems to be lookin' out for sunthin'.

There she has sot, meditatin' all these years. She wuz old, old as the hills when Christ wuz born. What haint them old eyes seen if she senses anything?

From Cairo we went to Alexandria where we made a short stay; we couldn't stay long anyway, we had loitered so on the journey and we knew we must get back to the Paris Exposition the 4th of July anyway. Why, I knew the thought of France trying to keep United States Day without Josiah Allen's wife at the helium would be like trying to celebrate George Washington's birthday with the name of that immortal statesman left out of the programmy. We must be in Paris by the 4th of July, and here it wuz June. Jerusalem and Bethlehem and Nazareth we must visit, and still how could we hurry our footsteps in these sacred places that our soul had so longed to see?

Alexandrian Sights

Alexandria was considerable interestin' on several accounts: it wuz the home of Cleopatra, and the home of Hypatia, the friend and teacher of women. A smart creeter Hypatia Theon wuz, handsome as a picter, modest, good appearin', and a good talker. 'Tennyrate the rooms where she lectured on philosophy and how to git along in the world wuz crowded with appreciative hearers, and I spoze Mr. Cyrel, who wuz preachin' there at the time, and didn't git nigh so many to hear him, wuz mad as a hen at her for drawin' away the head men and wimmen. 'Tennyrate she wuz killed and burnt up some time ago, a goin' on two thousand years. Yes, they burnt up all they could of her; they couldn't burn up her memory, nor liberty, nor the love of wimmen for talkin', and her stiddy practice on't when she gits a chance, not bein' able to. But to resoom:

The evenin' we got there Josiah looked out of our winder and see a camel kneelin' to take on its load, and sez Josiah, "If I could train the old mair to kneel down in front of the Jonesville meetin' house for me to git onto her back, how uneek it would look."

Sez I coldly, "Then you lay out to go to meetin' horseback, do you? And where should I be?"

"Oh, I might rent a camel for you from some circus; you know what big loads camels can take on, they can carry a ton or more, and it could carry you all right."

I despise such talk, I don't weigh nigh so much as he makes out.

But Josiah went on, "I d'no but a camel could carry both on us, I wouldn't add much to the load, I don't weigh very hefty."

"No," sez I, "you're not very hefty anyway."

But good land! I knew he couldn't rent any camel: circuses need 'em more than we do.

Cleopatra's Ways

The next day we all went out to see Pompey's Piller which we had seen towerin' up before we landed, all on 'em ridin' donkeys but me, but I not being much of a hand to ride on any critter's back, preferred to go in a chair with long poles on each side, carried by four Arabs. Pompey's Piller is most a hundred feet high. Cleopatra's Needles wuz brought from Heliopalis. One is standing; the other, which lay for a long time nearly embedded in the drifting sand, wuz given as a present by Egypt to America, where it stands now in Central Park, New York. To see the mate to it here made us feel well acquainted with it and kinder neighborly. But we couldn't read the strange writin' on it to save our life. Some say that they wuz raised by Cleopatra in honor of the birth of her son, Cæsarion. But I d'no; if she laid out to write about it so's I could read it, she'd ort to write plainer; I couldn't make out a word on't nor Josiah couldn't.

"THEY CLUMB CLEAR TO THE TOP"

Cleopatra wuz dretful good lookin', I spoze, and a universal favorite with the opposite sect. But I never approved of her actions, and I wished as I stood there by that piller of hern that I could gin her a real good talkin' to. I would say to her:

"Cleopatra," sez I, "you little know what you're a doin'. Mebby there wouldn't be so many Dakota and Chicago divorces in 1900 if it wuzn't for your cuttin' up and actin' in B. C. I'd say stealin' is stealin', and some wimmen think it is worse to steal their husbands away from 'em than it would be to steal ten pounds of butter out of their suller. And that, mom, would shet any woman up in jail as you well know. And you know, Cleopatra," sez I, "jest how you went on and behaved and your example is a floatin' down the river of Time to-day, some as you sailed down the Sydnus in that barge of yourn. And to-day your descendants or influence posterity, sail down the river of Time in picture hats and feather boas, makin' up eyes and castin' languishin' glances towards poor unguarded men till they steal their hearts and souls right out of their bodies: steal all the sweetness and brightness out of some poor overworked woman's life, and if they don't take the body of their husband nothin' is said or done. Good land! what would I care for Josiah Allen's body if his love had been stole. I would tell the woman to take that in welcome sence she had all the rest. But they sail along down the River of Life, coquettin' with weak, handsome male Antonys, who had better be to home with their own lawful Octavias. So it goes." I always hated Cleopatra's doin's. And I wondered as I looked dreamily at that writin' of hearn, if she wuz sorry for her actions now in that spear of hearn, wherever it wuz, and wanted to ondo it.

But to resoom: We stayed there for some time, and on our way home a dretful thing happened to me. After we all got started, sunthin' happened to one of the poles of my chair, and with as much motionin' and jabberin' as a presidential election would call for, they at last got it fixed agin. By that time the party had all disappeared, and the bearers of my vehicle started off at their highest speed right acrost ploughed land and springin' crops and everything, not stoppin' for anything.

Where wuz they takin' me? Wuz I to perish in these wilds? Wuz they carrying me off for booty? I had on my cameo pin and I trembled. It wuz my pride in Jonesville; wuz I to lose my life for it? Or wuz it my good looks that wuz ondoin' of me? Did they want to make me their brides? I sez to them in agonizin' axents, "Take me back instantly to my pardner! He is the choice of my youth! I will never wed another! You hain't congenial to me anyway! It is vain for you to elope with me for I will never be your brides!"

But they jabbered and motioned and acted and paid no attention only to rush along faster than ever.

I then tried a new tact with 'em. With tremblin' fingers I onpinned the cameo pin, and with a noble jester that would have become Jeptha as he gin his only daughter for a sacrifice, I handed it out to 'em. And sez I, "If that is what you want, take it, and then bear me back safely to my beloved pardner agin."

But they never touched it. They only jabbered away louder and more fierce like and yanked me along faster than ever.

Oh, the agony of that time! Dear Josiah, should I never see thee agin? and the children and the grandchildren? Hills and dells of lovely Jonesville! Would they never dawn on my vision more! Would the old mair never whinner joyfully at my appearance, or Snip bark a welcome?

I thought of all the unfortunate Hebrew wimmen who would have been neighbors to me then if I had been born soon enough. Ruth, Esther, Hagar they all had suffered, they had all most likely looked off onto the desert, even as I wuz lookin' for help, and it didn't come to some on 'em. And by this time to add to my sufferin's, the mantilly of night was descendin' over the seen, the tropical night that comes so swift, so fast, oh, what should I do? Every move I made, every despairin' jester only seemed to make 'em go faster, so it wuz plain to be seen that my help wuz not in man. I thought of that pillar of fire that had lighted that sad procession of Hebrews acrost that very desert. And, like a cool, firm hand, laid on a feverish, restless foretop, come agin the thought of them three wise men that had trod that desert waste. No path, no guide to lead 'em only the Star, and I sez in my inmost heart:

"That Star hain't lost its light; it remains jest as bright and clear to-day as it did then to light true believers acrost the darkness in the hour of their need. And jest as plain as though they wuz spoke to me come these beautiful words: "I will lift up mine eyes to the hills from whence cometh my help."

And I lifted my streamin' eyes accordin', for by this time I wuz cryin' and sheddin' tears. I could see by the faint light in the west that there wuz considerable of a hill on the east of me, and as my weepin' eyes wuz lifted in that direction my heart almost stood still as I beheld all of a sudden a glowin' star of light shine out of the darkness right on the top of that hill and rapidly desend in my direction nearer and nearer.

Josiah to the Rescue

Oh, joy! oh, bliss! it wuz my own pardner with a lantern. His devoted love had bore him back. Settin' on a donkey bearin' a lantern, he looked to me like an angel. It wuz the star of love, indeed it wuz! the brightest star of earth come to light my dark pathway. And I bust out:

"Oh, Josiah Allen! you are not one of the wise men, but you look better to me than any of 'em could."

And he sez, "It don't look very pretty for you, after hangin' out till this time o' night, to run the one who has come way back after you with a lantern, and talk about his not knowin' anything."

"Run you, Josiah," sez I, "you look more beautiful to me than words can tell."

That mollified him and he sez with a modest smile, "I spoze I am very pretty lookin', but I worried about you a sight."

It seems that they had went on a pretty good jog, and seein' my bearers had got belated with me they had took a short cut acrost the fields to overtake 'em. But it was a eppisode not to be forgot, and I told Josiah not to be seperated away from me a minute after this. Sez I, "I almost feel like purchasin' a rope and tyin' myself to you for the rest of the tower."

Sez he, "That would make talk, Samantha, but I will keep my eye on you and not let you git carried off agin; for the feelin's I felt when I missed you I would not go through agin for a dollar bill."

Well, we soon come up with the rest of the party. It seemed that they had been talkin' and havin' such a good time they hadn't missed me for quite awhile. But when they did, Arvilly said Josiah acted some as he did when she and he pursued me acrost the continent: sez she, "He acted like a fool; I knew you couldn't be fur behind."

And I sez, "Arvilly, spiritual things are spiritually discerned; love is spiritual and love has to interpret it."

"Well," sez she, "I am glad he found you so soon, for, to tell the truth, I wuz beginin' to worry a little myself."

Miss Meechim said she thought I had gone into some shrine to worship.

That was a great idee! off with four Arabs huntin' a shrine at that time of night!

How to be Happy

PLINY says that the mermaids danced on the green grass, but all around them were dead men's bones. Neither bat nor ball, not boat, nor skate, although they all have their uses, can make death, life and eternity happy. A king said to two of his wise men: "You go out and get me a recipe, you make me a recipe for happiness, and you will have two months to make the recipe in, and I want you to tell me in that prescription how I can be happy, and how I can make all my subjects happy." Well, they took two months, and then the wise men came in, and one of them had a roll of two hundred rules by which this king should be happy and make all his subjects happy, and the king got tired with the recital. Then he turned to the other wise man, and said: "What is your prescription for making myself happy and making all my subjects happy?" and the wise man answered in two words: "Love God." "Why," said the king, "I gave you two months to give me a rule for happiness; is that all you have to offer?" "Yes," he replied, "that is all I have to offer. Love God, and if you love God you will be happy, and if you love God you will make all your subjects happy." Love the world and you will be miserable.

England in the Rain

FOR several weeks England has for much of the time had rainy or cloudy weather; but this makes the people appreciate the sun better when it does come out. The clouds, like a veil to a beautiful face, add to the attractiveness by only occasionally being withdrawn. When the sun in summer shines from morning till night with intense glare we always feel that he is rather overdoing the business. There is nothing more exquisite than a cloud when it is richly edged and irradiated. A cloudless sky is a bare wall. A sky hung with clouds in all stages of illumination is a Louvre and Luxembourg. Clouds are pictures drawn in water-colors. Who knows but that Raphael and Rubens, gone up higher, may sometimes come out and help in the coloring of the canvas of the morning, with brush of sunbeam putting within sight of our eyes the constellated glories belonging to the other side of the Border.

A Treasury of Anecdote

ANECDOTE and illustration are the simplest and most effective method of gospel preaching. The Master himself taught in parables. In the splendid edition of Twenty Volumes of Selected Sermons, by Rev. Dr. Talmage, just issued from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD presses, there are many hundreds of anecdotes, told with a convincing power and pathos that never fail to touch the heart. Three of these illustrative anecdotes are given below:

The Story of a Handkerchief

Did you ever know a drunkard to be saved through the caricature of a drunkard? Your mimicry of the staggering step, and the thick tongue, and the disgusting hiccough, only worse maddens his brain. But if you come to him in kindness and sympathy, then a ray of light will flash across his vision, and it will seem as if a supernatural hand were steadying his staggering gait. A good many years ago, there lay in the streets a man dead-drunk, his face exposed to the blistering noonday sun. A Christian woman passed along, looked at him, and said: "Poor fellow." She took her handkerchief and spread it over his face and passed on. The man roused himself up from his debauch, and began to look at the handkerchief, and lo! on it was the name of a highly respectable Christian woman of the city. He went to her; he thanked her for her kindness; and that one little deed saved him for this life, and saved him for the life that is to come. He was afterward Attorney-General for the United States; but, higher than all, he became the consecrated disciple of Jesus Christ.—From Vol. V. of "Selected Sermons" by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage.

The Western Trapper

A traveler passing along far away from home was overtaken by night and by a storm, and he put in at a cabin. He saw firearms there. It was a rough looking place, but he did not dare to go into the darkness and storm. He had a large amount of money with him, and he felt very much excited and disturbed. After a while the trapper came home. He had a gun on his shoulder. He put the gun roughly down in the cabin, and then the traveler was disturbed. He was sure he was not safe in that place. After a while he heard the family talking together, and he said, "Now, they are plotting for my ruin; I wish I were out in the night and storm instead of being here; I would be safer there." After a while the old trapper came up to the traveler and said: "Stranger, we are a rough people; we get our living by hunting, and when we come in at night we are quite tired, and we go to bed early; but before we go to bed, we are in the habit of reading a few verses from the Scriptures and say a short prayer. If you don't believe in such things, if you would just please to step outside the door for a little while, I'll be obliged to you." There was the courage to do one's whole duty under all circumstances, and a house that has prayers in it is a divinely guarded house.—From Vol. XI. of "Selected Sermons," by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage.

Influence of an Infidel Book

I remember one infidel book in the possession of my student companion. He said: "De Witt, would you like to read that book?" "Well," said I, "I would like to look at it." I read it a little while. I said to him, "I dare not read that book; you had better destroy it; I give you my advice, you had better destroy it." "Oh," he said, "haven't you a stronger mind than that? Can't you read a book you don't exactly believe, and not be affected by it?" I said. "You had better destroy it." He kept it. He read it. He pored over it. He read it and reread it. He read it until he gave up his Bible. He read it until he gave up his belief in the existence of a God. He read it until he gave up his good morals. He read it until body, mind and soul were ruined—the body smitten with disease, the mind deranged—and he went into the insane asylum, and the story of that book, that one infidel book, will never be told in this world.—From Vol. IV. of "Selected Sermons," by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage.

INDIA'S GREAT FAMINE
: : : : Nearing the Crisis

Grateful Words of Recognition of American Aid from her Rulers and the Consecrated American Missionaries in the Famine Area

IN response to a cable message from Dr. Klopsch, a remittance of thirty thousand dollars has been cabled from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S India Famine Relief Fund to cover the cost of the one thousand hand-ploughs and the hundred thousand blankets which have been purchased at the suggestion of the Inter-denominational Missionary Committee. The terrible havoc of disease consequent on the condition of the relief camps, and the situation of the people who have lost their homes and are sleeping in the open air, rendered such help as that of the gift of blankets necessary, and it has an indirect benefit in furnishing work to the poor weavers. It was also necessary to provide the hand-ploughs, otherwise even when the ground is moistened by the long-expected rains, the agriculturists, having lost their oxen in the famine and all their farm implements, which have been sold to buy food, would not be able to till their land. Their hopes, of course, are all based on the prospect of a harvest in October, but if there is no plowing nor sowing in June and July, their hopes will be frustrated.

Arrangements have been made for the distribution of the cargo of the corn-laden Relief Steamer Quito, which it is expected will reach Bombay about June 16. The Inter-denominational Missionary Committee will supervise the distribution, and applications for portions of the cargo are already pouring in. Dr. Klopsch, having completed these varied arrangements, and having ascertained by personal inspection the extent of the suffering and the efficiency of the relief organization, decided that no useful purpose could be served by remaining longer in the afflicted country. He therefore sailed for home on June 2.

The Viceroy's Thanks

Lord Curzon, the Viceroy, who was at Simla, hearing of his intended departure, telegraphed to him on behalf of Lady Curzon and himself hearty thanks for the services he had rendered, and expressing thorough appreciation of the charity of the American people which Dr. Klopsch had been the means of bringing. The Viceroy said he hoped that every facility had been extended, every assistance rendered to Dr. Klopsch by Government officials during his stay and regretted that he had been unable to meet him personally. Lord Northcote, the Governor of Bombay, also telegraphed wishing him a safe voyage, and added: "May I again thank you and your countrymen most warmly for all you are doing, and assure you that India will never forget the kindness and generosity of the American people."

The members of the Inter-denominational Missionary Committee have given Dr. Klopsch valuable assistance in his tour. The Chairman, Rev. E. S. Hume, was unhappily incapacitated by illness, but his brother, Dr. R. A. Hume of Ahmednagar, filled his place and gave Dr. Klopsch cordial co-operation. We regret to learn from Rev. E. S. Hume, who has now arrived in New York, that a prolonged rest and medical treatment are necessary to the restoration of his health. His exertions in connection with the relief work, added to his ordinary missionary duties have so undermined his constitution, that the physicians in Bombay insisted that a return to his native land and absolute rest could alone avert grave consequences. The following report from Mr. Hume has been received at this office:

Rev. E. S. Hume's Report

"I went to India in 1875, and since then have been in this country but once before. Nothing but the orders of competent physicians, saying that it would be at the risk of permanently losing my health in case I remained in India longer, could have induced me to come away from that distressed country at a time when the needs there are so great and the opportunities for work so unusual as they are at the present time. Even so, had I known that the proprietor of your paper, Dr. Klopsch, was so soon to be in India, I think that I should have begged permission to remain there a month longer in order to share with him in the work with the workers for whom he and you all have done such splendid service, both in connection with the famine of 1897 and also this present one. It is difficult to express in words the feelings of appreciation and admiration which the missionaries living in the famine areas feel for the grand work which the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have done.

"I trust that what you are doing to raise funds will go on. The worst part of the famine still lies ahead of us. No permanent relief, even in case the rains which are soon expected are timely and abundant, can be expected until the next harvest has been gathered in; i.e., four or five months hence. In the meantime the Inter-denominational Committee could well handle all you can possibly send out—say a million dollars or even more. At four cents a day a man or woman could be supported to the end of October for $6.00. Surely no one can grudge this amount in order to save a human life. The money which you have sent to the missionaries is either distributed by them personally or by their Christian agents, and so reaches the distressed without any waste, which cannot be said of the funds distributed by any other large body of workers. Of course, many of the sufferers are Hindus and Mohammedans; still, many thousands of native Christians are in the direst extremity, and are found on Government Relief works. Comparatively few of them have died from want, because they have been willing to go to the famine camps or have been relieved by their own missionaries. The Inter-denominational Committee is composed of experienced and careful men, who represent the leading missionary societies and distribute impartially and sympathetically the funds placed at their disposal.

"One of the most important branches of mission work is the rescuing of famine orphans. Tens of thousands of these poor waifs are lying at poor-houses, on the outskirts of famine camps, or are wandering around towns and villages with no one to care for them. Had the missionaries the assurance that funds will be available for the support of all whom they may now gather into their schools and orphanages, they would gladly go into this great work with enthusiasm. No work that I have ever undertaken during the twenty-five years of my missionary life has been more satisfactory and more productive of results than that which I have done for famine orphans. I hope and pray that large sums may be available for this unique enterprise. Let the missionaries know that they are to have a generous backing. E. S. HUME."

June 2, 1900, New Haven, Conn.

What the Missionaries Do

In the course of a conversation, Mr. Hume said that there were from two to three hundred American missionaries in the famine area. They were all gladly distributing all the funds they could obtain in relieving the suffering. There were tens of thousands of native Christians in need. Some of the money had been wisely used in supplying the weavers with material and buying from them the garments and blankets that they weave. But over and above this, the sums required for direct relief were enormous. Mr. Hume spoke with deep sadness of the women and children who might be saved if there were sufficient funds for the purpose. He knew of instances in which one missionary had fed as many as eight thousand in a day. The missionaries were dependent upon the Christians at home for the means of relieving the suffering. During the three months before leaving India, he did not think the missionaries had received in all two hundred dollars from the Executive Committee of the India Famine Charitable Relief Fund.

REV. E. S. HUME

That committee was composed of one hundred members, including Hindus, Mohammedans, Parsees and Europeans. There were only three missionaries—one English and two American—on it.

There was, Mr. Hume said, a marked difference in the reception of funds by the famine sufferers. They regarded the relief they received from a secular committee as "Girkar money," that is government relief, implying only the government's recognition of its responsibility; but when a missionary helped them, they realized that the help was an expression of Christian compassion, and so were impressed with the love and kindness that Christianity enjoined. It would help the missionary in his future work, if among the people to whom he will preach the Gospel, there are some who owe their lives to the relief he has distributed. The funds administered exclusively through the missionaries as is THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund, are, therefore, a potent means of advancing Christianity in India.

Extending the Relief Work

The management of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Work is this week sending out to one newspaper in each community a letter inviting these journals to open their columns for the receipt of contributions for the famine sufferers, the same to be forwarded through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to the Inter-denominational Committee in Bombay.

The Kingdom's Seed-time and Harvest

BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

International Sunday School Lesson for June 24: | Golden Text, Matt. 6. 10: "Thy kingdom come"

THE review should be a composite photograph of the lessons of the quarter, in which one leading thought or one preeminent lesson should furnish a definite subject and object, as in a composite photograph of many persons on one plate, one strong face often dominates all others, and appears distinctly in the final picture. In this quarter the parables of the kingdom (Matt. 13) are the dominating feature into which all others may be gathered, in harmony with the golden text.

Pointing from Nature Up to Nature's God

Seed-time and harvest, apart from all allegories, point us to God by every growing plant. Men wondered that Christ could feed thousands out of one basket and have a dozen basketfuls left; but what shall we say of the feeding of the world's fourteen hundred millions of human beings in 1890, with seven and a quarter billions of bushels of grain (Department of Agriculture estimate), besides all the rice—"the staff of life" to the world's majority—and all the potatoes, meat, milk and other foods? The grain alone of each year would make a vast golden mountain of fifteen trillion cubic inches; or set in line in bushel baskets, two lineal feet to the bushel, it would become a golden necklace reaching round the world 110,000 times. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

And the tiny seeds in the sower's basket are as wonderful as the harvest whose germs and patterns they contain. Dr. Burdon Sanderson, President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, declared, with the manifest approval of that senate of the scientific world, that the microscopic cells of vegetable and animal life, each with its specific plan and distinct energy, are fortresses of faith that proclaim God and put materialism to rout.

The Spiritual Seed-time of the Kingdom

We live in the ripening world-harvest of Christ's kingdom, but our lessons take us back to its seed-time, when the divine Sower went forth to sow, first the little garden of Palestine, whence the seed should be spread to his world field. Even in the "Holy Land" there were four kinds of soil in the souls he taught.

DANIEL WEBSTER'S EPITAPH

[Written by himself, and cut in his granite tombstone in Marshfield, Mass.]

LORD,
I BELIEVE, HELP THOU MINE UNBELIEF. PHILOSOPHICAL ARGUMENT, ESPECIALLY THAT DRAWN FROM THE VASTNESS OF THE UNIVERSE IN COMPARISON WITH THE APPARENT INSIGNIFICANCE OF THIS GLOBE, HAS SOMETIMES SHAKEN MY REASON FOR THE FAITH THAT IS IN ME; BUT MY HEART HAS ASSURED ME THAT THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST MUST BE A DIVINE REALITY. THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT CAN NOT BE A MERELY HUMAN PRODUCTION. THIS BELIEF ENTERS INTO THE VERY DEPTH OF MY CONSCIENCE. THE WHOLE HISTORY OF MAN PROVES IT.

See him on the Mount of Beatitudes first planting in "good ground," as he spake to his apostles by themselves. Even in that choicest corner of his garden one of the twelve seed-beds was to be spoiled with thorns of covetousness.

We are not to suppose that Judas did not at first really desire to help Christ. He was all too much like fully one-twelfth of the Church to-day in seeking first wealth, and the kingdom of God second. The hearts of the other apostles were by no means free from weeds. Race prejudice, ambition and cowardice were there; but Christ is a patient gardener, and by his combined gentleness and severity, by warnings and invitations, south wind and north in co-operation, he produced world-harvests from these apostles, not equally great—"some thirty, some sixty, and some an hundredfold." The central truth of the Sermon on the Mount is the blessedness of Christlike character and conduct, that is, of hearts that receive his words and grow them into gentle lives. The "pure heart" of the first lesson grows into the "golden rule" of the second. First we must get right with God, and then with our fellows. Right relations to God and man mean harmony. Such harmonies

Make life, death and the vast forever
One grand, sweet song.

Here is a strain from such a life, permeated with the golden rule. Coming down town on a rainy morning the slipping car wheels suggested the use of the sand box, and as the conductor pulled open the rear box, a passenger said, "Why drop the sand from this end?" The conductor replied, "I am doing it for the next man."

The Golden Rule of Gladness

To the joys of the "pure heart" and the golden rule, Jesus invites all as he steps forth from the apostolic corner of his garden and addresses the general multitude of his own people, that proves to be mostly hard and shallow and thorny ground. He warns such hearts of their own defects, to save them if possible from having the "blesseds" displaced by "woes."

Happiness is to be distinguished from blessedness. The very word "happiness" is atheistic. Its god is chance. But the word "blessedness" in itself implies God. History is full of proof that blessedness comes not from gifts, but graces; not from greatness, but goodness. On Bowling Green, New York, there is a house where Talleyrand used to go. He was a favorite man. All the world knew him, and he had wealth almost unlimited; yet at the close of his life, he said, "Behold, eighty-three years have passed without any practical result, save fatigue of body and fatigue of mind, great discouragement for the future, and great disgust for the past."

After Rossini had rendered "William Tell" the five hundredth time, a company of musicians came under his window in Paris and serenaded him. They put upon his brow a golden crown of laurel leaves! But, amid the applause and enthusiasm, Rossini turned to a friend, and said, "I would give all this brilliant scene for a few days of youth and love."

Fame and wealth must yield the palm, even as joy-bringers in this world to the "pure heart" and the "golden rule." Let us both learn and live the motto of Dodridge:

Live while you live, the epicure would say,
And seize the pleasures of the present day.

Live while you live, the sacred preacher cries,
And give to God each moment as it flies.

Lord, in my views let both united be:
I live in pleasure while I live in thee.

We Need Both Cloud and Sun

But even Christians are not free from sorrows. The harvest field whispers to us that "into every life some rain must fall." Jairus, though a "ruler," could not forbid Death to enter his door and still the voice of his child.

An Indian baby was dying. It lay in its father's arms, while near by stood another little daughter, a few years older, who was a Christian. "Papa," she said, "little sister is going to heaven to-night. Let me pray." As she said this, she knelt at her father's knee, and this was the sweet little prayer which fell from her lips: "Father God, little sister is coming to see you to-night. Please open the door softly and let her in. Amen."

There was something so precious in the lesson of comfort and resurrection that Christ proposed to teach in that chamber of death that he would plant it only in the choicest souls. All the mourners, except the parents and all the curious spectators, were excluded from the scene, and all the apostles, save the three of deepest hearts, Peter, James and John, the same who were selected to be the only seed-beds when he planted the lessons of the transfiguration and of Gethsemane's mystic agony. In every age Christ plants the choicest truths in the most spiritual hearts.

Not alone in Jewish fields did Christ sow the seed. That Roman centurion who sent to Christ in behalf of a servant who was "dear unto him," was "good ground" indeed—a generous giver, a brotherly master, a man of faith, a Christian soldier. It was such a soldier who prayed just before the battle of Blenheim, "O! God, if in this day of battle I forget thee, do not thou forget me."

Many of the bravest Christian soldiers on God's roll are those who never touched a sword except the one that slew them, to whom the book of Hebrews refers as "slain with the sword." One of the choicest treasures of the Church of Bohemia, is the sword with which twenty-seven martyrs lost their heads to keep their faith. With it is cherished the communion cup of those same martyrs, buried four hundred years, but recently recovered. Since the harvest Christ seeks is character, some of the ripest sheaves are those that have been gathered with the sword.

A Brahmin, who heard the story of Christ from Dr. Pentecost, when he was in India, said: "I am not a Christian. I shall die a Brahmin, but I am greatly touched by the story of Jesus. I could love him."

The Eclipse of the Sun

REPORTS from the astronomical parties who at various stations observed the eclipse of the sun on May 28, encourage the hope that results valuable to science were obtained. The exact details will not be known until the photographic plates have been eveloped and compared, but it is evident nat the phenomenon has added materially to the knowledge we possessed of he great luminary. The conditions for bservation were peculiarly favorable. It s obvious that, with the earth turning on s own axis, there is only one comparatively narrow line on its surface from which the moon is directly between it and he sun. This is the line of totality. At ther places on each side of the line he eclipse is partial, that is, the sun s only partially covered by the interposing moon. In this instance the line of totality, beginning at New Orleans, passed ver the Gulf States, entered the Atlantic Ocean at Norfolk, Va., touched Southern Spain and across Northern Africa. As n these regions the sky is usually clear of louds, the opportunities for observing he eclipse were good. Another element f importance was the position of the oon. In some eclipses the moon is at he point of its orbit most distant from he earth. At such times, being so much naller than the sun, it does not appear, ven when quite central, to cover the sun, ut leaves a narrow rim of the sun's bulk ll around the moon's edge. In this clipse the moon was at its nearest, and herefore on the line of totality it completely hid the sun from view. That is he period for which the astronomer so agerly waits. It is very brief. At New Orleans the time of complete totality was nly one minute, and in North Carolina nly one minute and a half. During that hort period the spectacle is one of weird eauty. Instead of the sun shining in the eavens, there is the densely black globe f the moon hanging as it were in midir. But it is not dark, for the atmosphere utside the shadow holds the sun's rays, nd there is besides a strange effulgence urrounding the moon's black mass. This ing of beautiful light is called the corona, nd from it proceed long streamers of osy gleams reaching more than three illion miles into space. The corona and he streamers puzzle astronomers, and it s in the hope of discovering their nature nd cause that they look forward so agerly to each eclipse. The impression itherto prevailing is that this strange ight comes from immense masses of glowing hydrogen, rising from various parts of the sun's surface, but this theory loes not explain the apparent space between the corona and the sun. The spectroscope also shows that the corona contains particles of matter distinct from diffused gas. Why these should remain suspended instead of being drawn into he sun is a mystery yet unexplained. It is worthy of notice that the eclipse occurred almost o a second at the time predicted, showing with what marvelous precision the movements of the heavenly bodies are regulated. Little as we know of them, we know sufficient to endorse the declaration of the Psalmist, whose knowledge, limited as it was, led him o the conclusion of the modern Christian:

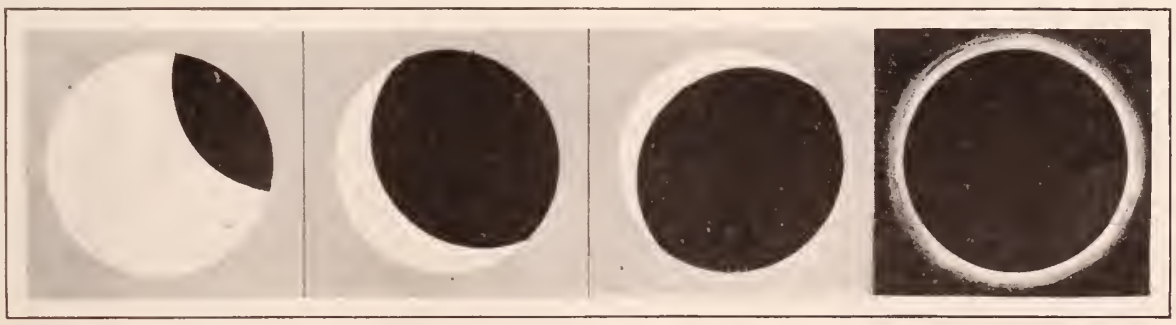
The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork (Ps. 19: 1).

Collapse of Boer Resistance

The news that Johannesburg had fallen without a struggle, was received everywhere with surprise. On the approach of Lord Roberts a white flag was hoisted, and the Boer commandant entered the British camp and conducted the successful general into the town. The mines were found to be intact and the British flag was raised without opposition. Leaving a force there to preserve order, an advance was made toward Pretoria. President Kruger, Secretary Reitz and the other members of the Boer government are reported to have left the capital and to have reached a town from which they can go east to Delagoa Bay or northward to the mountainous district of Lydenburg as later events may determine. After the departure of the officials, a scene of wild anarchy prevailed in Pretoria. The stores were looted by the population, and there was a struggle between one party who advocated surrender to the British and another party who urged the defence of the capital to the last. It appears that there are three forts which might be held by a comparatively small force and could not be easily overcome. These command the town and would have to be taken before the town could be occupied. The Boer commandant is embarrassed by the presence of the large number of British prisoners who have been confined in and near Pretoria and who are naturally excited by the approach of their comrades. At the suggestion of United States Consul Hay, a number of British officers who are also prisoners in Pretoria have been placed in command of the British rank and file to keep them in order. As the Boers have not lost their artillery they are still a force to be reckoned with, but it is clear that the end of organized resistance is at hand. Lord Salisbury in a recent speech announced the determination of the British Government to annex both the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, not leaving them "a shred of independence." This resolve must be a bitter disappointment to President Kruger, who might less than a year ago have secured practical independence by making unimportant concessions in giving the suffrage to the aliens. It is singular that men so familiar with the Old Testament as the Boers, did not remember that there was Scriptural warrant for the concessions that some of them were willing to grant to the Outlanders:

If a stranger sojourn with thee in your land ye shall not vex him; but the stranger that dwelleth with you shall be unto you as one born among you and thou shalt love him as thyself (Levit. 19: 33).

THE RECENT ECLIPSE OF THE SUN—THE PATH OF THE SHADOW



FOUR PROGRESSIVE STAGES OF THE TOTAL ECLIPSE OF THE SUN ON MAY 28

Sued for a Prayer

A remarkable suit for damages is to be tried in Pennsylvania. The Philadelphia Times reports that an attempt is to be made to hold a clergyman legally responsible for the results of a prayer that he is said to have offered in public. It appears that certain capitalists decided to erect a brewery at Stroudsburg, Pa. The project aroused considerable opposition from the temperance people of the town, but in spite of their protests the building went on. Conspicuous among the opponents of the undertaking was a clergyman, who denounced the project from the pulpit, condemned all concerned in it and prayed God to smite it with his vengeance. Shortly afterwards, during a terrific thunderstorm, lightning struck the brewery, partially wrecking it and injuring two men who were at work upon it at the time. The proprietors would probably have regarded the event as an accident, but public comment insisted on connecting it with the clergyman's prayer, thus bringing them obloquy as under the marked displeasure of the Almighty. They have therefore commenced suit against the clergyman for damages. Lawyers hold that if the lightning stroke was the result of his prayer, he can be held responsible for damages to the property and if it was merely a coincidence he can be held responsible for injury to the reputation of the proprietors. The dilemma seems ingenious, but it is little likely to weigh in a court of justice. The tendency there usually is to take the same view of the power of prayer as did the men of whom the patriarch wrote

What profit should we have if we pray to him? (Job 21: 15).

A Switchman's Heroism

Philadelphia journals report a remarkable exhibition of heroism on the part of a switchman employed in the Reading subway. A train was approaching the tower in which he was stationed, and he had to move a certain switch to prevent a disastrous derailment. The action of the lever revealed to him that something was out of order and, hurrying to the switch, he found that a pivot bolt had dropped out and disappeared. The train was moving rapidly, and to save it a substitute pivot was instantly and absolutely necessary. The switchman thrust his middle finger into the empty hole, signalled to a companion in the tower and the switch moved. Then he found himself fastened tight, so close to the track that a second's delay meant his death beneath the advancing train. He did not delay—he gave one hard pull and walked away, leaving his finger behind him. The improvised pivot served the intended purpose, and the train passed safely. It was a dreadful alternative—that of losing his finger or his life, but he had the courage to choose the wiser course. Unhappily people are not always so heroic when it is a question of giving up some beloved habit, or some enjoyable association that is exposing the soul to peril, although Christ warns them of the consequences of not making the sacrifice.

If thy right hand offend thee, cut it off and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell (Matt. 5: 30).

BRIEF NOTES

Dr. Talmage, on leaving England for the Continent on June 4th, expressed his hearty appreciation of the welcome that had been extended to him. Both in England and Scotland the greatest enthusiasm had been manifested. The largest churches had proved too small to accommodate the crowds that sought to hear him. Frequently improvised open-air meetings were held in the streets, when Dr. Talmage made an address from a carriage. Dr. Talmage intends spending a week in Paris, and afterwards visiting Norway and Russia.

An obelisk twenty feet high is to be erected in Africa to mark the site of the hut in which Livingstone died.

A missionary near Canton, China, says that of the twenty-five native pastors and evangelists working with him no less than twenty were converted in America.

Mr. August Belmont has undertaken to build at his own cost one of the chapels of the new Cathedral of St. John the Divine, now being erected in New York. The chapel will be a memorial of Mr. Belmont's wife and will cost $200,000.

A great Gospel effort to reach the non-church going part of the population of London is being made this summer. Mr. Leonard Weaver has succeeded in raising funds for the erection of eleven tents in the outskirts of the city, in which daily meetings will be held.

The Presbyterian General Assembly has uttered a vigorous condemnation of Christian Science and Faith-healing. At its session on May 26 in Chicago it passed unanimously a report of its committee declaring that "belief in divine healing arises from misinterpretation of the Scriptures in regard to Christ's redemption work, and it is repugnant to sanctified common sense. The rejection of means of recognized utility in the relief of sickness and injury is presumptuous and unscriptural.

The West Presbyterian Church, New York, is out of debt for the first time in seven years. Since the former board of trustees resigned last year a determined effort has been made to relieve the church of the burdens that had accumulated. Seven thousand dollars had been paid over and above running expenses, and there is now a balance in hand. Congratulatory meetings were held May 16 to rejoice over the unwonted prosperity.

HELEN KELLER...

....The Story of a Wonderful Life

THERE are few of our readers who have never heard of Helen Adams Keller. This remarkable child, now a young woman, was born with all her senses: sight and hearing were perfect, and there was no congenital defect in her powers of speech. When nineteeen months old a severe illness almost cost her her life, and when she recovered, the baby was totally blind and totally deaf. Until she was eight years of age, no effort was made to open for her the doors of her dark and silent prison-house; she was simply a helpless little bit of human driftwood, stranded on the shores of time. Then her parents took her from their home in Alabama, to Boston, and placed her in a school for blind and deaf children, where she came under the immediate care and guidance of a very lovely and very wise woman, Miss Annie M. Sullivan. This lady began Helen's education at the very beginning, patiently, indomitably and bravely facing every difficulty, teaching her by the one sense of touch, showing her that things had names, unlocking for her the stores of knowledge which had seemed forever beyond her grasp. One day Miss Sullivan took the little girl to the pump-house and let her feel the water flow over her hand, fresh from the pump. Then she spelled the name, water, into the little hand. "I shall never forget it," Helen has said, relating the incident. "That word, meaning water, startled my soul, and it awoke full of the spirit of the morning, full of joyous, exultant song. Until that day my mind had been like a darkened chamber, waiting for words to enter and light the lamp, which is thought."

Very early Miss Sullivan gave her pupil books. She gave her, of course, books printed in raised letters, and Helen would pass her finger over them, seemingly with delight when she found one she knew. The teacher talked to her incessantly on her sensitive hand; she made her acquainted with Nature, with trees, flowers, fields, gardens, with birds and with beasts. Bishop Phillips Brooks gave her the first lessons she had in religion, teaching her about God, and telling her of Jesus Christ our Redeemer. For several years Helen was not taught by a system of regular lessons, but was gradually instructed in language, in natural science, in reading, spelling and writing, acquiring the art of speech for herself by very slow steps, and it was an almost incredible accomplishment when she could not see the lips of the person addressing her, but had to depend solely upon touch.

Helen Keller has successfully acquired, since her regular school drill began, a good knowledge of English, and in Latin, Greek, German and French, as well as in algebra and geometry, has taken the full courses, and successfully passed the examinations required of a student entering Radcliffe College. Her difficulties were many, for she has had to learn everything through a scheme of notation, or the interpretation of a teacher; but she has splendid mental powers, a fine memory, a gift for analysis, and an unconquerable patience, united with an immense ambition. Withal, she is very gentle, docile and sweet-tempered; a happy, well-bred and charming young girl. Her physical health is perfect. She is very grateful for any help received, and assists her teachers by her willing obedience to their wishes. Any young girl with every faculty unimpaired might be proud to write such a letter as Helen does, to use a type-writer as beautifully, and to bear herself in society with Helen's ease and grace of manner. Parents and teachers seeing her progress, need never despair of teaching children who have only one avenue open to the brain: even though sight and hearing are gone. They may be taught as seeing and hearing children are.

The picture given is the last one taken of Helen and her teacher, Miss Sullivan. One's eyes dwell on it with a very tender interest. One is glad that the life of the blind girl is so rich and full of joy and opportunity, and one honors and reveres the faithful teacher to whom Helen Keller owes so much.

Commencement Days

With the roses and the lilies, come the bright commencement days. I can fancy nothing prettier, nothing more radiant, more charming, than the sight of a school, the girls in their white gowns and frocks, the boys in their best suits with their hair combed and their neckties in order, and on every young face a look of grave enjoyment and of eager anticipation. To these pupils who have studied diligently for a year, the commencement day means very much, yet it has even more significance for their toiling hard working teachers. The diplomas and certificates are pieces of paper, but they stand for a long and sustained effort on the part of both scholars and teachers, for duty done well, for another milestone on life's way. At a recent commencement I was impressed with the excellence of the work done by the young ladies who were graduated, especially as shown in their essays. They expressed themselves with clear precision of statement and with grace of diction; they had learned to write good lucid English, no slight accomplishment. Parents take pride in these occasions and with reason. And all who love the next generation and wish it well must feel an interest in the school commencement.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-all

—ELEANOR R. Do not try to earn a living by posing as an artist's model. The occupation is very poorly paid and by no means pleasant

—EDNA L. I am not familiar with the badge of which you speak. Carry your doubts and fears to the gracious Saviour, and he will remove them.

—SARAH A. As a rule, announcement cards do not require any acknowledgment. When the parties married are intimate friends, you may, of course, send congratulations.

—SUZETTE. Proof-reading requires a course of special training. A proof-reader must have a good all-round English education and be very intelligent and accurate. It is fairly remunerative; but I think you would better learn stenography and type-writing.

—A SUBSCRIBER. Nobody loves under compulsion. The man may have an irreproachable character and every virtue under the sun, but if you have to reason about it and make yourself love him, he is not the man for you, nor are you the woman for him. When true love awakes, there is no such uncertainty as you express.

—FRIEND Many congratulations on your approaching marriage. The ceremony need not bother you. The minister will indicate what you are to repeat after him, or answer, or do. A wedding-ring is a plain gold ring, never anything else. The bride's people attend to the wedding breakfast. Sandwiches, chicken salad, berries, ice cream, cake and coffee would make a very satisfactory menu. Blessings on the new home and may I hear from you again?

True Heroism

The patient toiler in some lowly place,
  Who works with cheerful heart and willing hands,

The Little Ones He Blessed

I WONDER if ever the children
  Who were blessed by the Master of old
Forgot he had made them his treasures,
  The dear little lambs of his fold.
I wonder if, angry and wilful,
  They wandered afar and astray,
The children whose feet had been guided
  So safe and so soon in the way.

One would think that the mothers at evening,
  Soft smoothing the silk-tangled hair,
And low leaning down to the murmur
  Of sweet, childish voices in prayer,
Oft bade the small pleaders to listen,
  If haply again they might hear
The words of the gentle Redeemer
  Borne swift to the reverent ear.

And my heart cannot cherish the fancy
  That ever those children went wrong,
And were lost from the peace and the shelter,
  Shut out from the feast and the song.
To the day of gray hairs they remembered,
  I think, how the hands that were riven
Were laid on their heads when Christ uttered,
  "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

He has said it to you, little darling,
  Who spell it in God's Word to-day;
You, too, may be sorry for sinning,
  You also believe and obey;
And 'twill grieve the dear Saviour in heaven
  If one little child shall go wrong—
Be lost from the fold and the shelter,
  Shut out from the feast and the song.

What Twenty Dollars Will Do

LOOKING across the world to In dia, do we realize that this awfu famine has made children or phans, not by the score, and by the hundred, but by tens of thou sands? The mission stations are crowded with these helpless waifs, poor, naked and hungry Children whose parents dropped dead from exhaustion by the side of the road children who have crawled out just alive and no more, from hovels where thei fathers and mothers have breathed thei last, children whom nobody owns, and fo whom nobody cares.

Never in the history of the world wa there another such opportunity afforded for the Christian education of a race, n the door now set open for the feeding clothing, teaching and saving of a whol generation of the young. These littl children of the Hindus are in our hand absolutely, and we are able as never be fore to teach them of the true God, an of the loving Saviour. As never befor too, the heart of India is beating in sym pathy with ours, and the scholars of In dia are acknowledging the uses of Chris tianity, are showing readiness to lear about Christ.

Twenty dollars will entirely support a orphan child in India for a year. It re quires that sum in round numbers to pa every expense of food, raiment and edu cation, and there must be many thought ful, loving men and women here in Amer ica, who want to expand, to devote tha amount in that way. A circle of King' Daughters might raise that sum, a Sun day School class, a Christian Endeavo Society, or a missionary union, migh pledge a single twenty dollars, or twent dollars several times over, that one or phan, or several orphans might be care for by the evangelical missionaries o India.

Think where you can deny yourselves dear friends. Take up this bit of a respon sibility and carry it along for Jesus' sake

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will receiv and forward every contribution sent fo the relief of the Hindu famine orphans.

Rainy Days

The soft beauty of a rainy day, whe the showers fall gently, dropping the baptismal dews on fields and hills, robin the gay streets in sober slate-color, an reviving every blade of grass and droop ing flower, is a thing to appreciate merel as a picture. It does not tire the eye with its brightness, it makes no deman in contrasting color effects, it is a stud in low tones. But to the eye of th thoughtful lover of nature, it is ver restful, serene and satisfying. An one gets so much done on a rainy da when there is little to interrupt, and woman may hope to sit steadily at he sewing, or to finish up her neglected co respondence. Blessings on the rainy da

The Plea of Our Tenement Waifs

THE summer promises to be one of extraordinary suffering among the poor of this great city—the most densely populated spot in America. Particularly will the children feel the hardships of the torrid season. Already, in the crowded, malodorous tenement districts, little ones are drooping; many seem ready to answer the grim call of the reaper, Death. Pastors and city missionaries are applying daily at this office for permission to send groups of twenty-five, thirty, or fifty children to our Fresh-Air Home on the Hudson. These are picked children—the very poorest little ones that can be found; many are veritable waifs and strays—little street wanderers from rum-cursed abodes. Many are children of honest, hard-working parents; here and there, of some worthy laborer, bereft of his wife and seeking to make during the hours of the day the wherewithal to keep the motherless babies he must leave to themselves, or in the care of some kind neighbor, or in the keeping of the oldest brother or sister, the "little father" or "little mother," whose bowed form and face of care show how unequal is its strength to the task of maturity. The mothers themselves—washer-women, seamstresses, scrub-women, and other followers at other hard lines of toil—present themselves in their pitiful best, asking with wistful smile:

TYPICAL APPLICANTS

"Can me children go to de country dis summer, please?"

The other night three ladies from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office went down Sullivan street to the Abigail Home, which yearly sends a large number of children to Mont-Lawn. The narrow thoroughfare was so crowded with little ragged tatterdermallions that it was difficult to walk. Hundreds of mothers sat on the curb with pale babies in their arms. Now and then a cry would go up in childish treble!

"See de teachers from de country! Oh!"

And the ladies would be the centre of an almost impassible throng, whose little upturned faces grew radiant as their plea "Can we go to Nyack, please, teacher?" met encouraging response. In the Abigail Home—it was a hot, stifling night, remember—the two big rooms were filled with an audience of little folks listening eagerly to Mr. Devere. Poor tiny men and women! they are hungry and thirsty for love and kindness, for the Word of God, for instruction. We fear their elders would not have sat so still in that crowded room on that hot night to be told of their duty and to hear God's promises to the faithful. The sermon over, the "teachers from Mont-Lawn" were greeted with unbounded delight.

TENEMENT WAIFS

"We can fill the churches of America if we do our duty by the children of the slums," said one missionary. "The children grow up into the church. Besides, they bring their parents in. The father of one of your Mont-Lawn children stood up in a mission and told this story.

My little boy brought me to Christ. My father and mother were pious; I was brought up in a good home. But after I came to the city I went astray. I gave my poor wife trouble untold. I lost my position through drink, and got down very low. Our children died, until we had but one left, a little fellow very dear to us. One day, I was so wretched I felt I could kill myself; our poor room was bare of comforts; there was no food in the larder; my poor wife asked for money; I had none. The little boy was hungry. I hung my head in hopeless despair. "I can't get any work," I said to my wife. "I haven't got a friend to help me." The little boy came and put his arms around my neck. "Papa," he said, "why don't you tell Jesus? Jesus is your friend, papa." I couldn't help it—the tears came. Not because I felt that Jesus was my friend, but because my hungry baby was trying to comfort me. He kept patting my cheek, and he sang as bravely as he could:

Have we trials and temptations,
Is there trouble everywhere;
We should never be discouraged,
Take it to the Lord in prayer.

He didn't sing the hymn correctly, nor pronounce the words clear, he was so little. When he got through, he said: "Papa, I know it's so. The teachers at Mont-Lawn sang it an' they tell us it's so; an' it's so what they say. Tell Jesus." Well, I did what the child asked—not that I had any faith at first, but I just thought, "He's hungry; he's got a right to tell me what to do, and I'll do what he says." That was the starting point, friends. I am back now with my old employers, who knew me before I fell. The firm is one of the best-known in this city or the country at large. I have been with them twelve months. I took my little boy by the hand and went to them and asked them to give me another trial. They did; I began with a very humble job, and they have gradually advanced me as they felt I could be trusted. As for me, I'm not trusting myself; I'm trusting Jesus. I want to say, God bless the good Christian people who bring the little children to Jesus. The little children will bring us older ones to Christ. A father who won't hear a bishop will listen to his baby.

Contributions for our Fresh-Air Home will be promptly acknowledged in these columns. $3 will give one child an outing for ten days, covering cost of food, shelter, clothing, medical and caretakers' attention, and transportation back and forth; $6 will send two children; $9 three; $12 four; $15 five; $36 will make twelve little waifs happy for ten days, and influence many lives for good. Anxious about Aronette and Lucia

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

My Dear Friend: — I have been on your "tower," and enjoyed it very much. I think you have left Lucia Wessell and Aronette behind long enough; I hope they will overtake us at Paris, or at least before we get home.

When Dickens commenced on "Oliver Twist" he intended to take him through all the dens of vice and land him in prison at the end. At the suggestion of Couch Shark, he changed the plot and carried him through safely. But Dickens had not the genius to bring little Paul through to manhood; he had to kill him. I know you can bring the two girls out all right and have them with us in the Paris Exposition, or at any rate before we get back to Jonesville. P. V. V.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TRAVELERS VISIT THE SCENES OF SACRED MEMORIES.....

From our Correspondent . . . REV. C. S. MASON

AFTER our side trip to Ramallah, with which my last letter closed, we lunched at the site of Bethel, or Luz, or Haran. All about is desolation. Throughout Palestine there are only about forty-six persons to the square mile, and these are huddled together in villages; in the time of our Lord there were five hundred persons to the square mile. Pushing onward over steep, rocky roads, seemingly impassable, we reached camp at Sinjil. Here, a sweet gospel service was led by Rev. Dr. Young; subject, "Jacob's loneliness; no sympathetic heart, nor ear, nor friendly hand: alone; but God was there and his friendly voice spoke to him who had been unfaithful to his vow: 'Arise, go up to Bethel.'"

OUR LITTLE BEDOUIN BOY

On Tuesday, March 27, we drank of the refreshing water from Jacob's well, in the land of Ephraim, in sight of Mt. Gerizim and Ebal, near to Joseph's tomb. At night we encamped at Samaria, near the site of Herod's ivory palace, and near the fanatical city of Nablous, with its twenty thousand Mohammedans. Nablous is the ancient Sychar. On Tuesday the pilgrims reached Dothan, where they lunched about noon time; and pressing on over the plain of Esdraelon, camped near Jenin in sight of Nazareth.

At Jerusalem, Ramallah, and Nazareth, we had the ocular demonstration that foreign missionary work is blessed of God. "Miss Dickson's school" feeds, clothes and teaches seventy orphans. There are 200 scholars in the day-school and God has blessed the labors of the teachers.

On Saturday, March 31, we passed Gath-hepher, Jonah's birth-place, visited Cana of Galilee, and the Mount of Beatitudes, where, with holy awe we viewed "the hallowed lake in the land of promise," the lake that Jesus loved; around which cluster the events of his life, as he proclaimed the Gospel of his kingdom; stilling the storm, casting out devils; healing the sick; calling his apostles, and teaching by parables.

Here our hearts burned within us, as we contemplated his human-divine character, and on Sabbath day a most helpful service was led by Rev. T. L. Smith of Chicago, who gave a brief talk upon the words of Peter, "Lord save me." The service was continued under Dr. Chapman at twilight, on the beach.

At 6.30 A.M., Monday, April 2, seven boat loads of happy pilgrims, who were carried from the shore to boats, in the arms of strong boatmen, might be seen making their way over the somewhat turbulent Sea of Galilee toward Capernaum, where they met their saddle-horses and continued the journey over rocky ways, desolate hills, through the cultured fields of the Rothschild's Colony to camp at Lake Merom. Pursuing the pilgrimage, the party reached the site of ancient Dan, lunched under beautiful trees near the source of the Jordan, and camped for the night at Cæsarea Philippi, where Jesus was first acknowledged "the Son of God." Bright and beautiful the day dawned, and the merry campers rode up the slopes of Hermon, five thousand feet high, and continued the day's ride, over steep cliffs and ridges, down into the valley past one of the villages of the Druses, where they saw an ox laid on his back and tied down while being shod. The camp was located near a place called Wind—and it blew a hurricane, leveling two of our tents, but no one was hurt.

Up to date the accidents have been few. The most serious was the fall of Rev. Dr. Shaw from a little donkey, which resulted in an injured shoulder, but did not prevent the genial, plucky doctor from continuing his journey. At Gideon's Fountain, an Arabian or Turkish steed, realizing his need of a bath, took himself and rider (a lady from New Jersey) into the waters and lay down. On the road, another of the cavalry horses plunged into a stream and tried the same trick, but the little rider, J. Wilbur Chapman, Jr., "our Bedouin boy," was too quick for him, for, leaping over his head he landed on dry ground. In one of the olive groves, a New Hampshire lady was gracefully brushed off her saddle; unlike Absalom, she reached terra firma safely. Another lady, from Michigan, took a sudden leap over the head of her charger to the ground unhurt, and another lady simply slid off. On Thursday we started early, traveling the road over which Paul went to Damascus, where we arrived at 2:30 P.M. No mishaps occurred to any person.

The Lesson of Moody's Life

THE CAREER OF THE GREAT EVANGELIST AS RELATED BY HIS SON

"THE Life of D. L. Moody," by his son, William R. Moody, is illustrated with more than one hundred reproductions from original photographs, many of which, being the exclusive property of the family, were reserved solely for this volume. This book is the outcome of a trust imposed by a father upon his son, and was prepared under pressure as regards time, in order that it might be presented to the public simultaneously with other and unauthorized biographies of the evangelist.

Mr. Moody was opposed to the publication of any story of his life while he was still upon the earth. He laid upon his son, W. R. Moody, the task of preparing such a work upon the father's decease. To this work the son has given his heart and a deal of good judgment, tact and editorial ability. Had he taken more time to fulfil his pleasurable task he might have produced a work of different literary character, but scarcely one with greater possibilities of usefulness. There is a simplicity about the volume that is its chief charm. The reader's interest is aroused from the start. He does not tarry to think about style, being wholly absorbed in the tersely recorded biographical facts and the racily narrated incidents of the life and career of the evangelist. It is impossible not to be interested in the brief pages that tell of Mr. Moody's boyhood and of his early efforts to find employment in Boston, of his uncle's somewhat stern words of counsel, of his practical joke upon the cobbler—a trick certainly not to be commended—of his faithfully kept promise to attend church and Sunday School, of his search for St. John's Gospel in the Old Testament; he who before he died knew the Bible and its contents perhaps more thoroughly than any other living man. One reads with irresistible sympathy the story of his conversion and the delay in admitting him to church membership, of his sudden removal to Chicago, of his novel way of working for Christ and souls there. The interest is fully sustained as there pass in review his business life in Chicago, incidents of his city mission work and of his labors in the Christian commission, his Y. M. C. A. work and later his evangelistic labors and the conception and establishment of his useful institutions in Chicago and at Northfield. Everywhere and always faithful, earnest, aggressive, thorough, irresistible and successful he was a man of a million. The book closes with the story of his triumphant departure from earth, the account of his funeral and some loving tributes from friends over the water.

The character of Mr. Moody is brought out in these sparkling pages with notable clearness and felicity by the recital of scores upon scores of incidents that are told without the slightest straining after effect. There is a most happy absence of any attempt to glorify Mr. Moody. The author has been kept from conscious or unconscious glorification of the human instrument whom God honored so abundantly. The Christian reader is impressed with the remarkable influence exercised by one man's life and labor when the man is absolutely consecrated to God and endued with the Holy Spirit. The heart is roused again and again with gratitude to God for having blessed the church at large with such a life, the memory of which is its lasting heritage.

The illustrations are well chosen and thoroughly appropriate. We welcome most heartily the varied pictures of Mr. Moody. The mechanical execution of the book is worthy of commendation. We wish there were an index and we find ourselves tempted to ask who was the man, mentioned on page 134, whose words made such an impression on Mr. Moody and produced such an effect upon his life—"The world has yet to see what God will do with and for and through and in and by the man who is fully and wholly consecrated to him." We wish that every Christian worker, ministerial or lay, and indeed every Christian, might read the book. Under God's blessing it might in many instances rouse to life as promptly as once did contact with a dead prophet's bones, as recorded in the history of God's ancient people. We would feel sorry for the soul that could read such a record and not be deeply moved by it. Pp. 590; price, $2.50. Publishers, Fleming H. Revell Co., New York.

One or two characteristic anecdotes from the volume are here appended:

In June of the World's Fair year, Forepaugh's circus came to Chicago and Mr. Moody hired the tent for Sunday morning services. The scene on the first Sunday morning is thus described:

"The surroundings were the usual circus furniture—ropes, trapezes, gaudy decorations, etc., while in an adjoining canvas building was a large menagerie, including eleven elephants. Clowns, grooms, circus-riders, men, women and children, eighteen thousand of them, and on a Sunday morning, too! Whether the Gospel was ever before preached under such circumstances I know not, but it was wonderful to ear and eye alike."

When that mighty throng took up the hymn, "Nearer, my God, to Thee," a visible sense of awe fell upon the multitude. After an hour of singing and prayer Mr. Moody rose to preach, his text being, "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." The Spirit of God was present. The hush of heaven was over the meeting. Towards the close of the address there was a slight disturbance, and a "lost child" was passed up to the platform. Mr. Moody held her up so that her parents might see her; and when her anxious father reached the platform Mr. Moody placed the child in his arms, and said:

"That is what Jesus Christ came to do: to seek and to save lost sinners, and restore them to their heavenly Father's embrace."

"During the Columbian campaign in Chicago, Mr. Moody used to preach in the Haymarket Theatre on the West Side. One night the crowd came early, and he closed the meeting before the cab came to take him to his rooms in the Bible Institute. Starting down Madison street on foot, knowing he would meet the cab, he had not gone far when he was accosted by a rough-looking fellow, who asked for money. Mr. Moody told him that he did not have a cent with him. The stranger seemed rather cross, began to complain about the way he was treated, and said he was starving and must have some money. Mr. Moody did not care to proceed any farther for fear he might follow and give him trouble, so he entered into conversation with him, and presently the cab drove up.

"'Lend me a dollar,' said Moody to the driver.

"'Certainly, Mr. Moody,' was the reply.

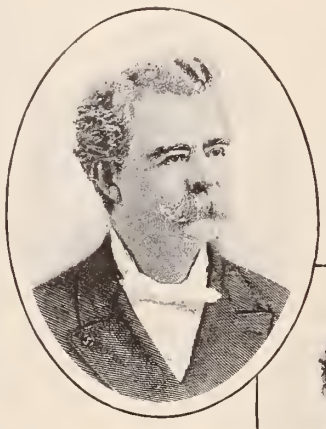
"At this remark the tramp said, 'Is this Moody, the evangelist?'

"Mr. Moody said it was, and that he had just been preaching at the Haymarket, at the same time handing him a dollar that the driver had put into his hands. But the poor fellow drew back, saying:

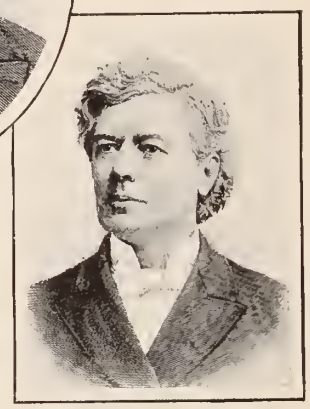
"'No, no; my father is a poor Methodist preacher, and I will starve before I will take a penny from you, Mr. Moody.'"

The New M. E. Bishops

THE General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church elected two bishops and two missionary bishops at its sessions in Chicago. Seventeen ballots were taken before the former were chosen. On the seventeenth ballot Rev. D. H. Moore received 534 votes; 444, or two-thirds of all the votes cast, being necessary to a choice. Dr. Moore is sixty-two years of age and is a native of Ohio. Shortly after graduating and while holding a ministerial appointment at Marietta, O., he entered the Union Army as a private, but speedily rose in rank and at the close of the war had become a lieutenant-colonel. He specially distinguished himself in following Sherman on the march to the sea. After the war he resumed his pastoral duties until he was appointed President of Wesleyan College for Women at Cincinnati. He subsequently served as President of Colorado Seminary and Chancellor of the University of Denver. In 1884 he was elected Editor of the Western Christian Advocate. Dr. John W. Hamilton, who was elected on the same ballot by a vote of 510, is fifty-five years old and is a native of Virginia. His pastoral work has been done chiefly in Massachusetts. He was for several years pastor of the People's Church in Boston. Since 1892 he has served as Corresponding Secretary of the Freedman's Aid & Southern Education Society.



BISHOP D. H. MOORE



BISHOP J. W. HAMILTON

The Missionary Bishops elected were Rev. Edwin W. Parker, who has labored in India and was one of the missionaries who received aid in the Famine of 1897 from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund, and Rev. Frank W. Warne, who has also served as a missionary in India.

How Much You Eat

Is not the question, but, how much you digest, because food does good only when it is digested and assimilated, taken up by the blood and made into muscle, nerve, bone and tissue. Hood's Sarsaparilla restores to the stomach its powers of digestion. Then appetite is natural and healthy. Then dyspepsia is gone, and strength, elasticity and endurance return.
